did also let blood in the atmes, head, and forehead with a flintstone. At their time of sowing, the King having appointed to every man his portion of ground that was to be sowne, they digged vp the earth with Goats hornes, and with certaine words threw their seed into the ground. All other works appertained vnto, and were performed by their women. The King did make his habitation in naturall caues or hollow rocks, of which there are infinite store remaining to this day. When there was any Feast made in any Kingdome, their Feasts had the priuiledge that men might with immunity passe to and fro through the enemies Countrey: yea, & many times the enemies would feast one with another. In their Marriages the men vnto to aske the content of the Widdowes or Maids parents (if there were any) which being granted they were married with little or no ceremony that I could learne. And the marriage was not so soone made, but it might be as quickly broken: for if the husband or wife were disposed to be separated they might be so, and both of them marry again with others at their pleasures. Notwithstanding all the children of the separated begotten afterwards were esteemed as bastards, the King only for successions sake exempted from this custome, & to whom for that respect it was lawfull to marry with his own sister. For many yeeres this land was subiect to one only King whom they called Adexa, who being growne old, his Sons (which were nine in number) conspiring against him, parted the land into nine seuerall Kingdomes. All their war was to steale cattle one from another, and especially the spotted Goats, which amongst them are in great and religious estimation; there is very little difference betwixt the body, colour, and smoothness of our English fallow Deere and their Goat. The ancient Guanches of this land had an appointed Officer or Embalmer answerable to the sex (man or woman) who washing the dead corps did put into its body certaine Confections made of Goats Butter melted, the powder of Furzes, and of a kind of russe stones, the rindes of Pinetrees and other herbes, and did fluffe the body with this every day for 15. dayes together, putting the body against the Sun, now on the one side, now on the other, vntill it were stiffe and dry. All this space their friends bewailed their death. At the end of 15. dayes they wrapped their body in Goats skins so cunningly sowed together that it was marvellous, and so they carried the body to a deepe caue where none might haue access. There are of these bodies remaining yet which haue been buried these 2000. yeeres. The nearest port towne to the City called Ciudad de Laguna, is Santa Cruz, from thence you ascend vp the steepe Mountaynes to the City, which you shall finde to be most miraculously seated in the midst of a flat of ten miles in compass, as if nature had prepared that place for man to build a City vpon, & being walled about with hils of wonderful height on all sides sauing to the North-west (from whence there lieth a true tract of land even to the Seaside which is seuen leagues distant) there doth continually arise from the Sea a vapour, which being circulated among so many and intricate Mountaines groweth to be a wind, and taketh his passage through those channels of Mountaynes to the City, to its great refreshing, and in this great Plaine (like Emu) for want of opposition dieth. And let the wind blow full South-east at Sea, yet shall you alwayes haue the wind full North-west at the City like a true friend when you must need him from twelve a clocke in the day vntill night. The extreme dew which falleth doth sufficiently coole the night. Their buildings are all of an open rough stone nothing faire: they are very plaine in their buildings, two or three stories high and no more, and commonly but one story high in the remoter parts of the City. It is not walled, they haue no chimneys, no not so much as in their kitchens. They make only a flat hearth against a wall, and there they toast their meate rather, then roast it. The decency of their liues is commendable, for when you are in the centre of the City, your eye reacheth almost to the extreamest parts thereof. They haue no want of water, The City hath its name from a great standing Lake at the West end of it, vpon which there are commonly diuers sorts of fresh water-fowles. The haggard Falcons doe every euening flye vpon this Lake, and the Negros with slings beate them, which is the noblest sport of that kind in the world. For the swoopings are many, and at one time, and the Hawkes the strongest and best mettalled of all other of a greater kind then the Barbary Falcons. The Viceroy being one euening to see this naturall sport, and he demanding of me what I thought thereof, and I iustly commending the strength and mettall of the Hawkes, assured me vpon his honour, that a Falcon bred in that land (which hee had formerly sent to the Duke of Lorne) did at one sight (except he rested vpon ships by the way) passe from Andaluzia to Tanariff (which is 250. Spanish leagues) and was there taken vp half dead with the Dukes Varules on. And the time from her going out to her being taken vp, exceeded not sixteen houres, &c.

Of Malta and the Navigations about Africa.

Malchin the Straits are no great lands belonging to Africa, Pennon, or the Rock against Valer de Gumeras, the Ile of Gerbis, & some others. Malta is the most famous, where in old time was the Temple of Juno, spoiled by Verres, supposed to be that Melita, ^a where Paul suffered a shipwreck: although there be another Melita in the Adriaticke Sea, neere to Dalmatia: Polybus ^b calleth it Melyssa, as Platerramus ^c writeth, Protonius and Sicera name Melita, now called Malta, in this Ile of Malta. This Malta is distant from Sicilia 60. miles, from Africa, 190. It hath bin sometime subiect to the Carthaginians, as may appeare by diuers Monuments with Inscriptions of Carthaginian Letters: and the Islanders (at our Authour's say truely) can vnderstand that Scene in Plautus before mentioned, Elos, Effetcha, Cumi, words vsed in Scripture, are likewise vsed in the Maltese. Their manner of life is Sicilian. But we may not dwell here. Some ^d ascribe Paul's shipwreck to Melita in the Adriaticke, neere to Dalmatia, whom Beza ^e learnedly confuteth: and proueth it to be that Malta, which now the Knights hold against the Turke: whose valour and successe, in resisting that mighty Turkish Adversary, Churio, and Is. Antonius Viperanus in their Bookes of that Argument, Kneller in his Turkish History, R. Curcio, and others relate at large. It was An. 1565. That which deceueth those Men in Malta, is the name of the Adriaticke Sea, which now is given to the gulfes of Venice, but then, as Beza & Aretius shew out of Strabo 12. was given to the Ionian Sea also, and further South wards, where Mal. a standeth and Ortichu out of Quind, and others, proueth the same, as doth also that Epitome of all Learning I. Scaliger. That learned Gentleman M. Sanders in the fourth Book of his Iournall hath largely related of this land. It co.tayneth attor his description sixty miles in circuit: a Countrey altogether champaigne, being no other then a Rock couered ouer with earth; but two foot where deeply; hauing few trees but such as beare hurt, whereof all sorts plentifully: so that their wood they haue from Sicilia. Yet there is a great shifte which together with Cow-dung serues the Countrey people for fewell, the life needfull by the in moderate heate, there exceeding far any other seated in the same parallel, yet sometimes tempered by the winds to which it lies open. Rivers here are none, but sundry Fountayns: The soyle produceth no graine but Barley: bread made of it and Oliues is the Villagers ordinary dyet, and with the straw they sustaine their Cattle, Communeed, Annis-seed, and Hony, they haue here in abundance, and an indifferent quantity of the best Cotton Wooll. The Inhabitants dye more by Age then Diseases, and heretofore were reputed fortunate for their excellency in Aris & curious weaving. This land was given by Charles the Fifth to the Knights Hospitallers after their losse of Rhodes; whose first seat was the Hospitall of S. Iohn in Ierusalem, built by one Gerard, at such time as the Holy Land became famous by the successeful expeditions of the Christians, whose rites are recorded by many Authours, but by vs to be referred for another sake. There are sixty Villages in the land vnder the command of ten Capitaines, and foure Cities. Old Malta supposed the worke of the Phoenicians) is seated on a Hill in the mids of the land, kept with a Garrison though of small importance. In it is a Grot of great veneration, because they suppose that Paul lay there after his shipwreck. The other three Cities (if they may so be termed) are about eight miles distant, and not much without a Musket shot each of other, neere the East end and on the North side of the land; where there is a double Haven, diuided by a tongue of a Rock. On the top of this tongue stands the Castle of S. Hermes, after 20000. shot and the losse of 30000. duers taken by the Turks. But so could they not that of S. Angelo, which only de Burgo escaped their fury in that their siege. After their departure, when the Knights had thought to haue abandoned the land, by the helps of the Pope, Florentine, and especially the Spaniards, they were furnished with provisions for new fortifications; and added a new strong Cit. y. called Valletta, in honour of him that then was their Great Master, Iohn de Valletta. The Great Masters Palace is a princely structure, the market place spacious; the Church of S. Paul magnificent, as that also of S. Iohn; the houses vni forme of five stories, two stories flat roofed. S. Iohn's Hospitall giues entertainment to all that fall sick, the attendants many; the beds ouerspread with faire Canopies, euery fortnight hauing change of linnen, serued by the Iuniour Knights in siluer, and euery Friday by the Great Master accompanied with the great Croesse, a seruice whereto they are obliged as their name of Hospitall Knights also importeth. It is victualled for three yeeres, supplied from Sicilia. The land hath nor of liuing foules above 20000. Their expeditions are vially but for booties. The people almost as tawny as Moores: the heat makes them sleep at noone These Yoraries haue store of Curtizans for the most part Greeks, which sit playing in their doores on Instruments, by their eyes bewitching visible fouler, their vow rather prohibiting (if the practice interpret) Marriage then incontinencie. Their markets are on Sundayes. The Knights come hither exceeding yong, the sooner to attain taine Commendams at home, which goe by Senioritie. There are resident about five hundred, and as many abroad to repaire vpon summons. Sixteene of them are Counsellors of State, called Great Crosses. There are seuen Albergs or Seminaries, one of which was of England, till in the generall Deluge vnder Henrie the eight, Saint Iohn without Smithfield, sometime the Manzion of the Grand Prior of England, was hooked into that crooked streame, though still that Title continue, an Irish man now enjoying it. Euerie Nation feed by themselves in their severall Alberges, and sit at table like Friars. But how doe I pre-occupate my Christian Relations, and fall into a Lethargie, hauing opportunitie of such an Hospitall and such Hospitallars?

- 10 Now a word of the ancient Navigations about Africa. Hanno his voyage, set forth by the Carthaginians, seemed fabulous, but Ramusius sheweth every place by him mentioned, to agree with the later Discoveries of the Portugals, and thinketh (guided by a Portugall Pilot, skillfull of those Seas, which skanned this Navigation of Hanno) that hee went as farre as Saint Thome. Long before this, Homer reporteth of Menclaus compassing the Ethiopians from Egypt, which some interpret of sayling by the Cape of Good Hope, as the Portugals. Of this minde Sirabo citeth Aristonichus. Of Salomon and Iehoshaphat is said before. Herodotus affirmeth the Phenicians sayling in the Red Sea in Cambyses time: but this was vncertaine and yearly, as Plinie sheweth lib. 6. cap. 23. The same Plinie alledgedeth out of Cornelius Nepos, the sayling of Endoxus out of the Red Sea, round about Africa to Cales, which Sirabo relateth otherwise and refuteth.

- 20 The like may be shewed in some other instances, of which reade Master Hakluyt his Epistle Dedicatorie, Tom. 1. Ramusius part. 1. pag. 111. and Galuanus in his Discoveries of the World. Which I mention, not to disparage or weaken the Portugals praises, but to grieve Antiquitie their due; which, I thinke, * could not ordinarily (if at all) compass so long a Navigation for want of the Compass: yet we should iniurie our Authors, if wee should not believe somewhat: although not so much as they report. And this agreeth with the Greeke prouerbe of Hanno's Discoveries, and Subas Historie: that hee which findeth sweetnesse in the one, may swallow the other, and as well entertayne Banius as Meuius: the Periplus of the one, and I Libyke Histories of the other not obtaining full credit, nor wholly meet to be reiected.

- And thus much of this African part of the World, the Regions and Religions thereof: the one most subiect to the burning beames of the heavenly Sunne, the other least enlightning by the comfortable warmth of the Sunne of Righteousnesse; blacke in body, but more daikned and deformed spiritually, as hauing onely some parts of Habassia entirely possessed with Christians, besides what in Congo hath of later yeeres beene effected by the Portugals, and that little which is subiect to them and Spaine: all the rest being Pagan, or Mahumetan. And would God this were the case of Africa alone; seeing that if we diuide the knowne Regions of the world into thirtie equall parts (it is Master Brerewoods b Computation.) The Christians part (vnderstand it in all Sects and Professions bearing that name) is as much, the

- 40 Mahumetans as sixe, and the Idolaters as nineteene; besides that huge heathenous Trieth of the vnknowne Somb Continent, which by probable reasons is by him coniectured to bee no lesse then Europe, Africa, and Asia, together. So farre is it from truth, which one * of our Country-men hath lustily bragged on behalfe of his Romish Mother, That the Catholike Roman Religion bath had, and bath yet a farre greater sway in the world, then any other Religion euer had or hath: whereas this our Africa hath more Mahumetans ^d in two or three Cities, then Romish Catholikes perhaps in her whole compass. And for Asia, how pitifully doth he tumble together some names of a few Townes or little Ilands (it seemeth vnknowne to himselfe) as monuments of Romish Conquests? What their American Conuersions ^e are, is he touched elswhere. Yea, euen in our Europe, where this mystical Babylon is situate (the mo-

- 30 ther of the whoredomes and abominations of the Earth) the number of Protestants ^f is not much inferiour vnto them. But his reasons haue beene already proued vnreasonable, to the him, whose Pen then, and Prelacie since, wee with all dutie acknowledge a pillar to the Truth, and Ornament to our Church and State. For my part, I am forrie his assertion is no truer, as one seeing, ῥαῖμα ῥαῖμα, betweene Catholike and Roman, a great gulfe, a bottomlesse (without many prolixities) payable; but betweene Heathen and Heauen, a bottomlesse depth, the way impassable, and life impossible. Let vs pray to him which is the Way, the Truth, the Life, to make and be the Way, by reuelation of his Truth, vnto euertlasting Life, to these poore Africans, that as they are almost wholly (in all professions, Christian Iewish, Morish, Ethnike) circumscribed in the flesh, so they may receive that Circumcision of the Spirit, not made with bands, which may cut away this superstitious of superstitions (wherein they seeme more deuout then any part of the World) and make them with meeknesse to receive that Word, which being grafted in them, is able to save their soules. Amen, Lord Iesus.

Of the New World, and why it is named AMERICA: and the West Indies: with certaine generall discourses of the Heavens, Ayre, Water, and Earth, on those parts.

§. I.

Of the names given to this part of the World, and divers opinions of the Ancients concerning the Torrid Zone.

Now are wee shipped for the New World, and the New Discoveries. But seeing this Inkie Sea, through which I voder-take a Pilots office to conduct my Readers, is more peaceable then That; which on the back-side of this American World, was called the Peaceable, by Magellans the first Discoverer; it yeldeth vs the fitter opportunitee to contemplation and discourse, in such Philosphicall subiects, as the best Authors have thought worthy the first place in their Histories of these parts. Yet, before we prie into Natures mysteries, the better to know our intended voyage, let vs enquire somewhat of the Names; if any notion may thence arise, of the places thereby knowne.

The New World, is the fittest name which can be given to this vast and huge Tract; iustly called New, for the late Discoverie by Columbus. An. Dom. 1492, and World, for the huge intention thereof; (as Matter Hakluyt hath observed.) A new World it may bee also called; for that World of new and unknowne Creatures, which the old World never heard of, and here only are produced: the conceits whereof moved Mercator to thinke (which I dare not thinke with him) that the great Deluge in the dayes of Noah, drowned not these parts, because men had not here inhabited, who with a deluge of sinne, might procure that deluge of waters.

AMERICA is a more common then ſitting name, ſeeing Americus Vespucius the Florentine, from whom this name is deſcend, was not the firſt Finder, nor Author of that Diſcouerie: Columbus will challenge that, and more juſtly, with whom, and vnder whom Americus made his firſt voyage, howſoeuer after that, hee coaſted a great part of the Continent which Columbus had not ſeene, at the charges of the Caſtilian and Portugall Kings. But ſo it might more rightly be termed Cabota, or Sebaſtiana, or Sebaſtian Cabot a Venetian, which diſcovered more of the Continent then they both, about the ſame time; firſt employed by King Henrie the ſeventh of England, and after by the Catholike King.

Columbus yet, as the firſt Diſcoverer, deſerueth the name, both of the Countrey, for the firſt finding, and of modeſtie, for not naming it by himſelfe, ſeeking rather effects, then names of his exploits. But leave we theſe Italian Triumviri, the Genovis, Venetian, and Florentine, to decide this queſtion among themſelves. And why now is it called the West Indies? To this Aeſop's expolition of the word Indies, ſhew, thereby wee meane all thoſe rich Countreys, which are ſituate off, and ſtrange, is too generall anſwere, and giueth not the true cauſe of the name. Gemara ſaith, that a certaine Pilot, of whom Columbus receiued his firſt inſtructions, tooke it to bee India, or elſe Columbus himſelfe, thinking by the Weſt to finde a neerer paſſage vnto the Eaſt, by reaſon of the Earths roundneſſe, ſought for Cipango, or Iapan, and Cathay, when he firſt diſcovered the Ilands of the New World. And this opinion is probable, & both becauſe hee named Hiſpaniola, Ophir, whence Salomon fetched his gold; and Sebaſtian Cabot in the firſt voyage, which he made at the charges of King Flethrie the ſeventh, intended (as himſelfe confeſſeth) to finde no other Land but Cathay, and from thence to turne towards India; and the opinions of Ariſtotele and Seneca; that India was not farre from Spaine, confirmed them therein.

Now that we may deſcend from the Name, to the Nature of this New World: a World it is to ſee how Nature doth deſteſt and ſwarre from ſuch grounds and principles, which the Naturaliſts and Philoſophers, her forwardelt Schollers, haue ſet downe for Rules and Axiomes of Natures working. For, if we regard the ancient Poets, Philoſophers, and Fathers, we ſhall ſee them deſeined, and that not in few opinions, which they ſeemed to haue learned in Natures Sanctuaries and inmoſt Cloſets. In the Heauens, they ſuppoſed a burning Zone; in the Earth, a Plage, plagued with ſcorching heates.

*Vig, dux dextra Caelum, totidemq, ſiniſtra

Sic — A — — — — — Totidemq, plaga tollere promittitur
Quarum qua media eſt non eſt habitabilis aſtu

And a greater then Onid:

Quinq, reuens Caelum Zona; quarum una cornuſe, Semper ſole rubens &c.

The ſenſe whereof is, that thoſe parts of the World next the Arctike or Antarctike Poles are not habitable, by reaſon of extreme cold; nor the middle part, by reaſon of vnreaſonable heate: the two other parts temperate, and habitable.

The Philoſophers accounted this no Poeme, or rather were more Poetical themſelves; For that which thoſe accounted a Torrid and ſcorched earth, theſe made to bee a ſpacious and vnpaſſable Ocean, where the Starres, with their continual motion, and the Sunnes thirſtie Steedes, wearied with their daily journey, might finde moſſure to reſreſh and nouriſh their ſerrie conſtitutions. And therefore they diuided the Earth into two habitable Ilands, compaſſed about, and ſeuered in the midſt with a huge Ocean: On this ſide whereof wee are ſituated, and beyond, the Antipodes. Some Philoſophers include held otherwiſe, but with greater errors, as Leucippus, Democritus, Epicurus, Anaximander, which multiplied Worlds according to their fancie. Rowe and vncertaine were the coniectures of the beſt. Yea thoſe whom wee reuerence, as better then the beſt Philoſophers, had no leſſe error in this point. The Golden-munited Doctor had a Leiden conceit, that the Heauens were not round, whom Theodoret is ſaid to follow. Thiophilus allegeth Baſil for this his aſſertion, Nec mobile eſt caelum, nec circulare. That heauen is neither moueable nor round. How firmly, and confidently doth Euerſtius Le Baſtini both denie and deride the opinion, that there are Antipodes: But eaſier it was for him with a Rhetoricall flouriſh (wherein, I thinke, of all latine Fathers, he deſerueth higheſt prize and praife)

to dash this opinion out of countenance, then to confute the Arguments and Allegations, which he there citeth in the Aduerfaries name. But hee that surpris'd Laſtians no leſſe in knowledge of truth, then he was furpaſſed by him in ſmoothneſſe of Style, herein holdeth equi- page, and draweth in the ſame yoke of error. I meane him, whole venerable name no words are worthy and ſufficient to Viſit, Saint Auguſtine who, though ſomewhere he be affirmeth the Antipodes, yet eſſewhere be preſſed with an Argument, how men ſhould paſſe from theſe parts in which Adam and Noah lived, to the Antipodes, through the vnumeſurable Ocean, he thought it eaſieſt to deny, that, which certain experience at that time could not ſo eaſily proue: although euen then ſome reports (but obſcure and vncertaine) had been ſpread abroad of ſailing about Africa, as a little before is ſhewed, which muſt enforce that which Auguſtine denied.

More hot and forcible were the Arguments of our more zealous then learned Countryman, Boniſace, Archbiſhop of Mentz, and of Pope Zacharie, who purſued this opinion of the Antipodes, ſo eagerly againſt Virgil Biſhop of the Iuanenſes in Boiaria, about the yeere 743. That vpon Boniſace his complaint, the Pope writeth to him to caſt out this Virgil the Philoſopher (ſo doth that ſavage call him) out of the Temple and Church of God, and to deprive him for this peruerſe Doctrin (that there were Antipodes) of his Biſhopricke: and Virgil muſt packe to Rome to giue account of this Philoſophy to the Pope. Mmernaſti. Let the Reader here iudge betwene the Philoſophy of the one, and the Fooliſſe O-ply of the other: and let our Catholike Paraſites tell vs, whether their noterring Father pronounced this ſentence of error as a Pope, or as a priuate Doctour. But what doth this Doter in my way?

Some ſe alſo alledge Nazianzen, Herome, and Procopius, for this or the like opinion. But Poets, Philoſophers, Fathers, (in other things worthy our loue, for their delightfull Poems; our admiration, for their profound Science; our awfull reſpect and reuerence, for their holy learning: and learned holineſſe) herein we bid you farewell: magis amica veritas; our America, ſubiect to that ſuppoſed burning Zone, with clouds and armies of winneſſes in her wel-peopled Regions, can aſſure, that the parts betwixt the Tropikes are both habitable and inhabited: and for the Perraci, Anteci, Antillibones, and Antipodes, the worlds roundneſſe, and other things of like nature, this America yeelds, and is ſufficient prooſe: and the yeerely compaſſing the world (which the Spaniards and Portugals diuide betwixt them) makes euer then euident. And let thoſe two Engliſh Ships, the only two of one Nation which euer have ſailed, and that with admirable ſucceſſe and fortune, about the Globe of the earth, ſell Laſtians ghost, whether they dropped into the clouds (as hee feared) there to become new conſtellations, which Antiquitie would eaſily haue attributed to them. The Golden Hinde (which trauiſed the world round, and returned a Golden Hind indeed, with her belly full of Gold and Siluer) is yet at Deſbord, there reſſing after her long journey, offering vp her ſelfe to Time, her deeds to eternitie. The cauſes of the Temperature and habitableneſſe of thoſe parts. That which beguiled the Ancients, was the neereſſe of the Sunne, his direct beames, and the ſwift motion of the heauens, which they coniectured, did chaſe away cold, and moiſture out of all thoſe parts. And hardly could reaſon otherwiſe gheſſe, till experience ſhew'd the contrary. For neuer is it moiſter in thoſe parts betwene the Tropiks, then when the Sunne is neereſt, cauſing terrible ſtormes and ſhowers eury day: as if hauing drunken too much in his long and hote journey ouer the Ocean, hee did there vomit it vp againe. Once, the people of thoſe parts reckon it Winter, when the Aſtronomer would call it Summer: becauſe of this tedious weather which eury day happening cannot but cool the Ayre and Earth, with a maruellous temper: and on the other ſide, they call the time of the Sunnes abſence, Summer, becauſe of the perpetuall cleareneſſe, which continueth thoſe ſixe months; the Sinne their exhaling no more vapours then his hote ſtomacke digeſt, which with his direct beames being drawne vp, ſurcharge him with abundance; and in the middle Region of the Aire, by the then ſtronger Antiperrifſiſſe thickned into raines, and attended with Thunder and Lightning, proclaim daily defiance to the earth: threatening harme, but doing good: cooling the ſame, after the morning Sun hath heated it, the ſhowes then falling, when the Sunne threatens his hotteſt fury and violence.

Theſe Raines make the like inundations and overſflowings of Riuer in America, (as before we haue obſerued in Nilas, Niger, and Zaire in Africa (which breaking their bounds, and diſturb the Inhabitants, ſometimes to dwell on trees growing, ſometimes in their carkalls framed into Boats or Canoes, therein to retire themſelues, till the waters are retired, cauſe a cooling and reſreſhing to the Earth, which they couer and ſhield by their inundations from the Sunnes angry ſtrowes. As in a Limbeck, a ſtrong fire cauſeth abundance of vapours to be extractd out of herbes, or other matter, which being preſſed, and finding no iſſue, turn into water: and if the fire be ſmal, it exhaleth the vapours, as ſalt as it riſeth them: So the Sun (in his greaſt ſtrength) exhaleth theſe plentifull vapours and diſtelleth them in showers, which in less heat are of less quantity, and more easily consumed. Without the Tropicks it is contrary: for the Summer is dry, the Winter moist; the cause being the Sun's weakness, not able to concoct and disperse the vapours, by the moist earth then easily yielded: which in his greater force in the Summer season were effected: the like we see in green wood and dry on the fire.

It is no less worthy note, that no part of the World hath so many, so great Lakes, and Rivers: the vapours and exhalations whereof, cannot but coole and moisten the neighbouring Elements of the Ayre and the Earth. Against the equall length of the Dayes and Nights perpetually sharing the time in equall portions, causeth that the heat is not so unequal as the Ancients dreamed. The great Dewes also in the night, which are greater than we would thinke, and comparable for wetting to pretty showers, encrease the freshness and coolness.

We may adde hereunto the neighbour-hood of so huge an Ocean, the propriety of the Windes, which in most places betweene the Tropicks are set, and certaine, no less then the Sunne and Tides, and bring with them much refreshing. Further, the situation of the Land doth further the cold not a little, in those hot Regions: Contrariwise, neere the Poles, the continuance of the Sunne, and long dayes make it hotter then in parts neerer the Sunne; as in Russia, then in England. Yea the high ridges and tops of some Mountaines in the burning Zone, are unsufferable for cold, alwayes having on them snow, hayle, and frozen waters, the grasse withered, and the men and beasts which passe along that way (for there is no continent dwelling) benumbed with the extremity of cold.

When the Mountaines are subject to this degree of cold, it cannot but temper the Neighbour Regions, with some coolness at least. Now to all these Reasons of the Temperature, under the Line, and betweene the Tropicks, some adde the influence of some unknowne Constellations. Onely let this be remembered, that the former hold not equally in all parts of the Torrid Zone, seeing that Nature hath diversified her selfe in divers places, and by natural exceptions hath bounded and limited those generall Rules.

In some places, under the Line, it raineth not at all: in other some, those cooling Windes are wanting: neither hath every Region, Lakes, Rivers, or Mountaines to refresh them. But of these particulars, we shall take better view in their peculiar places. In the same space the Windes are most westerly, and without the Tropicks westerly: so that the Mariners use not to goe and returne the same way, but observing the generall Windes, seeke to make use thereof accordingly. The reason of this Easterly Winde under the Zodiacke, is ascribed to the motion of the Heavens: the first Moveable drawing (saith Acosta) with his owne motion the inferior Orbes, yea, even those Elementaries of the Fire, Ayre, and (where it findes no other obstacle, of the Water also, as some suppose. But for the Ayre (whereof we now specially speake) the motion of the Comets, circularly carried in the Ayre, (where also their motion is divers, as is observed in the Planets) doth sufficiently procure. Without the Tropicks from seven and twenty to seven and thirtie Degrees, the Windes are said to be for the most part Westerly, mooved, as some thinke, by the repercussion of the Ayre, here prevailing against that force of the Heavens, which mastereth it within the Tropicks: even as we see Waters, being encountered with more force, returne with an Eddie in a manner backward. This of the Easterly Winds is to be understood of the Sea: for at Land, though winds bee (as before is said) certaine and set, yet that which is the generall Winde of one Country, is not generall to all: yea, in the same Country they have a set Winde in some places for the day, and another quite contrary bloweth in the night. Also, neere unto the Coasts they are more subject to calmes in this burning Zone, than further off in the Sea, the grosser vapours which arise out of the Earth, and the divers situation thereof being, the cause of these differences.

Such is the force of this natural situation, that in some places it is strange what effects it produceth. There is in Peru a high mountaine called Pariacaca, whereupon Ioseph Acosta saith, he ascended as well proud as he could, being fore-warned and fore-armed by men expert. But in the ascent he and all the rest were surprised with so sudden pangs of fainting and casting, and some also of scowring, that the Sea-sickness is not comparable hereunto. He cast up Meats, Flegmes, Choler, and Blood, and thought he should have cast out his heart too. Some chinking to dye therewith, demanded Confession: and some are said to have lost their lues with this accident. The best is, it lasteth but for a time, neither leaveth any great harme behind. And thus it fareth in all the ridge of that Mountaine, which runnes above a thousand and five hundred miles, although not in all places alike. In foure different passages thereof,

In the yeere 1587. when Acosta came to Peru, eleven millions were transported in the two Fleets of Peru and Mexico, almost one halfe thereof for the King. In the time when Pello was Governour of Charcas in Peru, from the Mines of Potozi alone were drawne and culomed every day thirty thousand Pecos of Silver, every Peco amounting to 13. Rials, and a fourth part: and yet it is thought the one halfe was not culomed: or as Oniedo recko- neth, one fourth part more then a Spanish Duckett. Hee writeth, that Anno 1535. three or four ships came to Siuil, laden with none other commodities but Gold and Silver. Miles Philip recorleth, that when he returned out of the Indies, 1581. there were seuen and thirty sayie, and in euery of them, one with another, thirtie pipes of siluer, besides great store of Gold, Cochinite, Sugots, Hides, &c. And at this day, saith Acosta, the Mines of Potozi yeeld the King a million of Silver, for his fit yeerely, besides the wealth that groweth by Quicke- siluer, and other Prerogatives. In the yeere 1574. were entred three score and sixtene mil- lions. That which is wrought in the Countrey is not entred, besides priuy conueyances. How much differeth Potozi from the Mine Bebello in Spain, one thousand and five hundred pices deep: admitted, and that iustly, by Antiquitie, for yeelding three hundred pounds weight of Silver a day to Hannibal, but with much more charges, by reason of the intolera- ble paines in drawing out the waters, which therein flowed, and in Potozi are wanting? But what will not this vnlovely loue of money doe? Hereby Man encountreth the vast Ocean, passeth the farthest and most contrarie Climates, drowneeth Bootes and all his Teme, buryeth himselfe in the bowels of the Earth, raiseth new Heauens, and seeketh his heauen where he cannot see heauen or light, nere the bottomlesse bottomes of Hell: remoueth Fountaines and Mountaines, reduceth a new Chaos, in the confusion of Elements; the Earths intrals be- ing towred in the Ayre, and scintiled to his hotter brother in Fiery purgations; the Aire fill- ing the darke hollowes and hels which it cannot see; the Waters forced out of those posses- sions wherein they chall. uged succession and inheritance after the decesse and remouing of the Earth: all filled with Darknesse, to bring to light those metals, which possessing the pos- sessors, deprive them of the highest Light, and brand them for the lowest Darknesse. Precious perils, where so many bodies are pined, so many soules endangered, so much Good lost for goods: and Man, for price, setteth himselfe at the worst and basest place of all that hee hatli. How happy and golden was the outward state of these Indians, before they accounted gold any part of their happinesse, and found it the cause of their ruine?

Of metals, Gold is esteemed most precious, as most enduring both Age and Fire, and least subiect to rust: according to those Verses,

Their Gold is found either in Graines, which they call Pippins, because they are like the Pippins, or Seeds of Melons; which is pure, and hath no need of melting: or in powder, which is found in Rivers, mixed with the soyle and sands, for which Tagus, Pallus, and Ganges have been famous; or else in stone, being a veine that groweth and ingendereth, intermixing it selfe with the stones. Those Pippins, or pieces of pure Gold, found among the Rocks or Hills, are sometimes very great. Peter Martyr tells of one that weighed three thousand three hundred and ten Pecos, and was with much people and treasure drowned, in the ship called Bordilla, being therewith furcharged, in the returne homewards: A fit Embleme for Christians, which when they will lode themselves with this tickle clay, is drowned in soule in perdition and destruction. Oniedo (who a long time held the Office of Prouditor for the Mines) saith, that hee saw two Graines of Gold, one of which weighed seuen pounds, and was in value 700. Castilians or Pécos; the other five pounds, & was worth five hundred; and many other of one, two or three hundred. Yet are not these Graines so welcome to the Miners, as that in powder, because this continueth (and therefore in fine containeth) more then the former. He obserueth, that Gold hath a farre brighter lustre in the naturall virginity, then when it hath passed the fire & mans industry: and that coles are often found very fresh, where they find Gold, which place he thinkes was sometimes the face of the Earth, and by Time (which conserueth coles as well as gold vnder the earth without corruption) couered through bushwies, bringing the earth from the higher places, whereby hee supposeth it came to passe, that in a virgin Mine fiftene foot vnder the earth, he once found two rings of the Indian fashion: he addeth, that the gold in stone will runne as small as a pin or thread, and meeting with a hollow place, fillet it, and so guideth the Miner by thick and thin, but alway pliant & flexible like liquid waxe, till the first sight of our aire breathes (as from the couetous hard hearts of men) this naturall hardnesse, which it presenteth to vs.

Spittle of man envenometh, with a stronger poyson, this poyson of Quick-silver; and eyther killeth it, or at least depriveth it of the motion and quicknesse, and maketh it plant to Medicines and Oynments. Yea, some report that this Spittle of man, arising of secret vapors out of the body, as infectious exhalations out of vnywhollem lakes, especially when a man is fasting, killeth Scorpions, and other venomous beasts, or at least doth much hurt them. Quick-silver displaceth other metals, only it is thus ranshed with Gold, and not a little affected to Silver, for the refining of which, it is principally in vse: it corrupteth, forceth, consumeth, and flyeth the rest, as much as may bee, and therefore they vse to keepe it in earthen Vessels, Bladders, Skins, Quils, and such vnyuous receptacles. It hath pierced and eaten thorow the bodies of men, and hath bene found in their graves. Quick-silver is found in a kind of stone, which doth likewise yeeld Vermillion. At Amador de Cabrera, is such a stone or Rocke, foure score yards long, forty broad, interlaced with Quick-silver, with many pits in it, thre score Stades deepe, and is able to receiue three hundred workmen: it is valued worth a Million of Gold. From the Mynes of Guanaculica, they draw yearly eight thousand Quintals of Quick-silver. As for the manner of refining Silver by Quick-silver, their Engines and Mils, which the tryall of their metall, I referre the Reader to Acosta.

Atabalipa marvelled why the Europeans having such Chrysaline and pure Glasser, would expole themselves to those dangers by Sea and Land, for those metals which he thought not comparable to the same. Well indeed might hee have wonderd, if that Arte had remayned, which P (I know not how truly) P Perantius, Isidorus, and others report, to haue bene in Tiberius his time; to whom one presented a faire Glasser, which being cast on the ground, was bowed, but not broken: & being taken vp by the same Artificer, was with his hammer brought to the former forme and beauty. His reward, besides the wonder and astonishment of the beholders, was that which precious things often procure their owners. For the Emperour asking whether any other knew this Mytery, this being denied, he caused his head; the only work-houle of this secret to be imporess'd, lest Gold and Silver should giue place to Arte. The Emperadour grow in stones like Chrysalis, and there are many of them in the Indies. But of these and other Gemmes it would be too tedious to write.

Pedro Ordóñez a Spanish Priest hath written of the profits which the Spaniards reape of Peru and the Indies. He sayth, that the Kings Revenue thence accruech to twelue Millions, which ariseth out of ten Springs, his fifths of the Gold and Silver. Mynes, great Meltings, Customes of Ports, Indian Tributes, Sale of Offices, the Cruzada, Tribute of Rents, Quick-silver, Rents of Courts, and the ninth part of Ecclesiasticall Rents. Of these Rents and other things worthy knowledge see himselfe in the seventh Booke of the last part of our Pilgrimes. Let vs now come to the Men, Beasts, Fowles and Plants of this New World, whereof wee will here promise a generall taste, and hereafter giue in the due places some other particular Relations.

Of the first Knowledge, Habitation, and Discoveries of the New World, and the rare Creatures therein found, Beasts, Birds, Trees, Herbes, and Seeds.

§. I.

Whether the Ancients had any knowledge of America, and whence the Inhabitants, first came.

Fter these generall Discoveries of the Americans, some differ of like nature hold not vnyuerse to be handled, before wee come to the particular Regions: and first of the Men, whether the Ancients had any knowledge of them; how Men first came into these parts, and of the first Discoveries in the former Age. Concerning the first knowledge of these parts, it may iustly bee a question whether the Ancients neuer heard thereof. For to say nothing of that opinion, so that the Torrid Zone was not habitable in the opinion of the most; as wee haue shewed in the former Chapter; the allegations are not such as can force vs to beleue that, whereof by by great Authors they are alledged. Seneca's Propheſie is little to the purpoſe: New-worlds (ſayth he) ſhall be in the laſt Ages diſcovered, and Tibule ſhall not be any longer the furtheſt of Nations. But all that Chorſus ſeemes to a diligent Reader to intend nothing elle, then to deſcribe the viſual affects, and effects of Shipping and Navigation, agreeing to that Argo Argument of the Tragedie, wherein Iaſon in that famous Argo ſaying to Colchos, had ob- tain'd Medea's love, which he vnkindly requir'd. And had the Poet intended theſe Weſterne Diſcoveries, he would neuer haue ſaid,

Nec fit terra Ultima Thule: but Nec fit terra Ultima Gades.

- 10 as Boterus obſerueth; For the American Diſcoveries haue not bene by the way of Iſland, and Northward, but Southward: and this appeareth by the Verſes before,

- 10 As for Plato's Atlantis, and Tertullian's Æon borrowed of him; Acoſta alledgeth diuers Platiniſtes, Proclus, Porphyrie and Origen, which interpret Plato after a myſtical ſenſe: and prooueth by the words of Plato himſelfe, that they can be no true Hiſtory. The like allegations hath Marſilius Ficinus in his Commentaries vpon Timæum and Crisia, how ſoever he alledgeth Cranior, and ſome others which eſteeme it a bare Hiſtory: to which yet his thouſands of yeeres before the Flood, deny truth and credit, although we interpret them of the yeeres of the Moone. Ficinus ſheweth both their Allegoricall and his Anagogicall interpretation. But the Diſcourſe of Plato cannot agree, if it were a Hiſtory, to America, both becauſe it placeth Atlantis at the mouth or entry of the Straits by Hercules Pillars, whence this is by a huge Sea ſeparated: and that is not ſaid ſtill to continue land, but by an Earth-quake to haue ſunk and become Sea. That which is cited out of Ariſtotele his Admiranda audientes, if any reade the place, may appeare to be ſome neerer Iland, and neyther Iland nor Continent of America. Neyther can I credit that which Oniedo ſuppoleth of the Heſperides Ilands, cited out of Pliny, Mele, Solimus, dawbed ouer with Morter, borrowed of fabulous Berosus, and the Poets, as if in thoſe firſt Ages of the World they had bene Spaniſh Inheritance, and none other then Hiſpaniola, or ſome other of the Ilands or mayne land of this New World, the Hiſtories whereof might perhaps moue Columbus to theſe Diſcoveries.

- 40 Out of Plutarch and other Hiſtories of the Carthaginian, Phœnician, and Tyrrhenian Navigations they haue coniectures, but very vncertaine, and obſcure: and thoſe things, which Diodorus reports of that Iland, agree nothing to the New-World which had not attayned to that ciuility he there mentioneth, before the Spaniards arrivall. And by his diſcourſe it ſeemes rather to be ſome of the Ilands of Africa, then America, if the Hiſtory be true. Neyther could ſuch long Voyages ſo farre off from any land, be performed without the helpe of the Compaſſe, which was firſt found thirteene hundred yeeres after Chriſt, by Iohn Goia of Meli, according to that Verſe of Panormitan, Prima dedit nauis uſum Magnetis & Amalphi. Gomara & citeth Blondus, and Maſſeus, Girardus, witneſſes of this Melian invention, ſaue that hee calls him not Iohn, as Ortelius doth, but Plauto di Malphi. And in the tempeſts, which hap- pen'd among the Ancients, it ſeemes that for want of this ſkill, they wandered very vn- certayne, but as the Sunne or Starres, by returne of their deſired light, after the tempeſt ended, directed them.

- Yet I will not ſay, but that in former times, ſome ſhips might come ſometime by caſualty into thoſe parts: but rather forced by weather, then directed by ſkill; and thus it is likely that ſome parts of America haue bene peopled, This I much doubt; whether their Science in Navigation was ſuch, as that they would voluntarily aduenture, and could happily effect this Voyage to and from the Weſt Indies. The moſt probable Hiſtorie in this kind is (in my mind) that of Madoc ap Owen Guyeth, who by reaſon of chiuill conventions, left his country of Wales, ſeeking aduentures by Sea, and leauing the Coaſt of Ireland North, came to a Land vnknowne, where he ſaw many ſtrange things.

Now, as in the Arke it selfe, (the Cradle of Man, and stall of Beasts,) we must not only observe Nature and Art, for the making and managing thereof; but a higher and more powerful hand: even so in dispensing the creatures which came from thence, they chose places by their owne naturall instinct, and man disposed by his industrie, according as he had use of them; but most of all, the secret and mighty providence of God co-working in those works of Nature and industry, and (in likelihood) infusing some more speciall and extraordinary instinct in that replenishing and furnishing of the World, * Assigning them their seasons and bounds of habitation, hath thus diversified his workes, according to the diversities of places, and sorted out to each Countrey their peculiar creatures. As for the coming by ship, it is for the beasts improbable, for the men (by any great numbers, or of any set purpose) unlikely (except as before is said) seeing in all America they had no shipping, but their Canoes. The beasts also have not bin found in the Ilands, which are in the Continent. And if any hereunto will adde a supposition, that there might be some Ilands or parts of the Continent in times past, which is now swallowed by the merciless Ocean, so that then there might be a way, which now is buried in the waters: (as some of suppos'd of Plato's Atlantis, placed at the mouth of the Streits, or Hercules Pillars, which yet they would have to be America, and some of the * Sea betwixt Douer and Callis, once one firme Land (as they doe imagine) I list not to contradict them.

As for the * Indians owne report of their beginning, which some ascribe to a Fountaine, others to a Lake, others to a Cave, or what other opinion they conceive thereof, we shall more fitly observe in their proper places, discoursing of their Religions and Opinions. Now for the first certain Discovery of this New World, the World generally ascribeth it to Columbus, and worthily: but Columbus himselfe is said to have received his instructions from another.

of Christopher Colon, or Columbus, his first Discoverie, and three other Voyages.

His Historie is thus related by Gonsalvo, and Seaverd Mariana: A certaine Caravel, sayling in the Ocean, by a strong East winde long continuing, was carried to a Land unknowne, which was not expressed in the Maps and Cards. It was much longer in returning, then in going: and arising, had none left alive but the Pilot, and three or four Mariners, the rest being dead of famine and other extremities; of which also the remnant perished in few dayes, leaving to * Columbus (then the Pilots host) their Papers, and some grounds of this Discoverie. The time, place, countrey, and name of the man is uncertaine: some esteeme this Pilot an Andaluzian, and that he traded at Madera, when this befell him: some a Biscaine, and that his trafficke was in England and France; and some Portugall, that traded at the Mina: some say hee arrived in Portugall; others, at Madera, or at one of the Azores: all agree that he dyed in the house of Christopher Columbus. It is most likely at Madera. This Relation (as it hath no witnesses to prove it, the whole company being dead; nor any good circumstances, so) Benzo and Ramusius plainly affirme it to be a fable, and a Spanish trick, enuying a Forrenner and Italian that glory, to be the first finder of the Indies. And the most sincere and iudicious of the Spaniards themselves esteeme it but a tale, as appears by the testimonie of Gonsalvo Fernando de Oviedo in his Summary, and more fully in his generall Historie of the Indies. They shew, and so doth he which then lived in the Court of Spaine, Peter Martyr, another cause that moved Columbus to this Discovery, and not that Pilots papers or reports. For, he being a Mariner vied to the Sea from his youth, and sayling from Cales to Portugall, observed, that at certaine seasons of the yeere, the windes vied to blow from the West, which continued in that manner a long time together. And deeming that they came from some coast beyond the Sea, he busied his minde so much herewith, that he resolved to make some triall and proove thereof. When he was now forty yeeres old, he propounded his purpose to the Senate of Genua, vnder-taking, if they would lend him ships, he would find a way by the West, vnto the Ilands of Spices. But they rejected it as a dream.

Columbus frustrate of his hopes at Genua, yet leaves not his resolution, but goeth to Portugall, and communicates this matter with John the second King of Portugall: but finding no entertainment to his suites, sendeth his brother Bartholomew Columbus to King Henry the seventh of England, to sollicite him in the matter, whiles himselfe passed into Spaine, to implore the aide of the Castilians herein.

conclureth, that Columbus (moued with his owne coniectures to this discourte) was confirmed further Pilot, which is said to dye in his house.

Bartholomew v unhappily lighted on Pirates by the way, which robbed him and his company, forced him to satisfyne himselfe with making of Sea-cards. And having gotten somewhat about him, presents a Map of the World to King Henry, with his Brothers offer of Discouerie: which the King gladly accepted, and sent to call him into England. But hee had first of his suite before in Spaine, and by the King and Queene was employed according to his request. For comming ^h from Lisbon to Palos di Mager, and there conferring with Martin Alonso Pinzon, an expert Pilot, and Freyer Jo. Perez, a good Cosmographer, hee was counselled to acquaint with these his proiects, the Dukes of Medina Sidonia, and of Medina Celi: which yeelding him no credit, the Fryer counselled him to goe the Court, and wrote in his behalfe to Freyer Fernand de Talavera, the Queenes Confessor.

Christopher Columbus came to the Court of Castile, Anno 1486, and found cold welcome to his suite, at the hands of the King and Queene, then busied with hot warres in Granada, whence they expelled the Moores. And thus remayned hee in contempt as a man meanely clothed, without other Patron then a poore Fryer, saue that Alonso di Quintaniglia gaue him his Dyet who also at last procured him audience with the Archbishop of Toledo, by whose mediation he was brought before the King and Queene, who gaue him fauourable countenance, and promised to dispatch him, when they had ended the warres of Granada, which also they performed. Thus Columbus is set forth with three Caruels at the Kings charges, who because his treasure was then spent in the warres, borrowed sixteene thousand Duc-kets of Leues de San^t Angelo: and on Friday the third of August, in the yeere of our Lord 1492, in a Vessell called the Galleaga, accompanied with the Pinia and Ninna, in which the Pinzon, Brethren, went a Pil ts, with the number of an hundred and twenty persons, or thereabouts, set saile for Gomera, one of the Canary Ilands, and having there refreshed himselfe, followed his Discouery. After many dayes hee encountered with that Heerie Sea (whereof before we haue spoken) which not a little amated and amazed the Spaniards, and had caused their ^k returne, had not the sight of some Birds promised him land not farre off. He also first taught the Spaniards to obserue the Sygne and Pole in their Navigations, which till this Voyage they had not vsed, nor knowne.

But the Spaniards, after three and thirty dayes sayling, desperate of successe, mutined, and threatened to cast Columbus into the Sea: I disdaining much, that a stranger, a Genouis, should so abused them. But he pacified their enraged courages with milde speeces, and gentle promises. On the eleuenth day of October, ^m one Roderigo de Triana, elyfed and cryed, Land, Land; the best Musicke that might be, especially to Columbus, who to satisfie the Spaniards importunity, had promised the day before, that if no Land appeared in three dayes, hee would returne. ⁿ One, the night before, had descryed fire, which kindled in him some hope of great reward at the Kings hand, when hee returned into Spaine, but being heerein frustrate, hee burnt into such a flame, as that it consumed both Humanitie and Chrestianitie in him, and in the agony of indignation made him leaue his Country and Faith, and reuolt to the Moores. But thee, Columbus, how can I but remember: but loue? but admire? Sweetly may those bones rest, sometimes the Pillars of that Temple, where so diuine a Spirit ^o resided: which neyther want of former example, nor publike discouragements of domestickall and forren States, nor priuate insultations of proud Spaniards, nor length of time (which vsually deuoureth the best resolutions) nor the vnequall Plaines of huge vnkowne Seas, nor grassie fields in Neptunes lap, nor importunate whisperings, murmurs, threatnings of iraged companions, could daunt. O name of Columbus, worthy to be named vnto the Worlds end, which to the Worlds end hast conducted Columbus; or may I call thee Columbo, for thy Dona-like simplicitie and patience: the true Columbo or Pillar, whereon our knowledge of this New World is founded: the true Christopher, which with more then Giant-like force and fortitude hast carried Christ his Name and Religion, through vnkowne Seas, to vnkowne Lands: which we hope and pray, that it may be more refined, and reformed, then Popish superstition, and Spanish pride will yet suffer. Now let the Ancients no longer mention Neptuno, or Minos, or Erythra, or Danaus: to all which diuers authors diuersly ascribe the inuention of navigation. Mylians, Trojans, Tyrians, vaile your bonnets, strike your top-sayles to this Indian-Admirall, that deserueth the top-saile indeed, by aspiring to the top that sayling could ayme at, in discouering another World. Let Spaniards, French, English, and Dutch resound thy name, or His Name rather, a whose Name who can tell? that would acquaint Thee, and the World by thee, with newes of a New-World.

But lest we drowne our selues in this Sea of Extasie and Admiration, let vs goe on shoare with Columbus in his new discouered Iland. And first mee thinke I see the Spaniards, yesterday in mutinie, now as farre distracted in contrary passions, some gazing with greedie eyes eyes on the desired Land, some with tears of joy, not able to see that, which the joy of seeing made them not to see: others embracing, and almost adoring Columbus, who brought them to that fight: some also with secret repinings envying that glory to a stranger, but by-ting in their byting envie, and making shew of glee & gladnesse: all new awaked out of a long trance, into which that Step-mother-Ocean, with dangers, doubt, & dreads, delaires had dejected them, returned now by the sight of their mothers-earth, from whom in unknowne armes they had been so long weaned and detayned. On shoare they goe, and felling a tree make a Crosse thereof, which there they erected, and tooke possession of that New World, in the name of the Catholike Kings. This was done on the eleventh of October, Anno 1492. in the Iland Guanahani, one of the Lucai, which Columbo named San Salvatore: from whence hee sayled to Baracoa, a Haven on the North side of the Ile Cuba, where hee went on Land, and asked of the Inhabitants for Cipango (so doth Pausan call Iapan.) They vnderstanding him of Cibao (where are the richest Mynes of Hispaniola) signed him, that it was in Haiti, (so was the Iland then called) and some of them went with him thither.

What worldly joy is not mixed with some disaister? Their Admirall heere splitteth on a Rocke, but the men are saved by the helpe of the other-ships. This fell out in the North part of Hispaniola (so named by them) where they had sight of Inhabitants, which seeing these strangers, ranne all away into the Mountaynes. One woman the Spaniards got, whom they vsed kindly, and gaue her meate, drinke and clothes, and so let her goe. She declaring to her people the liberaltie of this new people, easily perswaded them to come in troups to the ships, thinking the Spaniards to be some Duaine Nation, sent thither from Heaven. They had before taken them for the Caribes, which are certaine Cannibals, which vsed inhumane huntings for humane game; to take men for to eate them; Children likewise, which they gilded to haue them more fat, and then to debase them: the women they are not, but vsed them for procreation, and if they were old, for other seruises. The Islanders had no other defence against them but the woody Hills, and swiftest heeles to which they betooke them at the Spaniards arrivall, thinking them (as is said) to be Cannibals. And such haue they since proued in effect, not leauing of three Millions of people which heere they found, 200. persons, and that long since.

The Drueill had forewarned them of this by Oracle, that the bearded Nation should spoyle their Images, and spill the blood of their children, as wee shall see in the particular Tractate of Hispaniola. Nothing more pleased the Spaniards then the Gold; which the naked Inhabitants exchanged with them for Bees, Glasses, Points, and other trifles.

Columbus obtained leave of Guarmarillus, the Cacike or King, to build a Fort, in which he left eight and thirty Spaniards, and taking with him fixe Indians, returned to Spaine, where he was highly welcomed of the King and Queene. Some controuerfie fell out betweene Columbus, and one of the Pezonis, Master of one of the Caruels, about leauing these men behind; but Columbus sent a Letter to reduce him vnto peace by the Indians, who held the Letter in almost religious regard, thinking it had some Spirit or Deitie, by which they could vnderstand one another being absent.

The Pope (then a Spaniard) Alexander the Sixt, hearing of this, diuided the World, by his Bull, betwixt the Portugals and Spaniards: bearing date the fourth of May, Anno 1493. drawing a Line a hundred leagues beyond the Ilands of Azores and Cape Verde, this Alexander giuing (more then Great Alexander could) conquer the East to the one, and West to the other. The Bull is become an Vnicorne, and his two hornes are now growne into one, in the vnitings of these two States.

Columbus graced with the title of Admirall, & enriched with the tenths of the Spanish gaires in the Indies, is sent a second time, with his Brother Bartholomew, who was made Admirado, or Deputie of Hispaniola. They had allowed them for this Expedition, small and great, fifteneente Sayle, and fiftene hundred men. The first Iland, hee espied in his second Nauigation, he called Disseada, or Disord; because he had longed to see Land. Arriving in Hispaniola, he found the Spaniards which he had left there, that they were now riot left, nor any where to be found. The Indians had murdered them, and laid the blame on the Spanish insouleries.

Hee now built and peopled the Towne of Isabella, which was his chief place of Residence and government, which is in the yeere a thousand foure hundred ninete eight; were removed to the City of San Dominico. They built also the Fort of S. Thomas: but both in the one and the other, the Spaniards died of famine through the Indians wilfulness, who, vnrwilling to haue such Neighbours, would not plant their Maize and Iucos; and so starued both themselves and their guests. As for the Rockes, the Spaniards in this Voyage got them of the Indian women, and brought them into Spaine, as Onides of his owne knowledge.

^a reporteth of his owne Country-men : and they, after paid the Indians ^b (in recompence) with a discafe as deadly and infectious to them, which consumed thousands, and was neuer before knowne amongst them : I meane, the small Pocks. The other were improperly named of the French, or of Naples, seeing that in those wars of Naples, which the Spaniards mayntayned against the French, some carried this discafe with them thither out of Spaine, and communicated the same both to the French and Neapolitans, having bene vsuall and easily curable, in the Indies. Another Discafe also assaulted them of a little kinde of Fleas called Niguas, which would eate into, and breed in the flesh, and haue made many lole their toes.

Columbus at this time discovered Cuba and Iamaica with the Neighbour-Iles. Returning to Hispaniola, he found his Brother and the Spaniards in dissention and separation, and punishing the Au hours of lediction, returned home. In the yeere of our Lord, 1497, hee made his third Voyage, and then touched on the Continent; discovered Cubagua, Paria, and Cumana.

But Roldanus Ximenes rayeing a Rebellion, and accusing the Columbi to the King, effected that Benadilla was sent Governour into Hispaniola, who sent the two Brethren bound as Prisoners to Spaine : unworthy recompence of the worthy attempts of these Worthies. The King freed them, and employeth Christopher in a fourth Voyage. Anno 1502, in which Onando the Governour forbade Columbus the first finder to land on Hispaniola. Hee then discovered Guanaxa, Higueru, Fondura, Veragua, Yraha, and leasned newes (as some say) of the South Sea. He stayed at Iamaica to repaire his Fleete, where some of his men were sicke, and they which were found in body, were more then sicke, froward and tumultuous in behauiour, and many left him. Vpon this occasion the Ilanders also forsooke him, and brought in no vsuall, Herewith Columbus, neyther able to abide nor depart, was driuen to his shifts, no lesse admirable for subtlety then resolution. He told the Ilanders, that if they did not bring him in provision, the Diuine Anger would consume them 22 signe whereof they should see in the darkened face of the Moone within two dayes. At that time hee knew the Moone would be eclipsed : which the simple Ilanders seeing, with feare and griefe humbled themselves to him, and offered themselves readie to all kinde and dutifull Office.

At last, returning into Spaine, hee there dyed, Anno 1506. His body was buried at Simill in the Temple of the Carthusians. This was the end (if ever there can be end) of Columbus. Pinzon : a one of Columbus his Companions, by his example invited, made new Discoueries, and Cispuicus, and Cabota and many other, every day making new searches and plantations, till the World at last is come to the knowledge of this New World almost wholly. The particulars will more fitly appeare in our particular Relations of each Countrey.

¶ III. Of the Beasts, Fowles and Plants in America.

After this Discourse of the men in those parts, let vs take some generall view of the other Creatures, especially, such as are more generally dispersit through the Indies. I haue before noted, that America had very few of such Creatures as Europe yeeldeth, vntill they were transported thither : and therefore they haue no Indian names for them, ^f but those which the Spaniards that brought them, giue vnto them : as Horse, Kine, and such like. They haue Lions, but not like in greatnesse, fiercenesse, nor colour to those of Africa. They haue Beates in great abundance, except on the North parts. They haue store of Deere, Bores, Foxes, and Tygres, which (as in Congo) are more cruell to the Naturals then to the Spaniards. These beasts were not found in the Ilands, but in the Continent; and yet now in those Ilands, Kine are multiplied and growne wilde, without other Owner then such as first can kill them : the Dogges likewise march by troupes, and endamage the Cattle worse then Wolves. Their Swine did multiply exceedingly, but (as an Enemy to their Sugars, a great commoditie in Hispaniola, where Anno 1525, Ouido reckons almost thirty Ingenions, the number daily increasing) they were forced to root out this rooting kind of beasts. This Iland hath stored the other about it with store of Horle and Mares which are sold very cheape. For Kine, the Bishop of Venezuela had sixteen thousand head of that kind of beasts, and more : others possessed thousands also, and some killed them only for their Hides, of which were shipped from hence for Spaine, Anno 1587. 3444. and from New Spaine 64350. as Acosta relateth.

The

The Lyons are gray, and vfe to clime Trees: The Indians hunt and kill them: The Beares and Tygres are like thofe in other parts: but not fo many. Apes and Monkeys they haue of many kinds, and thefe admirably pleafing in their Apifh tricks and imitations, feeming to proceed from Reafon: A Souldier leuelling at one of them to fhoot him, the filly beaft did not vntrengthened, but hurling a ftone as the other ayimed at him, depeuid the Souldier of his eye, and loft his owne life. They haue Monkeys with long beards, Acosta relates of one Monkey that would goe to the Tauerne at his Mafters fending, and carrying the por in one hand, and money in the other, would not by any meanes depart with his money, till he had his pot filled with wine: and returning home, would pefte the boyes with ftones, and yet haue care to carie his Wine home fafe to his Mafter, neither touching it himfelfe till fome were giuen him, nor fuffering other. They haue a monftrous deformed beaft, whose forepart refembleth a Fox, the hinder part an Ape, excepting the feet which are like a mans; beneath her belly fhe hath a receptacle like a purfe, wherein fhe belowes her young vntill they can fhuffe for themfelues, neuer coming out of this naturall neft, but ro fucke.

Sheepe haue much increafed, and by good husbandry, in that plenty of pafture, would be a great commoditie: but in the Iflands the wilde Dogges deftroy them: and therefore they char kill thefe Dogges, are rewarded for it, as they which kill Wolves in Spaine. The Dogges which the Indians had before, were fnowred like Foxes; they fattened them to eat, and kept them alfo for pleafure: but they could nor barke: Such Dogges (we haue fhewed) are in Congo. Their Staggas and Deere in the South parts of America, haue no horns. They haue ftore of Conies. The Armadilla is an admirable creature, of which there bee diuers kinds: they relemble a barbed Horfe, feeming to be armed all ouer, and chat as if it were rather by artificiall Plates, opening and fhutting, then naturall fcales: it digs vp the earth as Conies and Moules.

The Hogs of the Indies haue their nauill vpon the ridge of their backs. They go in herds together and affaile men, hauing fharp talons, like razors, and hunt their Hunters vp the tops of trees, whence they eafily kill thefe enraged Sauins (fo they call them) biting the tree for anger. The Danies relemble fmall Kine, and are defended by the hardneffe of their lhydies. The Vicquas fomewhat relembleth a Goat, but is greater: they fheare them, and of their fleeces make Rugs and Coverings, and ftuffes. In the ftomacke and belly of this beaft is found the Bezar-ftone: fometimes one alone, fometimes two, three, or foure: the colour of which is blacke, or gray, or greene, or otherwife; it is accounted foueraigne againft poifons and venomous difeates. It is found in diuers forts of beafts: but all chew the cud, and commonly feed vpon the fnow and Rocks. The Indian fheepe they call Lama, it is a beaft of great profit, not onely for food and raiment, but alfo for carriage of burthens: they are bigger then fheepe, and leffe then Calues; they will beare a hundred and fifty pound weight. In fome places they call them Amydas, and vfe them to greater burthens. Haderiko Schmidel affirms, that hee liuing in the parts about the River of Plate, being hurt on his legge, rode fortie leagues vpon one of them. They will grow reftleffe, and will lye downe with their burthen, no ftripes nor death able to afwage their mood: fometimes good words, and faire dealing, with gentle entreatie, fometimes diuers houres together, can preuaile.

Of fowles they haue many kinds which we haue, as Partridges, Turtles, Pidgeons, Stock-Doues, Quails, Faulcons, Herons, Eagles: and a World of Parrots, which in fome places fly by flocks, as Pidgeons. There are alfo Eltridges. Hens they had before the Spaniards arrived. They haue other kinds peculiar: The Tomineos is the leaft in quantitie, the greateft for admiration and wonder, I haue oftentimes doubted (faith Acosta) seeing them fly, whether they were Bees or Butter-flies; but in truth they are Birds. Themet and Larus call it Gouambuch, or Gouambuch. They affirme that it yeelds nothing in fweetneffe of note to the Nightringale, and yet is no bigger then a Breele, or Drone-Bee: One would fay, Fox is, prætere nihil: but fo could not any truly fay, for euen other wife it is almoft miraculous: Nature making this little fhop her gear ftore-houfe of wonder and amonifment, and fhewing her greateft gearneffe in the leaft Inftuments. The Prouinciall of the Iefuites in Brazil, affirmed as Clufius teftifies, that the Brafilians called it Ouiffis, which fignifyeth the Sun-beame, and that it was procured of a Fly: and that he had feene one, partly a Bird, and partly a Fly: firft, coloured blacke, then alfo coloured, then rofe coloured, then red: and laftly, the head fet againft the Sunne, ro relemble all colours, in moft admired varietie. It flyeth fo swift (faith Ouedo) that the wings cannot be feene. It hath a neft proportionable, I haue feene (faith he) one of thofe birds, together with her neft, pur into the fcales wherein they vfe to weigh Gold, and both weighed but two Tomins, that is, foure and twenty graines. Haply, it is therefore called Tomineos, as weighing one Tomim. The feathers are beautified with yellow, greene, and other colours: the mouth like the eye of an Needle. It lieth on dew, and the juice of herbs, but sitteth not on the Rose. The feathers, specially of the necke and breasts, are in great request for those feather-pictures, or portraiture, which the Indians make cunningly and artificially with these natural feathers, placing the same in place and proportion, beyond all admiration: The Indian Bats should not flee your light, and are for their rarity worthy consideration, but that wee have spoken before to mew hat of them.

They have Birds called Condors, of exceeding greatnesse and force, that will open a sheepe, and a whole Calfe, and eat the same. They have abundance of Birds, in beautes of their feathers farre surpassing all in Europe, wherewith the skillfull Indians will perfectly represent in feathers, whatsoever they see drawne with the Penstill. A figure of Saint Francis, made of feathers, was presented to Pope Sixtini Quintus, whose eye could not discern them to be naturall colours, but thought them penstill-workes, till he made tryall with which his fingers. The Indians vied them for the ornaments of their Kings and Temples. Some Birds there are of rich commoditie, onely by their dung. In some Islands ioyning to Peru, the Mountaines are all white, like Snow, which is nothing but heapes of dung, of certaine Seafowle which frequent those places. It riseth many Ells, yea, many Launces in height, and is fetched thence in Boats, to hearten the Earth, which hereby is exceeding fertile.

To adde somewhat of the Indian Plants, and Trees. A Mangle is the name of a Tree, which multiplyeth it selfe into a wood (as before we have obserued of it) the branches descending and taking root in the Earth. The Plane-tree of India hath leaues sufficient to couer a man from the foot to the head: but these, the Coco, and other Indian Trees, are in the East-Indies also, and there we have mentioned them. Cacao, is a fruit little lesse then Almonds, which the Indians vse for money, and make thereof a drinke, holden amongst them in high regard. They have a kinde of Apples called Ananas, exceeding pleasant in colour and taste, and very wholesome, which yet haue force to cate iron, like Aqua fortis. The Manamoyes, Gusayanes, and Palos be the Indian Peaches, Apples and Peares. But it would be a weary wilderness to the Reader, to bring him into such an Indian Orchard, where he might reade of such varietie of fruits, but (like Tantalus) can taste none: or to present you with a Garden of their Trees, which beare flowres with other fruit, as the Floripondio, which all the yeere long beareth flowres sweet like a Lilly, but greater: the Volusuchil, which beareth a flowre like to the forme of the heart, and others, which I omit: The flowre of the Sunne is now no longer the Marigold of Peru, but groweth in many places with vs in England. The flowre of the Granadilla they say (if they say truly) hath the markes of the Passion, Nayles, Pillar, Whips, Thornes, Wounds, exceeding signifiaticall Francis.

For their Seeds and Craines, Mays is principall, of which they make their bread; which our English ground brings forth, but hardly will ripen it, growes as it were on a Reed, and multiplyeth beyond comparison; they gather three hundred measures for one. It yieldeth more blood, but more grile, then our Wheat. They make drinke thereof also, wherewith they will be exceedingly drunke: They first sleepe, and after boyle it to that end. In some places they first cause it to be champed with Maids, in some places with old-women, and then make a leauen thereof, which they boyle, and make this inebriating drinke. The Canes also and leaues serue for their Mules to cate. They boyle and drinke it also for paine in the back. The buds of Mays serue in stead of Butter and Oyle.

In some parts they make bread of a great root called Tuca, which they name Capani. They first cut and straine it in a Presse, for the iuyce is deadly poison: the Cakes dried, are steeped in water before they can cate them. Another kinde there is of this Tuca or Iuca, the iuyce whereof is not poison. It will keepe long like Bisket. They vse this bread most in Hispaniola, Cuba, and Iamaica, where Wheat and Mays will not grow, but so vnequally, that, at one instant, some is in the grasse, other in the graine. They vse in some places, another root called Papas, like to ground Nuts, for bread, which they call Chano. Of other their roots and fruits I am loth to write, lest I weary the Reader with tedious effusiousnesse. Spices grow not there naturally: Ginger thrieth well, brought and planted by the Spaniards. They haue a good kinde of Balme, though not the same which grew in Palestina. Of their Amber, Oles, Gums, and Drugs, I list not to relate further. Out of Spaine they haue caried great varietie of Plants, herein, America exceeding Spaine, that it receiueeth and fructifieth in all Spanish Plants that are brought thither, whereas the Indian thrive not in Spaine: as Vines, Oliues, Mulberries, Figs, Almonds, Limons, Quinces, and such like. And, to end this Chapter, with a comparison of our World, with this of America; Our advantages and preferments are many. Our Heauen hath more Stars, and greater, as Acosta by his owne sight hath obserued, challenging those Authors which haue written otherwise, of fabling. Our Heauen hath the North-Starre, within three degrees, and a third of the Pole: their Crosier, or foure Stars, be a cross, which they obserue for the Antartick, is thirtie degrees off. The Sunne commu-

careth his partial presence longer to our Trópique, then that of Capricorne; remaining in the Southerne Signes, 173. dayes, one and twenty houres, and twelue minutes: in the Northerne 186. dayes, eight houres, and twelue minutes. By Kickerman's System. Astron. Lib. 1. Tycho, Brahe, &c. reckoneth these a hundred fourelcore and fixe dayes, houres eighteene and a halfe, dayes eight, and one third part, scilicet plus quam in Astrali, &c.

This want of the Sunne and Stars is one cause of greater cold in those parts then in these. Our Earth exceeds theirs for the situation, extending it selfe more between East and West (fittest for humane life) whereas theirs trends most towards the two Poles. Our Sea is more favourable in more Gulfs and Bayes, especially, such as goe farre within Land, besides the Mid Land-Sea, equally communicating her selfe to Asia, Africa and Europa. This convenience of traffique America wanteth. Our beasts wilde and tame, are farre the more noble, as the former discourse sheweth.

For what haue they to oppose to our Elephants, Rhinoceroses, Camels, Horses, Kine, &c. Neither were the naturall fruits of America comparable to those of our World, Whence are their Spices, and the best Fruits, but from hence by transportation, or transplantation? As for Arts, States, Literature Divine and Humane, multitudes of Cities, Lawes, and other Excellencies, our World enioyeth still the priuiledge of the First-borne. America is as a younger brother or sister, and hath in these things almost no inheritance at all, till it bought some what hereof, of the Spaniards, with the price of her Freedome. On the other side, for temperate of Ayre, generally, America is farre before Africa, in the same height. For greatnesse of Rivers, Canada, Plata, and Maragon, exceed our World. Whether Africa or America exceed in Gold, it is a question: In Silver, Potosi seemes to haue surmounted any one Mine of the World, besides those of New-Spain, and other parts, howsoever Boterus doubts. Yet, Eximus alla probati: And now America excels, because, besides her owne store, shee it so plentifully furnished withall sorts of liuing and growing creatures from hence, as euen now was shewed.

CHAP. III.

Of the Discoveries of the North parts of the New-World, and toward the Pole, and of Greene-Land, or New-Land, Groen-Land, Esjoti-Land, Meta Incognita, and other places vnto New-France.

§. I.

Of the Discoveries made long since by Nicolo and Antonio Zenti.

America is commonly diuided by that Isthmus, or necke and narrow passage of Land at Darien, into two parts; the one called Northerne America, or Mexican; the other Southerne, or Peruana. This trendeth betwixt the Darien and Magellan Straights: that from thence Northwards, where the Confines are yet vnkowne. For it is not yet fully discovered, whether it ioyneth somewhere to the Continent of Asia, or whether Green-land, and some other parts, accounted Islands, loyne with it. These were discovered before the dayes of Columbus, and yet remaine almost couered still in obscuritie, and were therefore iustly termed, Meta Incognita, by Great ELIZABETH the best knowne and most renowned Lady of the World. The first knowledge that hath come to vs of those parts, was by Nicolas and Antonio Zenti, two Brethren, Venetians. Happy Italy, that first, in this last Age of the World, hath discovered the great Discoverers of the World, to whom we owe our M. Paulus, Odricius, Veremmannus, for the East, Columbus, Vesputius, Cabot, for the West; these noble Zenti for the North: and the first encompassing the Worlds wide Compass, vnto Pelagetta's Discourse, companion of Magellan in his journey: that I speake not of the paines of Russell, Ramusius, Boterus, and a world of Italian Authors, that (I thinke more then any other Language) haue by their historical labours discovered the World to it selfe. Vnhappie Italy, that still hath beaten the bush, for others to catch the Bird, and hath inherited nothing in these Easterne and Westerne Worlds, excepting thy Catholike claime, whereby, the Catholike tholike and Spanish Sword makes way for the Catholike-Roman Crowne and Keyes. Neither the Sword of Paul, nor the Keyes of Peter, for both these were spirituall. But to returne to our Venetians, b In the yere a thousand three hundred and foure score, M^r Nicolo Zumo being wealthy, & of a haughty spirit, desiring to see the fashions of the world, built and furnished a Ship at his owne charges, and passing the Straits of Gibraltar, held on his course Northwards, with intent to see England and Flanders. But a violent Tempest assailing him at Sea, he was carried hither, whither, till at last his Ship was carried away vpon the Ile of Friland: y where the men and most part of the goods were saved. In vaine seemed that delubric that delusers vpon presently to another Executioner. The Islanders like Nepinnes hungry groomes or his bise and blaake gard, set vpon the men whom the Seas had spared: but here also they found a second escape, by meanes of a Prince named Zichmni, Prince of that and many Ilands theresabouts: who being neere hand with his Armie, came to the out-cry, and chasing away the people, took them into protection.

This Zichmni had the yere before given the ouerthrow to the King of Norway, and was a great adventurer in feates of Armes. Hee spake to them in Latine; and placed them in his Naue, where with he wonne diuers Ilands. Nicolo behaued himselfe so well, both in sauing the Fleet by his Sea-skill, and in conquest of the Ilands by his Valour, that Zichmni made him Knight and Captaine of his Naue,

nastic in Groenland.

After diuers notable Exploits, Nicolo armed three Barks, with which he arriued in Engroenland: where hee found a Monastrie of Friers of the Preachers Order, and a Church dedicated to St. Thomas hard by a Hill, that casteth out fire like Volcannus and Etna. There is a Fountaine of hote water, with which they heat the Church of the Monastrie, and the Friers chambers. It commeth also into the Kitchin so boyling hote, that they vpon no other fire to dresse their meat, and putting their Bread into Brasie Pots without any water, it doth bake as it were in an hot Oven. They haue also small Gardens, which are couered ouer in the Winter time, and being watered with this water, are defended from the violence of the Frost and Cold, and bring forth Flowers in their due seasons. The common people astonished with these strange effects, conceiue highly of those Friers, and bring them presents of fish and other things.

They with this Water, in the extreme of the Cold, heat their Chambers, which also (as the other buildings of the Monastrie) are framed of those burning stones, which the mouth of the Hill casteth forth. They cast Water on some of them, whereby they are dissolved, and become excellent white Lime; and so rough that being contrived in building, it lasteth for euer. The rest, after the fire is out, serue in stead of stones to make Walls and Vaults, and will not dissolve, or breake, except with some iron roole.

Their Winter lasteth nine moneths; and yet there is a faire Hauens, where this water falleth into the Sea, not frozen: by meanes whereof there is great resort of wilde fowle and fish, which they take in infinite multitudes. The Fishers Boats are made like to a Weavers Shuttle, of the skins of fishes, fashioned with the bones of the same fishes, and being lowed together with many doubles, they are so strong, that in foule weather they will flur themselves within the same, not fearing the force either of Sea, or Winde. Neither can the hard-hearted Rocks breake these yeelding vessels. They haue also as it were a Sleeue in the bot-tome thereof, by which with a subtil deuce, they conuey the water forth, that soaketh into them. The most of these Friers spake the Latine Tongue.

A little after this Nicolo returned, and died in Friland, whither his brother Antonio had before resorted to him, and now succeeded both in his goods and honour; whom Zichmni employed in the Expedition for Estotiland: which happened vpon this occasion. Sixe and twenty yeres before, foure Fisher-Boats were apprehended at Seaby a mighty and tedious storme; wherewith after many dayes, they were brought to Estotiland, about a thousand miles West from Friland: vpon which, one of the Boats was cast away, and fixe men that were in it, were taken and brought to a populous Citie; where, one that spake Latine, and had bene cast by chance vpon that Iland, in the name of the King asked them what Country-men they were; and vnderstanding their case, he acquainted the King therewith. They dwelt there hve yeres, and found it to bee an Iland very rich, being little lesse then Island, farre more fruitfull. One of them said he saw Latine Bookes in the Kings Librarie, which they at this present doe not vnderstand. They haue a peculiar Language, and Letters or Characters to themselves. They haue Mines of Gold, and other Metals, and haue trade with Engroenland. They sow Corne, and make Beere and Ale. They build Barks (but know not the vse of the Compasse) and haue many Cities and Castles. The King lent them four Fishermen with twelue Barks Southwards, to a Country which they call Drogio: in which voye escaping dreadfull Tempests at Sea, they encountered with Canibals at Land, which deuoured many of them. These Fishers shewing them the manner of taking Fish with Nets, escaped : and for the presents which they made of their fish to the chiefe men of the Countrey, were beloued and honoured. One of these (more expert, it seemeth then the rest) was holden in such account, that a great Lord made warre with their Lord to obtayne him : and so perswaded, that he and his company were sent vnto him. And in this order was he sent to five and twenty Lords, which had watred one with another to get him, in thirtene yeeres space : whereby hee came to know almost all those parts ; which, hee said, was a great Countrey, and (as it were) a New World. The people are all rude, and void of goodnesse : they goe naked, neyther haue they wit to cover their bodies with the Beasts skins, which they take in hunting, from the vehement cold. They are fierce, and eat their Enemies, hauing diuers Lawes and Gouvernours. Their living is by hunting.

Further to the South-west, they are more ciuill, and haue a more temperate Ayre : They haue Cities and Temples dedicated to Idols, where they sacrifice men, and after eatte them ; and haue also some vñe of Gold and Silver.

He fled away secretly, and conueying himselfe from one Lord to another, came at length to Drogio, where hee dwelt three yeeres. After this time finding there certaine Boates of Effortiland, he went thither with them : and growing there very rich, furnished a Barke of his owne, and returned into Friland : where hee made report vnto his Lord of that wealthy Countrey. Zuchumi prepared to send thither : but three dayes before they set forth, this Fisherman dyed, Yet taking some of the Mariners which came with him, in his stead, they prosecuted the Voyage, and encountered, after many dayes, an Iland ; where ten men, of diuers Languages, were brought vnto them, of which they could vnderstand none ; but one of Iland. He told them, That the Iland was called Icaria, and the Knights thereof called Icari, descended of the ancient pedigree of Odalus, King of Scots, who conquering that Iland, left his Sonne there for King, and left them those Lawes, which to that present they retayned. And, that they might keepe their Lawes inuiolate, they would receiue no stranger. Onely they were contented to receiue one of our men, in regard of the Language, as they had done those ten Interpreters.

Zuchumi saying hence, in foure dayes descried Land, where they found abundance of Fowle, and Birds Egges, for their refreshing. The Hauens they called Cape Trinity. There was a Hill, which burning, cast out smoake : where was a Spring, from which issued a certaine water like Pitch, which ranne into the Sea. The people of small stature, wilde, and fearefull, hid themselves in Caves. Zuchumi built there a Citie, and determining to inhabit, sent Antonio backe againe, with the most of his people, to Friland.

This History I haue thus inserted at large, which perhaps, not without cause in some things, may seeme fabulous ; not in the Zemi, which thus writ, but in the Relations which they receiued from others. How soeuer ; the best Geographers are beholden to these Brethren, for that little knowledge they haue of these parts ; of which none before had written : nor since haue there beene any great in-land Discoueries.

Discoueries made by SEBASTIAN CABOT, CORTREALIS, GOMES, with some notes of Greenland.

Omewhat since there hath bene discovered by Gasper Cortereale, a Portugall ; Stephen Gomes, a Spaniard, and Sebastian Cabot : and more by later Pilots, of our Nation, but little of the disposition of the In-land people. Yes, it was thought to be all broken * Ilands, and not inhabited, but at certayne seasons frequented by some Salvages, which come thither to fish. Such as we can, in due order we here bestow.

Sebastian Cabot reported to Ramusio, that in the yeere 1497. at the charge of King Henry the Seuenth, he discouered to the 67. degree and a halfe of Northerly latitude, minding to haue proceeded for the search of Cathay, but by the mutiny of the Mariners was forced to returne. The Map of Sebastian Cabot, cut by Clement Adams, relateth, That Iohn Cabot, a Venetian, and his Sonne Sebastian, set out from Bristol, discovering the Land, called it Prima Vista, and the Iland before it, Saint Iohns. The Inhabitants wear beaſts skinnest. There were white Beares and Stags farre greater then ours. There were plenty of Seales, and Soles about a yard long. He named (sayth Peter Martyr) certaine Ilands Baccalaui, of the store of those fish, which the Inhabitants called by that name, which with their multitudes sometimes stayed his ships. The Beares caught these fish with their clawes, and drew them to land, and ate them. In the time of Henry the Seuenth (William Purchas being then Maior of London) were brought vnto the King three men, taken in the New-found Iland : these were clothed clothed in beasts skins, and did eat raw flesh. But Cabot discovered all along the Coast to that which since is called Florida; and returning, found great preparations for wars in Scotland, by reason whereof, no more consideration was had to this Voyage. Whereupon he went into Spain; and being entertained by the King and Queene, was sent to discover the Coasts of Brazil, and sailed up into the River of Plate, more then six score leagues. He was made Pilot Major of Spain; and after that, Anno 1549. was constituted Grand Pilot of England, by King Edward the Sixt, with the yearly Pension of an hundred three score and sixe pounds, thirtene shillings, foure pence; Where, in the yeere 1553. hee was chiefe dealer and procurer of the Discouery of Russia, and the North-east Voyages; & made by Sir Hugh Willoughby, R. Chancelour, Stephen Burrough, and prosecuted by Pet. Lackman, and others, towards Nova Zemla, Persia, Tartaria, as in Master Hakluyts first Tome appeareth. Perhaps this Voyage of Cabot was the same which is mentioned by Master Robert Thorne in a Treatise of his written 1527. that his Father and Hugh Eliot, a Merchant of Bristol, were the Discoverers of the New-found-lands; and if they had followed their Pilots minde, the Lands of the West Indies had bene ours.

Anno 1500. Gaspard Cortezegalis a Portugall minding new Discoueries, set forth a ship at his owne charge from Lisbon; and laying farre North, at last came to a Land, which for the pleasantnesse thereof he called Greene. The men as he reported, were barbarous, brown-coloured, very swift, good Archers, clothed in Beasts skins. They live in Caves or bafe Cottages, without any Religion, but observe Sooth-sayings. They used Mariages, and were very zealous. Petrus Pasqualis in a Letter concerning this Voyage, sayth, they brought from thence a piece of a gilded Sword, which seemed to be of Italian workmanship: a child also amongst them wore two silver-earrings, which by the workmanship appeared to bee brought from these parts, perhaps belonging to some of Cabots company. Returning into Portugall hee layd thitherward againe Anno 1501. But what became of him, none can tell. His Brother Michael Cortezegalis the next yeere set forth two ships to make search for his Brother; but he also was lost. The King Emanuel grieved herewith, sent to enquire of them; but all in vaine. Their Brother Vasco could haue put himselfe on this adventure, but the King would not suffer him. The name Greene vpon this occasion was withered, and the land was called Terra Cortezegalis. Thus farre Olaus. It reacheth, according to Bertius reckoning to the 60. degree. Let vs come to our owne: For of Steuens 1. Comes little is left vs but a lost.

This Gomes having beene with Magellan a few yeeres before, in his Discouery of the South Sea, enlarged with hopes of new Streights, in the yeere 1523. set forth to search this Northerly passage. But finding nothing to his expectation, hee laded his ship with slaues, and returned. At his returne, one that knew his intent was for the Molucces by that way, inquiring what hee had brought home, was told Eslauos; that is, slaues. Hee fore-stalled with his owne imagination of Cloues, had thought it was said Clauus, and so passed to the Court to carry first newes of this Spicy Discouery, looking for a great reward; but the truth being knowne, caused heretofore great laughter.

Dithmar Bleskens in his Treasisse of Island relateth, that in the yeere 900. the Nobilitie of East Frisia and Breame found that Island, and 200. leagues from thence discovered Greenland, which he saith was named per antiphrasin, of the contrary, for want of greene and pleasant Pastures: and that by Whirl-poolles, and misty darknesse, all their Raule but one ship perished.

William Steer translated a^m Booke; Anno 1608. before translated out of the North Language 1600. for the vie of Henry Hudson, in which is mention of diuers Townes of Greenland, as Skagenfard, an Easterne Dorp or Village, and from thence more Easterly, Bearford, where was great fishing for Whales by the Bishops licence, the benefit redounding to the Cathedral Church: Alababurg Sound, where Fowls and Oxen were plentiful: Fendbrother Hauen, where, in Saint Olafs time, some were drowned, and their ship cast away: Crofses being yet seene on their Graue-stones: Corselought, where, by authority from the Bishop, they hunted for white Beares: from hence Eastward nothing but Ice and Snow. Westward flood Kodesford, a Dorp well built with a great Church, Wattidale, Peteriswicke, Saint Olafs Monastery, and another of Saint Benets Nuns; here were many warme waters, in the Winter intolerably hot, and medicinable. There was also a Church of Saint Nicobolus and many other Parishes and Villages, Desarts; Beares with red patches on their heads, Hawkes, Marble of all colours, great Streames, Nuts, and Agornes in the Hills, Wheate, Sables, Lofhes, &c. He affirmeth that it is not so cold there, as in Island and Norway. But let vs obferue the Discoueries of our owne Countreymen.

Q. III.

Discoveries by Sir MARTIN FROBISHER.

Sir Martin Frobisher = discovereth the first place, as being the first that in the dayes of Queene Elizabeth, sought the North-west Passage in three severall Voyages. The first whereof was written by Christopher Hall; the second, by Dionise Settle; the third by Thomas Ellis; and all in one Discourse by M. George Best: all which briefly what may best befit vs in our Pilgrimage: Sir Martin Frobisher sayled from Blackewall, Tene the fifteenth; and the seventh of July, he had sight of Frisland, but could not get on shore for the abundance of Ice, which was also accompanied with an extreme fogge, as double gard to that land (vncertaine whether to fortifie it, or to imprison them.) The twentieth of July he had sight of and high Land, which he named Queene Elizabeths Fore-land.
 Here was much troubled with Ice: but sayling more Northerly, descryed another Fore-land, with a Great Gut, Bay, or Passage, which he entred, calling it Frobishers Straits, supposing it to be the division of Asia and America. Having entred three-score leagues, hee went on shore, and was encountered with mighty Deere, which ranne at him, with danger of his life. Here had he sight of the Salvages, which rowed to his ship in Boats of Seales skinnies, with a Keele of wood within them, like a Spanisli Shallop, save onely they be flat in the bot-tome, and sharpe at both ends. They eat raw flesh and fish, or rather deuoured the same: they had long blacke haire, broad faces, flat noses, tawny of colour, or like an Oliue (which neyther Sunne or Wind, but Nature it selfe, imprinted on them, as appeared by their Infants, and seemeth to be the generall Liurey of America.) Their apparell was Seales skins: their women were painted or marked downe the cheekes and about the eyes with blue strakes.
 These Salvages intercepted fve of our men, and the Boat: Ours also tooke one of theirs, which they brought into England, where they arrived the second of October 1576. Hee had taken possession of the Countrey in right of the Queene, and commanded his company to bring every one somewhat in witness of the same. One brought a peece of blacke bone, like Sea-coale, which was found to hold Gold in good quantity. Whereupon a second Voyage was made the next yeere 1577. to bring Ore. And coming to those Straits in July, found them in manner shut vp with a long Mure of Ice, which sometime indangered their ships, especially on the nineteenth of that moneth. They found a great dead fish, round like a Porcupis, twelve foot long, having a Horne of two yards, lacking two inches, growing out of the Snout, wreathed and straight, like a Waxe Taper, and might bee thought to be a Sea Unicorn. It was broken in the top, wherein some of the Saylers said they put Spiders, which presently dyed. It was referred as a Jewell by the Queenes commandement, in her Wardrobe of Robes, and is still at Windfore to bee seene. They went on shore, and had some encounter with the Inhabitants, which were of so fierce and terrible resolution, that finding themselves wounded, they leapt off the Rockes into the Sea, rather then they would fall in to the hands of the English. The rest fled. One woman, with her child, they tooke and brought away. They had taken another of the Sauges before. This Sauge in the ship seeing the Picture of his Countreman taken the yeere before, thought him to be alive, and beganne to be offended, that he would not answer him: with wonder thinking, that our men could make men live and dye at their pleasure. But strange were the gestures and behaviour of this man and the woman, when they were brought together; which were put into the same Cabbin, and yet gave such apparant signes of shamellesse and chastity, as might bee a shame to Christians to come so farre short of them.

Where they could have any Trade with the Salvages, their manner of Traffique was to lay downe somewhat of theirs, and goe their way, expecting, that our men should lay downe somewhat in lieu thereof, and if they like of their Mart, they come againe and take it: otherwise, they take away their owne, and depart. They made signes, that their Catchee, or King, was a man of higher stature then any of ours, and that he was carried vpon mens shoulders.

They could not learne what became of the five men they lost the yeere before: onely they found some of their apparell, which made them thinke they were eaten. They laded themselves with Ore, and so returned. And with fifteene Sayle the next yeere 1578, a third Voyage for Discouery, was made by the said Captayne and Generall. Hee went on shore the twentieth of June on Frisland, which was named by them West England, where they espied certayn Tents and People like thole of Meta Incognita. The people fled, and they found in their Tents a boxe of small nayles, Red Herrings, and Boords of Firre-tree well cut, with other things artificially wrought, whereby it appeareth, that they are workmen themselves, or haue trade with others. Some of them were of opinion, This was firme land with Meta Incognita, or with Gronland; whereunto the multitude of Ilands of Ice, betwene that and Meta Incognita induced them. In departing from hence, the Salamander (one of their Ships) being vnder both her Courtes and Boners, happened to strike on a great Whale with her full stemme, with such a blow, that the Ship floode still, and neither stirred forward nor backward. The Whale thereat made a great and hideous noyse, and casting vp his body and tayle, presently ranke vnder water. Within two dayes they found a Whale dead, which they supposed, was this which the Salamander had stricken.

The second of Iuly they entred in with the Straits, the entrance whereof was barred with Mountains of Ice, wherewith the Barke Dennis was sunke, to the hinderance of their projects. For in it was drowned part of a house, which they had intended to erect there for habitation. The men were saued. The other Ships were in very great danger, the Seas mustering Armies of ycie souldiers to oppresse them, vning other naturall stratagems of Fogges and Snowes to further these cruell delignes.

These ycie Ilands seeme to haue bin congeled in the winter further North, in some Bayes, uo Rivers, and with the Summers Sunne being loosed, and broken out of their naturall prisons, offer themselves to all outrages, whereco the swift Currents and cold Windes will conduct them. Strange it is to see their greatnesse, some not lesse then halfe a mile about, and fourescore fathomes about water, besides the vnknowne depth beneath, (the vsuall rule being, that only the seuenth part is extant about the waves:) strange the multitude; strange the deformed shapcs: if this be not more strange, that they sometimes saue with killing, and suffer men to moue their Anchors on them, and to get vpon them to worke against them, for the safeguard of their Ships: That bloody enemies should entertaine them with disports, to walke, leape, shout, fortie miles from any Land, without any Vessell vnder them (according to M. Bess Riddle) and a hundred and ten miles from Land, should present them with running streames of fresh Waters, able to driue a Mill. The Flood was there nine houres, the Ebbe but three. A strong Current ranne Westwards. The people resemble much the Tartars, or rather the Samoeds, in apparell, and manner of liuing. It is colder here in 62. then 9. or 10. degrees more Northerly toward the North-east, which (it seemeth) comes to passe by the Windes, East, and North-east, which from the yce bring so intolerable a cold. The people are excellent Archers; a thing generall throughout America. Besides Sealer-skins, they vse the skines of Deere, Beares, Foxes, and Hares, for apparell, and the calfs also of Fowles sowed together. They weare in Summer the hairy side outward, in Winter, inward; or els goe naked. They shoot at the fish with their darts. They kindle fire with rubbing one stick against another. They vse great blacke Dogs, like Woolues, to draw their Sleds, and a lesse kinde to eate. They haue very thin beards. In the best of Summer, they haue Haile and Snow (sometimes a foote deepe, which freezeth as it fallcs) and the ground frozen three fathome deepe. They haue great store of Fowle, whereof our men killed in one day fifteene hundred. They haue thicker skins, and are thicker of Downe and Feathers then with vs, and therefore must be flayed. The Sunne was not absent about three houres and a halfe: all which space it was very light, so that they might see to write and reade.

Hence is it, that those parts neere the Pole are habitable: the continuance of the Sunnes presence in their Summer, heating and warming with liuely cherishment all Creatures: and in the Winter, by his oblique motion, leauing so long a twilight, and the increased light of the Moone, the Sunnes great and diligent Lieutenant, the brightnesse of the Starres, and whitenesse of the Snow, not suffering them to be quite solemne in darkenesse. The Beasts, Fowles and Fishes, which these men kill, are their houses, bedding, meate, drinke, hote, thread, shoes, apparell, and sayles, and boates, and almost all their riches. Besides their eating all things raw, they will eate grasse and shrubs, like our kine; and morsels of Ice, to satisfy thirst. They haue no hurtfull creeping things but Spiders; and a kinde of Gnat is there very troublesome. Timber they haue none growing, but as the vndermining water doth supplant, bringing them from other places. They are great Enchanters. When their heads ake, they tye a great stone with a string into a stick, and with certaine words effect, that the stone with all a mans force will not be lifted vp, and sometimes seemes as light as a feather, hoping thereby to haue help. They made signes, lying groueling with their faces vpon the ground, making a noyse downward, that they worship the Deuill vnder them. There is no flesh or fish which they find dead (smell it neuer so filthily) but they will eat it, without any other dressing. Their Deere haue skins like Ases, and feet large, like Oxen, which were measured 7. or 8. inches in breadth. There are no Riuer or running Springs, but such as the Sun causeth to come of snow. sometimes they will perboyle their meate a little, in kettles made of beasts skins, with the blood & water which they drinke; & lick the bloody knife with their tongues: This licking is the medicine also for their wounds. They seeme to haue traffike with other Nations: from whom they a small quantity of Iron. Their fire they make of heath & moss. In their leather Boats they row with one oare faster, then we can in our Boats with all our oares. §. 1111.

u It seemeth they are of fresh waters, because the Ice is fresh, and the Sun melting the tops, causeth rills of fresh water to runne downe, which meeting together make a prettie stream.

z The Moone seemeth not neere the Sun in the Polar regions; being in Cancer. See the Relations of the Dutch wintering in Noua Zembla, in the third part of my Pilgrimes, &c. w. He hath reported Tobacco by the Sun with a Glasse at mid night.

Discoveries by JOHN DAVIS, GEORGE WEYMOUTH, and JAMES HALL to the North-Weſt.

- M After John Davis in the yeere 1585. made his first voyage for the North-west discovery, and in 64. degrees, and 15. minutes, they came on shore on an Iland, where they had sight of the Sauages, which seemed to worship the Sunne. For pointing vp to the Sunne with their hands, they would strike their breasts hard with their hands: which being answered with like action of the English, was taken for a confirmed league, and they became very familiar. They first leaped and danced with a kind of Timbrel, which they struck with a stick. Their apparell was of beasts and birds skins, buskins, hose, gloves, &c. Some leather they had which was dressed like the Glouers leather. The 6. of August they discovered land in 66. deg. 40. min. They killed white Beares, one of whose forefeet was fourteen inches broad, so fat, that they were forced to cast it away. It seemed they fed on the grasse, by their dung, which was like to Horse-dung, they heard Dogs howle on the shore, which were tame: They killed one with a Collar about his necke: hee had a bone in his pisse; these it seemed were vied to the Sled, for they found two Sleds.
- The next yeere he made his second voyage, wherein hee found the Savage people tractable. They are great Idolaters, and Witches. They haue many Images which they wear about them, and in their Boats. They found a graue, wherein were many buried covered with Seales skimpes, and a Crosse laid ouer them. One of them made a fire of Turfs, kindled with the motion of a stick in a piece of a board, which had a hole halfe thorow, into which hee put many things, with diuers words and strange gestures: our men supposed it to be a sacrifice. They would haue had one of the English to stand in the smoke, which themselves were bidden to doe, and would not by any means; whercupon one of them was thrust in, and the fire put out by our men. They are very theeuish. They ate raw Fish-grasse and Icc: and drinke salt-water. Heere they saw a whirlwinde take vp the water in great quantitie, fluently mounting it vp into the ayre, three houres together with little intermission. They found in 63. degrees, 8. minutes a strange quantitie of Ice in one entire masse, so bigge, that they knew not the limits thereof, very high, in forme of land, with Bayes and Capes like high-cliffe-land; they sent their Pinnasse to discover it, which returned with information, that it was onely Ice. This was the 17. of Iuly, 1586, and they coasted it till the thirtieth of Iuly. In the 66. deg. 33. min. they found it very hot, and were much troubled with a stinging Fly, called Musquo. All the Lands they saw seemed to bee broken, and Ilands; which they coasted Southwards, till they were in foure and fifty and a halfe, and there found hope of a passage. In the same voyage ^b he had sent the Sun-shine from him in 60. degrees which went to Iceland, and on the seuenth of Iuly had sight of the Gronland, and were hindered from harbour by the Ice. They coasted it till the last of Iuly. Their houses neere the Sea-side were made with pieces of wood, crossed ouer with poles, and covered with earth. Our men played at foot-ball with them of the Iland.

- The third voyage was performed the next yeere, 1587. wherein Mr. Davis discovered to the 73. degree, finding the Sea all open, and forty leagues betwene land and land, hauing Gronland (which hath an Iland neere it to the West, for the loathsome view of the shore covered with snow, without wood, earth, or grasse to be seene, and the irksome noise of the Ice, called Disolation) in 59. on the East, and America on the West. The Spanish Fleet, and the vintimely death of Master Secretarie Walſingham, (the Epitome and summary of Humane worthinesse) hindered the prosecution of these intended Discoveries.
- In the yeere 1600. Captain George Weymouth made a voyage of Discovery to the North-west, with two Kij-boats, set forth by the Mulcouny Company: saw the South parts of Gronland, and had water in 120. fadome, blacke, as thick as puddle, and in a little space cleere, with many such enterchanges. The breach of the Ice made a noise as a thunder-clap, and ouerturning had sunke both their Vessels, if they had not with great diligence prevented it. They had three of Fogges, some freezing as they fell. In 68. deg. 53. min. they encountered an Inlet forty leagues broad, and sailed West and by South in the same, 100. leagues.
- James Hall* A. N. 1605. sailed to Gronland from Denmarke, and had like encounters of Ice, yielding in the breach no lesse noise, then if five Canons had bene discharged with people also like those, which in Froehlers Voyage are mentioned; they make sailes of guts sowed together, for their fishing Boats, and leceiued the Seales with Seales-skin garments.
- Gronland is high, Mountainous, full of broken Ilands alongst the Coasts, Riuers nauigable, and good Bayes, full of fish. Betwene the Mountaines are pleasant Plaines and Vallies, such as a man would scarce beleue. He saw store of Fowle; no beasts but blacke Foxes, and Deere. The people seemed a kind of Samoydes, wandering in Summer by companies for Hunting and Fishing, and removing from place to place with their Tents and Baggage: they are of reasonable stature, browne, active, warlike, eat raw meat, or a little perboyed with blood, Oyle, or a little water which they drinke: their apparell, beasts of fowles skines; the hairy or feathered side outward in Summer, in the Winter inward: their arrowes and darts with two feathers, and a bone-head: they haue no wood but drift: they worship the Sunne.

Anna 1606. He made a second Voyage thither: found their Winter houses built with Whales bones, covered with Earth: and Vaults two yards deepe, vnder the Earth, square. They call Greenland in their language Secanunga. Vp within the Land they haue a King carried on mens shoulders. The next yeere he sailed thither the third time: and in a fourth Voyage 1612. was slaine there by a Saugie, in reuenge (as was thought) for some of the people before shipped from thence. They haue Hares white as snow, with long furre: Dogs which liue on Fish, whole fishes, as also of their Foxes, are bone. Their Summer worke is to dry their Fish on the Rocks. Euery one, both man and woman, haue each of them a Boat, made with long pieces of Firre, covered with Seales skins, sewed with sinewes or guts, about twenty foot long, and two and a halfe broad, like a shuttle, so light, that one may carry many of them at once: so swift, that no ship is able with any winde to hold way with them, and yet vfe but one oare which they hold by the middle, in the midst of their Boat, broad at both ends, where with they row forwards, and backwards at pleasure. Generally they worship the Sunne, to which they pointed at our approach (saith Baffin) striking on their breasts, and crying Ishut, not commaing nere till you doe the same. They bury in out-lands on the tops of Hills in the heapes of stones to preferre from the Foxes, making another graue hard by, wherein they place his Bow and Arrowes, Darts, and other his ventils. They bury them in their apparell, and the cold keeps them from putrefaction.

Anna 1606, Mr Iohn Knight made a North-west voyage, lost his Ship, sunke with Ice, and was with three more of his company surprised by the Sauges: of whose language hee wrot a pretty Dictionary, which I haue seene with Mr. Hakluyt.

Of King JAMES his Newland, alias, Greenland, and of the Whale and Whale-Fishing.

Will not heere beginne with records of Discoveries in these parts written two thousand yeeres since; out of which Mr. Doctor Doe is reported to haue gathered diuers Antiquities, antiquated by Antiquitie, and rotten with age: nor to shew that King Arthur possessed as farre as Greenland; nor that Sir Hugh Willoughby discovered hitherto as some coniecture: but content my selfe with later Discoveries and Observations. Much hath been spent both of Cost, Industrie, and Argument about finding a more compendious way to the Indies by the Northwest, and by the North-East, and by the North. Of the first somewhat hath been spoken. Of the second were the Voyages of Master Stephen Barrough, Pet, and Lacman, our Countrey-men, and of the Hollanders in the yeere 1594. and the three following before by vs mentioned in a due place, as appertaining to Asia: for they found themselves by Astronomical observation in a hundred and twelue Degrees five and twenty minutes of Longitude, and threescore and sixteene of Latitude in the place where they wintered. They had touched more Northerly in some parts (as is thought) of Greene-Land, sailing along by the Land from fourecore Degrees eleven minutes, vnto Noua Zemla, I omit their red Geefe in one place of this Voyage, their azure-coloured Ice in another place, and the losse of their Ship in the Ice which constrained them to set vp a house to Winter in that Land of Desolation. This building they beganne about the 27. of September (Stile Nane) the cold euen then kissing his New-come Tenants so eagerly, that when the Carpenters did but put a naile in their mouths (after their wont) the Ice would hang thereon, and the blood follow at the pulling out. In December their fire could not heat them, their Sack was frozen, and each man forced to melt his share thereof before he could drinke it, their melted Beere drinking like water. They sought to remedie it with Sea-cole fire, as being hotter then the fire of Wood (which they had store of, though none there growing, by drifts) and stopped the chimney and doores to keep in the heat, but were suddenly taken with a frowning, which had soone consumed them, if they had not presently admitted the aire to their succor. Their shoes did freeze as hard as horns on their feet, and as they sat within doores before a great fire, seeming to burne on the fore-side, behinde at their backs they were frozen white, the Snow meane-whiles lying higher then the house, which sometimes in clearer weather they endeavored to remoue, cut out steps, & so ascended out of their house as out of a Vault or Seller. They were forced to vse (besides store of clothes and great fires) stones heated at the fire and applied to their feet and bodies, and yet were frozen as they lay in their Cabins: yea the cold not only Raid their Clocke, but insulted ouer the fire in some extremities, that it almost cast no heat; so that putting their feet to the fire, they burnt their hofe, and discerned that also by the smell, before they could feele the heat. They supposed that a barrell of water would haue been wholly frozen in the space of one night, which you must interpret of their twelue houres glasse; for other wise they saw no Sunne after the third of November to the 24. of January, reckoning by the new Calendar; a thing strange to be without the Sunne fittie dayes before the Solstice, which happened after their account on December 23. and yet within forty one dayes after might see the vpper circle of the Sun-ting about the Horizon; which made great question, whether their Eyes had deceiued them, or the Computation of time in that long Night: which both being found otherwise by their obseruation and experience, caused no lesse wonder whether this timely approach should be attributed to the reflexion by the water, or the not absolute roundnesse of the Earth in those parts, or the false accounting of the Solstice (or, which some affirme, the falshood of their calculations.) But I leaue this to Philosophers. Our Author affirms, that when the Sunne had left them, they saw the Moone continually both Day and Night, neuer going downe when it was in the highest Degree, the twilight also remaining many dayes, and againe they might see some day-light sixteene dayes before they saw the returne of the Sunne. The Beares which had held them besieged, and often endangered them, forsooke them and returned with the Sunne; the white Foxes all that while visited them, of which they tooke many whole fesh was good Venison to them; and their skins in the linings of their Caps good remedies against that extremitie of Cold. As for their feet, they vsed Pattents of wood, with sheepe-skinnes above, and many socks or soles vnderneath: they vsed also shooes of Rogge and Felt. These Beares were very large and cruell, some of them yielding skins thirteene foot long, and a hundred pounds of fat, which serued them for Oyle in their Lampes, the fesh they durst not eat; some of them forstearing their whole skinnes after they had eaten of the Liuer of one of these eaters; which detourne any thing, not sparing their owne kinde. For the Hollanders hauing killed one Bear, another carried it a great way ouer the rugged Ice in his mouth in their sight, and fell to eating it; they made to him with their weapons, and chased him from his purchase, but found it halfe eaten, and then foure of them could scarcely carry the other halfe, when as the whole body had been very lightly carried in his fellowes mouth. As for the thin Diet which these Hollanders endured, and other discommodities, together with their returne in two open Scutes, wherein they sailed about a thousand miles, after ten moneths continuance in this desolate habitation; their dangers in the Ice which somewhat besieged them like whole Tents, Townes, and Fortifications; and other the particulars of this Voyage, I referre to the Author himselfe. Here I remember thus much for Greene-lands sake, on which in Nauigation they are said to haue touched. How euer that be, they continued no trade nor Discouerie thither, till the English diuers yeeres after had made a new Discouerie, and found there a profitable Whale-fishing.

In the yeere 1607, Hen. Hudson discouered these parts to the Latitude of fourescore, then naming a point of Land, Hackleys Head-land; which name it still beareth. And Jonas Poole in the yeere 1610. was set forth by the Muscouy Company in the Amitie, and discouered diuers Sounds and Harbours here, with the Sea-Horses he killed, and other things found on shore, giuing such good Content to the Adventurers, that He was by them employed the next yeere in the Elizabeth, with Master Steven Bennet in the Mary Margaret, both which Ships were vnfortunately cast away; the Men and part of the goods were brought home by Master Marmaduke then there in a Ship of Hull.

In the yeere 1612. were set forth three Ships from Holland, and one from Biscay, all hauing English Pilots, besides two sent thither by the Company, called the Sea-Horse and the Whale, vnder the Masters before mentioned. In the yeere 1613. many Ships were thither sent from France, Biscay, Holland, so that the Company addressed thither seuen warlike ships vnder the Command of Master Beniamin Ioseph, who without bloudshed disappointed those Strangers, ready to reape that which others had sowne, and either had not at all discouered, or wholly giuen ouer the businesse. The next yeere 1614. eleuen good Ships, and two Pinasses, were employed to Greenland, and three more not then ready, appointed to follow vnder the same Generall, which Voyage is in my hands, communicated to mee by my industrious Friend, a skilful Mariner and Discouerer both in thele and other parts, William Baffin, entertained in this Fleet. But the particulars would be (howeouer profitable to our Mariner tedious to our ordinarie Reader. They then discovered wel-neere to 81. For beyond that degree, our Author beleeveth not that any hath bene. The names of divers places, as Saddle land, Barren land, Beare land, Red Goose land, all betwixt 80. and 81. and Sir Thos: Smiths Inlet, Maulin Sound, Faire Haven, Sir Thomas Smiths Bay, Ice Sound, Bell Sound, and other places on or neere the Greater Ile of supposed Continent, I forbear to recite, as not intending to intrude the Mariner so much as the Scholler. This yeere 1616. were sent thither ten ships, which killed about a hundred Whales, as Master Thomas Sherwin employed therein, related to me. Greenland is now almost altogether discovered to bee an land, or rather many lands and broken grounds.

In the Greenland voyage 1611. from Cherry land toward Greenland, they met with a banke of Ice fortie leagues long: and ranne almost alongst another hundred and twenty Leagues. At their first comming, all was covered with Snow, at their departure the tops of the Hills and Plaines had received a new livery of greene Moll, and a little grasse. The Aire was milke like night, They found many fat Deere, many white Beares, with white, gray, and dunne Foxes. There was a bird called an Allen, which beats the other birds till they vomit their prey for him to devour: and then dismember them with little meat in their bellies, or feathers on their backs. They finde Morfes, Sea-Vnicornes hornes, white Partridges, Wilde-geese, but not a bush or tree.

I might here adde divers Voyages to Cherry land, where they have thousands of Morfes, the Teeth and Oyle whereof yeld them no small commoditie. There also are many Beares. I might here recreate your wearied eyes with a hunting spectacle of the greatest chafe which Nature yeldeth, I meane, the killing of the Whale. When they espy him on the top of the water, (which he is forced to for to take breath) they row toward him in a Shallop, in which the Harponier stands ready, with both his hands to dart his Harping-iron, to which is fastened a line of such length, that the Whale (which suddenly, feeling himselfe hurt, seeketh to the hottome, may carry it down with him, being before fitted, that the Shallop be not there with in danger; comming vp againe they againe strike him with Launces made for that purpose about twelue foot long, the iron eight thereof, and the blade eighteene inches: the Harping-iron principally serving to fasten him to the Shallop: and thus they hold him in such pursuit, till after streames of water, and next that of blood, cast vp into the Aire and Water (as angry with both Elements, which have brought thither such weak hands to his destruction) he at last yeldeth his blaine carcase as meed to the conquerors. They tow him to the Ship with two or three Shallops made fast to one another: and then floating at the sterne of the Ship, they cut the blubber or fat from the flesh, in pieces three or foure foot long, which after at shore are cut smaller, and boiled in copper; which done, they take them out & put them into wicker baskets, which are set in Shallops halfe full of water, into which the Oyle runneth, and is thence put into butts. This Whale-fishing is yearly now vied by our men in Greenland, with great profit. The ordinarie length of a Whale is sixty foot, and not so huge as Olau hath written, who maketh the Mors also as bigge as an Elephant.

The proportion of this huge Leviathan deserves description, as one of the greatest Wonders of the Land in the deepe, whereon Himselfe so much insisteth (Job 41. 12.) that he will not conceale his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion. The Whale that here we speake of, is the Great Bay-Whale: for there are many other kinds: the Trompe which hath two Trunkes or breathing holes on his head; whereas the Bay-Whale hath but one) whose braines are said to be the Sperma Cete; the Imbarie, which hath a Fin on his backe dangerous to boats, exceeding swift, and little profitable, besides other kinds. This is the most simple and vssually the greatest and fatter, the more easily taken. His head is the third part of him; his mouth (O hellish wide (sixteene foot in the opening; and yet out of that belly of Hell yelding much to the ornaments of our womens backs; the Whale-bones or Finnes being noother then the rough and inner part of the mouth, closing in the shutting thereof, as the fingers of both hands within each other. Of these Finnes are five hundred from the length of fourteen foot or more in lesse and lesse proportions; hee hath no teeth, his meat bee sucheth: his tongue is monstrous great, of deformed forme like a Wool-sacke, about eight Tunne weight, and one part thereof vied to this purpose, yeldeth from sixe to eleuen Hogs-heads of Oyle. and that with huge bones on each side, not admitting it to stretch wider. His body is round, fourteene or fixteene foot thicke: his Pile hangs from him as a Beasts: in Generation they draw to shallow waters neere the shore, and in the Act loyne belly to belly as is also said of the Elephant. In their engendering season, much of that matter stoteth on the water. They are Swallow-tailed; the extremes being twenty foot distant. They haue but one yong at a time, which is brought forth as in bealts, (Master Sherwin hath liene them in the belly being ripped) about the bignesse, but longer, of a Hog's-head: The Female hath two breasts and teats, with white milke in them, not bigger then a mans head, wherewith the suckleth the yong, whereof she, is the Mors alio, is very tender. They killed one, and could not get the yong one from it. There hath been made seuen and twenty Tunne, and a pipe of Oyle out of one Whale: ordinarily fixteene Tunnes, but much is wasted for halite in that store. The English are growne as expert in this businesse as the Biscainer. They neuer lost man in this action, but one onely this last yeere.

Of Hudsons discoveries and death.

- 20  Henry Hudson, 1607, discovered further North toward the Pole, then perhaps any before him. He found himselfe in 80. deg. 23. minutes, where they felt it hot, and drank water to coole their thirst. They saw land (as they thought) to 82. and further: on the shore they had Snow, Morfes teeth, Deeres hornes, Whale-bones, and footing of other Beasts, with a streame of fresh-water. The next yeere 1608. he set forth on a Discouery to the North-east, at which time they met, as both himselfe and Suet haue testified, a Mermaid in the Sea, scene by Thomas Hills, and Robert Rainer. Another voyage he made 1609. and coasted New-found-land; and thence along to Cape Cod. His last and fatal voyage was 1610. which I mentioned in my former edition, relating the same as Hesilius Gerardus had guided me, by his card and reports, who affirmeth that he 30 followed the way which Captaine Winwood had before searched by Lumleys inlet, in 61. degrees, so passing thorow the strait to 50. &c. But hauing since met with better instructions, both by the helpe of my painfull friend Master Hakluis, * (to whose labours these of mine are so much indebted) and specially from Him, who was a speciall setter forth of the voyage, that learned and industrious Gentleman Sir Dudley Digges (how willingly could I here lose my selfe in a parenthess of due praises? to whom these studies haue seemed to descend by inheritance in diuers Descents, improued by proper industry, employed to publike good both at home and in Discoueries and Plantations abroad, and for my particular I but why should I vse words, vnquall pay to him, vn-quall stay to thee?) from Him, I say, to great a furtherer of the North-west Discouerie, and of your Discouerer the poore Pilgrim and his 40 Pilgrimage, hauing receiued full relations, I haue bene bold with the Reader to insert this Voyage more largely.

In the yeere 1610. Sir Tho. Smith, Sir Dudley Digges, and Master Iohn Wostenholme, with other their friends, furnished out the said Henry Hudson, to try if through any of those Inlets, which Danis saw but durst not enter, on the Westerne side of Fretum Danis, any passage might be found to the other Ocean, called the South-Sea. There Barke was named the Discouerie. They passed by Island, and saw Mount Hecla cast out fire (a noted signe of foule weather towards; others conceiue themselves and deceive others with I know not what Purgatorie fables herof confuted by Arngrin Ionas an Illander, who reproceth this and many other dreames related by Authors, saying, that from the yeere 1558. to 1592. it neuer cast forth any flames) they left the name to one harbour in Island, Louisy Bay: they had there a Bath hot enough to scald a fowle. They raised Gronland the fourth of Iune, and Desolation after that, whence they plyed North-west among Ilands of Ice, whereon they might runne and play, and filled sweet water out of Ponds therein: some of them aground in fixe or seuen score fadome water, and on duers of them Bares, and Partriches. They gaue names to certaine Ilands, of Gods mercy, Prince Henries forland, K. Iames his Cape, Q. Annes Cape. One morning in a Fogge they were carried by a set of the Tyle from the N. E. into one of the Inlets above mentioned, the depth whereof and plying forward of the Ice, made Hudson hope it would proue a through-tare. After he had sailed herein by his computation 300. leagues West, he came to a small strait of two leagues ouer, and very deepe water, through which he passed betweene two Headlands, which he called, that on the South, Cape Wostenholme. the other to the N. W. Digges Island in deg. 62. 44. minutes, into a spacious Sea, wherein he layed about a hundred leagues South, confidently proud that he had won the passage.

Hudson wintering.

A strange crew.

These were the worst of the west of the Company.

A flood from the West, a very probable argument of an open passage to the South Sea. And to are their weapons, and arts, being far beyond other Sauvages.

See his Relation of the third part of my Pilgrims who shew many for these parts. A Such they vie in laua.

But finding at length by shole water that he was embayed, he was much distracted therewith, and committed many errors, especially, in resolving to winter in that desolate place, in such want of necessarie provision. The third of November, he moored his Barke in a small Cooe, where they had all undoubtedly perished, but that it pleased God to send them several kinds of kinds of Fowle; they killed of white Partridges above a hundred and twentie dozen: These I let them at the Spring, and other succeeded in their Place, Swan, Goose, Teale, Ducke, all easie to take; besides the blessing of a Tree, which in December blossomed, with leaves greene and yellow, of an Aromaticall saour, and being boyled, yeilded an Oyle substance, which proved an excellent Salve, and the decoction being drunke, proved as wholesome a Potion, whereby they were cured of the Scorbute, Sciaticas, Crampes, Conuulsions, and other diseases which the coldness of the Climate bred in them. At the opening of the yeere also, there came to his Ships side such abundance of Fish of all sorts, that they might therewith haue fraught themselves for their returne, if Hudson had not too desperately pursued the Voyage, neglecting this oportunitie of storing themselves with fish, which hee committed to the care of certaine careless, dissolute Villaines, which in his absence conspired against him; in few dayes, the fish all forsooke them. Once a Savage visited them, who for a knife, glasse, and beads giuen him, returned with Beuers skins, Sealeskins, and a Sled. At Hudson's returne, they set layle for England. But in few dayes, their victuals being almost spent, and hee out of his despaire, letting fall some words of letting some on shore, the former Conspirators (the chiefe whereof, was Hen. Greene, one of the ther allowed Company, but taken in by Hudson himselfe; and one Wilson) entered his Cabin in the night, and forced him the Master, together with his sonne Iohn Hudson, The Widowes, Ann. Laidlo, Sidraob Faner, Ad. Moore, Hen. King, Mic. But, to take Shallop and lette their fortune. But see what vice itie can doe in the most desperate tryals: One Philip Staefe, an Ipswich man, who according to his name, had beene a principall stafe and stay to the weaker and more enfeebled courages of his Companions in the whole action, lightening and enlightening their drooping darkened spirits, with sparkes from his owne resolution; their best Purueytor, with his Peece on shore, and both a skilfull Carpenter and lusty Mariner on board; when hee could by no perswasions, seasoned with teares, diuert them from their diuellish designs, notwithstanding, they entreated him to stay with them, yet chose rather to commit himselfe to Gods mercy in the forlorne Shallop, then with such Villaines to accept of likelier hopes.

A few dayes after, their victuals being spent, the ship came aground at Digger Island, and so continued diuers houres, till a great flood (which they by this accident tooke first notice of) came from the Westward, and set them on floe, vpon the Clifles of this Island they found abundance of Fowles tame, whereof they tooke two or three hundred, and seeing a greas long Boat with forty or fifty Sauges vpon the shore, they went on Land; and tooke some of their toys, had Deeres skines well dressed, Morle-teeth, and some few Fures. One of our men went on land to their Tents, one of theirs remaining for hostage, in which Tents they liued by hordes, men, women, and children; they are bigge-boned, broad-faced, flat-nosed, and small-footed, like the Tartars: their Apparell of skines, but wrought all very handsomely, euen Gloues and Shooes. The next morning, Greene would needs goe on shore with some of his chiefe companions, and that vnarmed, notwithstanding, some aduised and intreated him the contrary. The Sauges entertained him with a cunning ambush, and at the first onset shot this mutinous Ringleader into the heart, (where first, those those Monsters of treacherie and bloody crueltie, now payed with the like, had bene conceived) and Wilson his brother in euill, had the like bloody inheritance, dying swearing and cursing: Perse, Thomas, and Moter, dyed a few dayes after of their wounds. Every where can Diuine Iustice finde Executioners.

The Boat by Gods blessing, with some hurt men escaped in this manner. One Abacucke 50 Pricket (a servant of Sir Dudley Digger, whom the Mariners had saved, in hope to procure his Master, to worke their pardon) was left to keepe the Shallop, where hee late in a gowne, sickle and lame, at the sterne: vpon whom, at the instant of the ambush, the leader of all the Sauges leapt from a Rooke, and with a strange kinde of weapon, a indented, broad and sharpe, of bright Steele, ruetted into a handle of Morfe-tooth; gaue him diuers cruel wounds, before hee could from vnder his gowne draw a small Scottish Dagger, wherewith at one thrust into his side, he killed this Savage, and brought him off with the Boat, and some of the hurt company that got to him by swimming. Being got aboard with a small weak and wounded company, they made from this Island vnto the Northerne Continent, where they saw a large opening of the Sea North-West-ward, and had a great flood, with such a large Blow, as they say, is no where but in the Ocean. From hence, they made all possible haffe home-wards, passing the whole Straits, and to home, without euer striking the ice or any other

let, which might easily haue made it impossible. For their best sustenance left then, was Sea-weeds fryed with Candles ends; and the skins of the Fowles they had eaten. Some of them men were starued, the rest all so weake, that onely one could lye along vpon the Helme and sterre. By Gods great goodnesse, the sixt of September 1611. they met with a Fisherman of Foy, by whose meanes they came safe into England.

§. VII.

Of BYTTONS and BASSINS late Discoveries.

His newes so incouraged the Aduenturers, that by the gracious assistance of that Starre of the North (Illustrious Sonne of Brittaines brightest Sunne, and in his presence shining with beauteous beames in this, and euen to that further Hemisphere; but with speedier setting, raised aboue the Sunne, and Spheres, and Starres, to discover the Straits, and passage to a better World, there to shine with light vnpeakeable, in the fruition of that light inaccessible, with the Father of Lights and Sonne of Righteousnesse: For how could a worldly Kingdome, though the Kingdome of the World, deserue so good, so great a spirit to rule it? but these my words are too short an Epitaph; his owne Name, euen after death, speaks more, and proclaimeth in a few Letters all humane Greatnesse, Great Brittaines great hope, PRINCE HENRY) the Aduenturers I say (whom my weaker eyes, dazzled with this greater Light, could scarce recover) by this Princely assistance, pursued the action in more Royall fashion, with greater shipping, vnder the command of a Worthy Sea-man, seruanto Prince HENRY, Captaine Thomas Bytton, whose Discoverie of a great Continent, called by him New-Wales, and other accidents of his Voyage, I haue not leene: onely I haue seene a Charr of those discovered places, and I heare that he passed Hudsons Straits, and leauing Hudsons Bay to the South, sailed aboue two hundred Leagues South-West-Ward, ouer a Sea aboue fourecore fathoms deepe, without sight of Land, which at length, hee found to be another great Bay. And after much misery of sicknesse in his wintering, notwithstanding he was forced to quit the great ship, hee beat and searched the whole Bay, with very great industrie; then backe againe almost to Diggers Islands: neere which hee found the coming in of the great and strong tyde from the North-West, which feeds both those huge Bayes. This seemed strange; that in this Voyage, as he searched many Leagues East & West, he found the variation of the Compasse to rise and fall in an admirable proportion, as if the true Magneticall Pole might be discovered.

The coming in of the flood from the North-west, giuing them hopes of a passage, in March 1614. Captaine Gibbins was employed on this Discoverie (so was the ship called) but without any great discoverie that I haue heard of. Peruiting in their purpose, the next yeere Robert Bylby, one which had bene in three former Voyages, was sent forth in that ship as Master, and William Bassin his Mate, with foureteene other Men and two Boyes; which leauing England about the latter end of March, stayed at Silly till the seventh of April; and weretore to put backe to Padstow in Cornwall: but weighing Anchor on the nineteenth, on the sixt of May, saw land on the Coast of Groen-land; on the East-side of Cape Farewell. On the first of Iune, they came into a good Harbour, on the N.W. side of the Island of Resolution (which is at the entrance into Hudsons Strait) in 61. degrees, 45. minutes. On the right, they came to Savage Islands (in 62. degrees, 30. minutes; threescore Leagues from the entrance) so called of some people, they found in a Cinnow; they were at their Tent also, and found among other things a little bagge with many small images of men therein, and one of a woman with a child at her backe. The Tents were couered with Seales skinnes, and about them some forty Dogs ranne vp and downe, most of them muzzled as bigge as Mungrel-Matthues, of a brended blacke colour, looking almost like Wolves: these they vied to draw their sleds ouer the ice, with collars and furniture fitting, their sleds also being shod or lined with fish-bones. The people are like those in Groenland, but not so neare and ciuill, ranging vp and downe, as their fishing is in season; vn certaine where they keepe in Winter. The Master was confident in this and other places, that the flood came from the West, which Bassin saith, by the floating of the ice, he obserued on land, to be contrarie: onely the Islands cause by their diuers points, differing Sects and Eddies. On the two and twentieth of Iune, He obserued the Longitude, hauing faire sight of the Sunne and Moone, and found himselfe by Astronomicall account, 74. degrees, 5. minutes West from the Meridian of London: which if some studious Mariners would praise in their remote Voyages, we should haue a farre more perfect Geographie. I omit their icie sieges,

Sir Th. Bytton
knewes confident of a passage by the North West into the South Sea, as appears by his Relation in the end of the fourth Booke of the third part of my Pilgrims. Where also he Ensigns his Map the letters of Mr. Lock, and Iun del uca, be testimonies of Th. Cowles &c. further to proue the same.

b This was after found otherwise, the error growing by his meeting of Bylby, and taking of the flood, at this land, which hee said was eight of the clock, whereas it was about eleven, Bassin &c. Relat. v. Bassin.

sieges, sometimes scarcely leaving them space to dip a pail of water. They called one place in 65. latitude, and 85. degrees and 20. minutes long. Cape Comfort, for the hopes they apprehended of a passage, which soone they found to be frustrate. Hence they passed to Sea-borse Cape, (so named of the plenty of Morfes) and fifteene leagues thence to Noisingham Island, and thence to Digby's Island, in all those places obseruing the flood come from the South-east, Captaine Burton and Hudson's men being all deceived, as this our Authour affirmeth: other Ilands sometimes keeping off the force of the tyde, or by eddies, causing an obscurity and their error. We will therefore leaue that spacious Sea called Buttons Bay, with the great Ilands, and some places not yet perfectly discouered, within and beyond that Strait of Hudson, and come to Baffins Bay, so discouered to be.

This last yeere 1616. at the charges of the worthy Aduenturers before mentioned, in the same ship, by the same Master, & the same, both their Pilot and ours. The first land they saw, after their departure from England, was in Fretum Danis on the Coast of Greenland, in 65. degrees 20. minutes. On the fourteenth of May, where they saw people. But they played to the North, till they were in 70. degrees 20. minutes. The people fled from them. Here they tooke in fresh water, but doubted the passage, because the rydes were small, not above eight or nine foot, and vncertaine, the flood from the South: On the six and twentieth day, they found a dead Whale floating, and got from the roote of her mouth 200. of those fyennes or Whale-bones, but could not get the rest by reason of foule weather following. On the first of June, they put in among diuers Ilands; the people forsooke their Seale-skin-tents and fled; some women they found, whom they kindly intrated, giuing them pieces of Iron, for which they returned Seales skins and the fat or blubber of them: as for our meate, tasting, they would not swallow it. They called the place the Womens Ilands, in 72. degrees and 45. minutes, the flood comes from the South: and the most of their food is the flesh of Seales dried and eaten raw: they cloth themselves with the skins, whereof they also make coverings for their Tents and Boats, dressing them very well. The Women differ in their apparell from the Men, razing their skins with sharpe Instruments, and putting thereon an indelible blacke colour, marking their faces with diuers blacke lines. They haue a kind of deuotion to the Sunne, which continually they will point vnto, and strike their hand on their breast, Crying, Tyout. They bury their dead on the side of the Hills where they liue, which is commonly on small Ilands, making a pile of stones ouer them, yet not so close but that the corps may be discerned the piercing ayre keeping them from stinke: their Dogges also they bury in the same manner. They came to other Ilands in 74. degrees, 4. minutes, which vie to be much frequented with people in the latter part of the yeere, as it seemeth by the houses made of stones and turfe, round like Ouens, with doores to the South: but they were not yet come, June the ninth. The flood riseth not above five or sixe foot; the ebbe runnes stronger by the abundance of melted Snow.

On the fifteenth day, in the latitude of 73. degrees 45. minutes, came forty two of the Inhabitants to them in Boats, and gaue them Seales skins, and many pieces of the bone or horne of the Sea-Vnicorne, and shewed them pieces of Morfes teeth. They received in exchange small pieces of Iron, Glasse, Beades, and the like: thus they did foure times: the place they called Horne Sound.

On the third of July, they passed by a faire Cape in 76. degrees 35. minutes, which they named Sir Dudley Digby's Cape. Twelve leagues beyond is Wostenholme Sound, a fit place for killing of Whales. Proceeding a litte further, they found themelues embayed. One place they called Whale Sound of their abundance in 77. degrees and 30. minutes. Haklows Ilands neere, and Sir Thomas Smith's Sound in 78. degrees. The Compass there varieth about 56. degrees to the Westward, so that a North-east and by East of the Compass is the true North; which hath not bene obserued so much varied in any part of the World. Putting off to the West side of the Bay, they gaue names to Alderman Lones his Sound, and that of Sir James Lancaster: and in their returne recovered their sick men, by Scurvy-grasse or Cochlearia (which they found on a little Island in great plenty) boyled in Beere, and eaten in Salads with Orpine and Sorrell, and so returned home: Thus wee see, Fretum Danis is no passage but a Bay, and vncertaine, what that of Hudson is, the most of which is discouered impassible. Yet, Hopes are not quite extinct: we must expect Gods pleasure, and future Discoveries for this passage. It seemes that most of all those Seas in the North parts beyond New-foundland are intermixed with Ilands, a Maze and Labyrinth to the Discouerer. In this Voyage and Bay they saw many of those fishes called Sea-Vnicornes, such as wee haue mentioned in Sir Martin Frobersher's Navigation: some of which fishes are twelue or sixteene foot long, the horne seeming to hold the proportion of two thirds in length to their bodies: and of these, it seemes are those in Venice and other places, relished as great Iewels. Greater Iewels are those Merchants and Mariners, which to the glory of our Nation, spare no cost, and spare no dan-danger in these attempts: Resolute, gallant, glorious attempts! which thus seek to tame Nature, where she is most vnbri'dled, in those Northeasterly, Northwesterly & Northerly Borders (where she shewes her selfe as Borderer indeed) and to subdue her to that government and subiection, which God ouer all blessed for euer, hath imposed on all sensible creatures to the nature of Man, resembling in one Image and abridgment, both God and the World, consisting of a spirituall and bodily, visible and inuisible subsistence. How shall I admire your Heroike courage, yee Marine Worthies beyond all names of worthinesse! that neyther dread so long, eyther presence or absence of the Sunne; nor those foggie mysts, tempestuous winds, cold blasts, Snowes and Haile in the Ayre: nor the vnequall Seas, which might amaze the hearer, and amaze the beholder, where the Tritons and Neptunes selfe would quake with chilling feare, to behold such monstrous Icie Ilands, renting themselves with terror of their owne masses, and displaying otherwise both the Seas souereigntie, and the Suns hottest violence, mustering themselves in those watery Plaines, where they hold a continual ciuill warre, and rushing one vpon another, make winde and waues gye backe; seeming to rent the cares of others, whiles they rent themselves with crashing and splitting their corsegealed Armour; nor the riggid ragged face of the broken Lands, sometimes towering themselves in a lofty height, to see if they can find refuge from these snowes and col's that continually beate them, sometimes hiding themselves vnder some hollow Hills or Cliffes, sometimes sinking and shrinking into Valleys, looking pale with snowes, and falling in frozen and dead frowns; * sometimes breaking their necks into the Sea, rather embracing the waters, then the Ayres, cruelty; and otherwhile with horrible Earthquakes, in heat of indignation shaking asunder, to shake off this cold and heavy yoke. Great God, to whom all names of greatnesse are little, and lesse then nothing, let mee in silence admire and worship thy greatnesse are little, and lesse then nothing, let mee in silence admire and worship thy greatnesse, that in this little Heart of man (not able to serue a Kite for a breake-stail) hath placed such greatnesse of spirit, as the World is too-little to fill: only Thy selfe the Prototype, and Samplar of this Modell, canst with thine owne selfe, becomming all in all vnto vs, fill and more then satiasie. Thee I beseech, to prosper in this and like attempts, this Nation of ours, that as in greater light then to Others; thou hast given vs thy Sonne, so with him thou wilt give all things; even this among other blessings; that thy Virgin Truth, by Virginian Plantation or Northerly Discouery, may triumph in her conquests of Indian infidelity, maugre the brags of that Adulteresse, that vaunteth her selfe to be the only Darling of God and Nature.

y As borderers are most vnuallly and iustly: so in their borders of the World, the power of Natures great Officers, the Sun, &c. is least lesene.

* These things agree with the Relations of those parts, which tell of Barzquaks, bre:king of Cliffes, &c. Batus a zealous and flagitious Catholicke, vnder the disguise of speeches of this discouery, Ma pare, que la Nature si siopposée à gheretice, a différencé, para. 1. lib. 3.

English Discoueries and Plantations in Newfoundland.

Eauing those vnknowne and frozen Lands and Seas; (although there is yet knowne no frozen * Sea, otherwhile then as you have heard) let vs draw somewhat neerer the Sunne, gently marching, as the situation of Regions shall direct vs, lest if we should suddenly leape from one extremitie to another, wee should rather exchange then auoid danger. And here we haue by Land Siguenay, and many Countries of Canada, which the French haue filled by a new name of New France: and by the Sea the Ilands many in number, and much frequented for their plenty of fish, commonly called Newfoundland; which name some ascribe to an Ile, others to diuers Ilands, and broken Lands which the French call Bacalos, vpon the gulfes and entrance of the great River called Saint Lawrence, in Canada. This River some * call the Strait of the three Brethren, some * Saint Lawrence, and others * Canada. It farre exceedeth any River of the elder World. It beginneth, sayth Iagues Cartier, beyond the Iland of Assumpcion, ouer-against the high Mountaynes, of Honbuedo, and of the Iuen Ilands. The distance from one side to the other, is about five and thirtie, or forty leagues. In the middle it is about two hundred fathome deepe. There are great store of Whales and Sea-horses. From the entrance vp to Hochelaga is three hundred leagues. Many Ilands are before it, offering of their good nature to be mediators betweene this laughtie streame and the angry Ocean: many others all alongst his passage he holdeth in his louing vnlouely lap, washing and hugging them with his ruder imbracings. The former are vually frequented, and were first discovered by the English, the other by the French. Of Sebastian Cabot his proceeding this way is spoken already.

Robert Thorne in a Treatise of his before mentioned, affirmeth that his Father, and one Master Eliot were the Discoverers of the Newfoundland: and exhorted King Henry to undertake the search of the Indies by the Pole, which he held to be nauigable. Upon this motion, 1527. the King sent two ships (as Hall and Grafton mention in their Chronicles) one of which ships was cast away about the North parts of Newfoundland; the other (shaping her course towards Cape Briton and the Coasts of Arambec (or as some call it Norumbega) returned home.

John Rat wrote a Discourse hereof to the Honorable Kings Grace of England (that I may borrow his owne words) wherein he declareth their coasting and the height of some places, as Cape Bat, in 52. degrees; thence Cape Rat, &c. They found there eleven Saile of Normans, one Briton, and two Portugall Barkes fishing. Albertus de Prate, another of them, wrote another Iournall to Cardinall Wulsey. More trigicall was the successe of Master Hores company, which set out nine yeeres after in this Discouery, but by famine were brought to such extremities, that many of the company were murdered and eaten by their fellows. And those which returned were so altered, that Sir William Bass, a Norfolk Knight, and his Lady, knew not their Sonne Master Thomas Bass one of this starved number, but by a secret marke, namely a Wart, which Nature had sealed on one of his knees. The commodities and qualities of Newfoundland, are related by Master Parkhurst, Master Hayes, Sir Geo. Peckham, Stephen Parmenius, Richard Clarke, Master Christopher Carle, all whole Discourses and experiments hereof, Master Hakluyt hath collected and bestowed on the World. The North-part is inhabited, the South is desart, although fitter for habitation. Besides the abundance of Cod, here are Herrings, Salmon, Thornbacke, Oysters and Mussels. And those which come on shore in great abundance, fleeing from the deuouring Cod, out of the frying-pan into the fire. It is thought that there are Beffes, and certayne, that there are Beares and Foxes, which before your face will rob you of your fish or flesh.

Before they come at Newfoundland by fifty leagues, they passe the banke: so they call certayne high ground, as a veine of Mountaynes, raising themselves vnder the water, about ten leagues in breadth, extending to the South infinitely, on which is 30. fathome water, before and after 200. Sir Hum. Gilbert tooke possession thereof, by vertue of her Maiesties Commission. Anno 1582. It is within Land a goodly Countrey, naturally beautified with Roses, fowne with Pease, planted with statelie trees, and otherwise diuersified both for pleasure and profit. And now our English Nation doe there plant and fixe a settled habitation: a chiefe Actor and Authour of which businesse is Master John Guy of Brisflow: who in the yeere 1608. sailed from Brisflow in three and twenty dayes to Conception Bay in Newfoundland. Of this Plantation and their wintrings, and continuance there I haue seene diuers Relations with Master Hakluyt, written by Master Guy, William Cateson, &c.

In the yeere 1611. in October and November, they had scarcely fixe dayes frost or snow, which presently thawed, the rest of those moneths being warmer and dryer then in England: December was also faire, with some Frost, Snow, and Raine. The winde in these three moneths variable, from all parts. January and February was most part Frost to mid-March: the wind most commonly Westerly, and sometimes from the North. The Sunne often visited them with warme and comfortable rayes, chasing away the Snow, and not suffering the Brookes to be frozen ouer three nights with Ice able to beare a Dogge. The Snow was neuer (except in drifts) above eighteene inches deepe. They had there, 1. Pillberds, 2. Fish, 3. Mackerels, 4. Foxes, in the winter: Partridges, white in the winter, in Summer some what like ours, but greater; they are much afraid of Ravens: They killed a Wolfe with a Mastiue and a Grey-hound. Eastons piracies were some trouble to them.

Anno 1612. They found houses of Sauges, which were nothing but poles set round and meeting in the top, ten foot broad, the fire in the middle, covered with Deeres skins. They are of reasonable stature, beardless, and in conditions like to those which Sir Martin Frobiher discovered: broad-faced, full-eyed, coloured on their faces and apparell with red Osaker: 60. Their Boats of Barke, as in Canada, twenty foot long, foure and a halfe broad, not weighing 100. weight, made in forme of a new Moone, which carry foure men, and are by them carried ried to all places of their remoouings. Their Patent was granted 1610. for Plantation betwene forty six and fifty two, to bee gouerned by a Councell of twelue and a Treasurer. There wintered 1612. 54. men, six women and two children. They killed there, Beares, Otters, Sables, fowle Wheat, Rie, Turneps, Coleworts. Their Winter till April 1613. was dry, and cleere with some frost and snow. Duers had the Scuruy, where to their Turneps, these fowne, were an excellent remedie, no lesse then Carriers Tree hereafter mentioned. April was worse then the midlt of Winter, by reason of East-winds which came from the Islands of Ice, which the current bringeth at that time from the North. The same I haue seene confirmed by a letter of Thomas Dermer, one of that Colony, dated at Capers Cove, the ninth of September last, 1616. In other moneths, he saith, the temperature is as in England. He mentions Muske-cats and Mu-k-rats in those parts; the fertilitie of the soyle in producing Pease, Rie, Barly and Oares; probabilities of Metals; with promises of the soyle in producing Pease, Rie, Barly and Oares; probabilities of Metals; with promises of more ful Relations hereafter.

Master Richard Whitborne hath lately published a Booke of his Voyages to Newfoundland and obseruations there, with certaine Letters also touching the new Plantations by English, therein at the charges of Sir George Caluad, written by Edward Winne, N.H. &c.

NEere to Newfoundland in 47. degrees, is great killing of the Morse or Sea-oxe. * In the Ile of Ramea, one small French ship, in a small time killed fifteene hundred of them. They are as great, or greater then Oxen, the Hide dressed, is twice as thick as a Bulls hide: It hath two teeth like Elephants, but shorter, about a foot long, growing downwards out of the vpper iaw, and therefore lesse dangerous, dearer sold then Ivory, and by some repured an Antidote, not inferior to the Vnicornes horne. The young ones are as good meate as Veale; which the old will defend, holding them in her armes or forefeet. And with the bellies of five of the said fishes (if so wee may call these Amphibia, which liue both on land and water) they make an Hog'shead of traine Oyle. Their skins are short-haired like Seales; their face is like a Lions, and might more fitly haue bin termed Sea-Lions, then Sea-wolves, or Sea-xen; they haue foure feet, no eares; the hornes are about halfe an ell in length: they vie to lye on the Ice sunning, and are soonest killed with a blow on the fore-head. Some of our English ships haue attempted this enterprize for the killing of the Morse, but not all with like successe, nor with so good as reported of Cherry Islands. At Brions Island is such abundance of Cods, that Master Leigh company with foure hookes in little more then an houre, caught 250. of them. Neere to the same in the Gulfe of S. Lawrence, are three, termed the Islands of Birds: the soyle is sandy red, but by reason of many Birds on them, they looke white. The birds sit as thicke, as stones lie in a paved street: or to use Iagues Cartiers comparison, as any field or Meadow is of grasse. Two of these Islands are steepe and vp-right as any wall, that it is not possible to clime them. On the other, which is in 49. degrees 40. minutes, and about a league in circuit, they killed, and filled two Boats * in lesse then halfe an houre. Besides them which they did eate fresh, every ship did powder fire or fix barrells of them. There are an hundred fold as many hovering about, as within the Island. Some are as bigge as layes, blacke and white, with beakes like vnto Crows: their wings are no bigger then halfe ones hand, and therefore they cannot flye high, yet are they as swift neere the water, as other Birds, they are very fat: these they called Aponatz, a lesser kind which there abundeth, they named Goderz: A bigger, and white, which bite like Dogs, they termed Margaulx. Although it be 74. leagues from the Mayne, yet Beares swim thither to feast with these Birds. One they saw as great as a Kow, saith Cartier, and as white as a Swan, which they did kill and eate, and the flesh was as good as of a two yere old Calfe. About the Port of Besset, they found so many Ilets, as they were impossible to be numbered, continuing a great space.

The Island of Assumpcion, * by the Sauages called Natiscotee, standeth in 49. degrees. The Sauages dwell in houses made of Fir-trees, bound together in the top, and set round like a Doue-houle. This, as before is said, is at the entry of the Riuer into the Gulfe of Saint Lawrence. The bankes of this Riuer are inhabited of people that worship the Deuill, and sometimes sacrifice to him their owne blood, † Francis the first, King of France, sent thither James Breton; and Henry his Sonne, Nicolas Villegagnon; but the greatest riches they found, were the Diamonds of Canada, and those of small value for their brittlenesse. Laques & Carrier made three Voyages into these parts. First, in the yeere 1534. There was hee gladly welcommed of the Sauages, singing, dancing, and expressing other signes of ioy, as rubbing his armes with their hands, and then liting him vp to Heauen, giuing all to their naked skin (though all were worse then nothing) for the trilles hee gaue them. They went naked, fauing their priuities which were couered with a skin, and certaine old skinnies they cast vpon them. Some they saw, whose heads were altogether haueu, except one bulh of haire which they suffer to grow vpon the top of their crowne, as long as a Horse-tayle, and tyed vp with leather string in a knot. They haue no dwelling but their Boats, which they turne vpside downe, and vnder them lay themselves along on the bare ground. They eate their flesh and fish almost raw, only a little heated on the coales. The next yeere Capitaine ¹⁰ h Carrier returned, and carried backe two Sauages, which hee before had carried into France to learne the language. He then passed vp to Hochelaga. They found Rats which liued in the water, as bigge as Conies, and were very good meate, Hochelaga is a Citie round, compassed about with timber, with three course of Rampiers one within another, framed sharpe, about two rods high. It hath but one gate, which is shut with piles and barres. There are in it about fifty great houles, and in the middl of euery one a Court, in the middle whereof they make their fire. Before they came there, they were forced to leaue their boats behind, because of certaine fals, and heard that there were three more higher vp the streame, towards Sanguemay, which in his ^h third Voyage were discovered.

Concerning the Religion in these parts of Canada, euen amongst the Sauages wee finde 20 some tracts and foot-prints thereof, which neither the dreadfull Winters haue quite frozen to death, nor these great and deepe waters haue wholly drowned, but that some shadow thereof appeareth in these shadowes of Men, howsoeuer wild and fange, like to them which giue her entertainment. This people beleue, saith Laques & Carrier, in one which they call Cudnawigni, who, say they, often speakes to them, and tels them what weather will follow, whether good or bad. Moreouer, when hee is angry with them, hee casts dust into their eyes.

They beleue that when they die, they goe into the Stars, and thence by little and little descend downe into the Horizon euen as the Starres doe, after which they goe into certaine greene fields, full of goodly, faire, and precious trees, flowers, and fruits. The Frenchmen 30 told them, Cudnawigni was a Denill, and acquainted them with some mysteries of the Christian Religion, whereupon they condescended and desired Baptisme, the French excoiled, and promised after to bring Priests for that purpose. They lue in common together, and of such commodities as their Countrey yeeldeth, they are well stored: They wed two or three wiues a man, which, their husbands being dead, neuer marrie againe, but for their widowes luery, wear a blacke weed all the dayes of their life, besmearing their faces with sootie-dust and greafe mingled together, as thicke as the backe of a Knife. They haue a filthy and detestable vse in marrying their Maydens, first putting them (being once of lawfull age to marry) in a common place, as Harlots, free for euery man that will haue to doe with them, vntill such time as they find a match. I haue seene houses full of such Prostitutes, as the Schooles 40 in France are full of children. They there vse much misrule, riot, and wantonnesse.

They dig their ground with certaine pieces of wood, as big as halfe a Sword, where they sow their Maize. The men also doe much vse Tobacco. The women labour more then the men in fishing and husbandry. They are more hardy then the beasts, and would come to our ships starke naked, going vpon Snow and Ice, in which season they take great store of beasts, Stags, Beares, Martreps, Hares, and Foxes, whose flesh they eate raw, having first dried it in the Sun or smoke, and so they doe their fish. They haue also Otters, Weasils, Beavers, Badgers, Conies: Fowle and Fish great varieties: and one fish, called Abolbuit, whose bodie and head is like to a Greyhound, white as Snow. Their greatest Iewel is Chains of Eurginie, which are shiel-fishes, exceeding white, which they take on this manner. When a captiue or other man is condemned to death, they kill him, and then cut fishes in his most fleshie parts, and hurl him into the River Cornibots, whence after twelve heures they draw him, finding in those cuts these Eurginie, whereof they make Beads and Chaines. They are excellent for stopping of bloud, Thus much out of Carrier. In the yeeres 542, Monsieur Roberval was sent to inhabit those parts. He saith that he built a Fort faire and strong: the people haue no certayne dwelling place, but goe from place to place, as they may find best food, carrying all their goods with them.

It is more cold in that, then in other places of like height, as John Alphonse of Xanloigne saith, because of the gearnesse of the River which is fresh water, and because the Land is vntilled and full of Woods. We may adde the cold vapours which the Sunne exhaleth in that long passage ouer the Ocean, the abundance of Ice that commeth out of the North-seas, and the winds which blow from them, and from the cold snowie hills in the way.

B. III.

Late Plantations of New-France, and Relations of the Natives.

Amuel Champlain made a Voyage to Canada 1603. and encountered with a banke of Ice eight leagues long in 45. degrees, two third parts, with infinite smaller. The Straits mouth from Cape Ray to the Cape of Saint Lawrence, within the Gulfe of Canada, is eightene leagues. He observed a Feast made by Anadabys

10 the great Sagamo, in his Cabin: in which eight or ten Kettles of meat were set on severall fires, sixe paces asunder: The men sat on both sides of the roome, each having a dish made of the bark of a tree: one appointed to divide to every man his portion. Before the meat was boyled, one tooke his Dogge, and danced about the Kettles from one to another, and when he came before the Sagamo, cast downe his Dogge: and then succeeded another in the like exercise. After their Feast, they danced with the heads of their enemies in their hands, some singing. Their Canoas are of the bark of Birch, strengthened within with little circles of wood, eight or nine paces long, fit for active and passive carriage. Their Cabins are low, like Tents, covered with the said bark, the rooffe open, a foot space vncouered to let in light, with many fires in the middle: ten households, sometimes together: the lyc vp-

10 on skinnies one by another, and their Dogges with them. After a certain Feast, the Algonquins (one of these three Nations in league) went out apart, and cauted all their women and maids to sit in ranks, themselves standing behinde singing: suddenly all the women and maids cast off their Mantles of skinnies, and stripped themselves naked, not ashamed of their shame, keeping on still their Matashia (which are 2 Peter-nesters and chaines entrelaced, made of the haire of the Porke spicke, dyed of diuers colours.) Their songs ended, they cryed with one voice, He, he, he, and then couered themselves with their Mantles which lay at their feet, and after a while renewed their former songs, and nakednesse. Their Sagamo sat before the Virgins and Women, betweene two flauies, whereon were hanged those enemies heads: and hee exhorted the Mountainers and 10 Estechemains to the like significations of joy: which then cryed all together, he, he, he. When hee was returned to his place, the great Sagamo and all his company cast off their Mantles, their priuities only remaining couered with a little skin: and tooke each what they thought good, as Matashias, Hatchets, Swords, Kettles, Flesh, &c. which they presented to the Algonquins. After this, two of each Nation contended in running, and the best runners were rewarded with presents.

They are well set, of Tawny or Oliue colour, by reason of their paintings: they are lyers, giuen to reuenge, without law. When a maid is fourteene or fiftene yeares old, she hath many louers, and vseth carnall filthinesse with whom she pleaseth, so continuing five or sixe 10 yeares: and then takes whom she likes for her husband, liuing with him chastely all her life after, except for barrennesse he forsake her. The husband is zealous, and giues presents to her parents. When one dies, they make a pit, and therein put all his goods with the corpse, couering the same with earth, and setting ouer it many pieces of wood, with one stake painted red, and set vp on end. They beleue the immortallitie of the Soule, and that the dead goe into farre Countries to make merry with their friends.

10 Mansieur Champlain discoursed with certaine Sauages yet liuing, of whom hee learned touching their Religion, that they beleue in one God, who hath created all things: that after God had made all things, he tooke a number of Arrowes, and did sticke them into the ground, from whence Men and Women sprung vp, which haue multiplied euer since. Touching the Trinitie, being asked, a Sagamo or Gouvernour answered, * There was one onely 10 God, one Sonne, one Mother, and the Sonne which were foure. Notwithstanding, that God was ouer and aboue all the Sonne was good, and the Sonne also: but the Mother was naught, and did eate them, and that the Father was not very good. Being asked, if they or their Ancestors had heard that God was come into the World: He said that he had not seene him: but that anciently there were five men, who traouling toward the setting of the Sun, met with God, who demanded of them, Whither goe ye? They answered, We goe to seeke for our li- 10 uing. God said, You shall finde it heere: but they not regarding, passed further: and then God with a stone touched two of them, who were turned into stones. And hee laid againe to the three other, Whither goe ye? They answered, and hee replied as at first: they yet passing further, hee tooke two flauies, and touched therewith the two foremost, and trans- 10 formed them into flauies. Asking the third man whither he went, he said, to seeke his liuing: whereupon he bade him tarry, and he did so, and God gaue him meat, and he did eat: and after he had made good cheere, he returned among the other Sauages, and told them all his tale.

d M. Champlain.

e The answer of a Sagamo of a Sagamo of the Isles of Religion.

f This some, who are greeth with the Manichean and Pythagorean error.

This Sagamos also told, that at another time there was a man which had store of Tobacco, and God came and asked him for his pipe, which the man gave him, and he dranke much of it, and then brake the pipe. The man was offended herat, because he had no more pipes, but God gave him one, and bade him carry it to his Sagamos, with warning to keepe it well, and then he should want nothing, nor any of his. Since, the said Sagamos lost the pipe, and found famine and other distresse: this seemeth to be the cause, why they say God is not very good. Being demanded what Ceremony they vsed in praying to their God, he said that they vied no Ceremonie, but every one did pray in his heart, as hee would. They haue among them some Sauages, whom they call Tulstana, who speake visibly to the Diuell, and hee tels them what they must doe, as well for warre, as for other things. And if hee should command them to put any enterprise in execution, or to kill a man, that they would do it immediately. They beleue also that all their dreames are true. So farre Champlain.

M. de Monts.

In the yeere 1604. Monsieur de Monts (according to a Patent granted him the yeere before, for the inhabiting of Cadiz, Canada, and other parts of New-France, from the fortieth degree, to the sixe and fortieth) rigged two ships, and bare with thole parts that trend Westward from Cape Breton, giuing names to places at pleasure, or vpon occasion. One Port was named, Saualet, of a French Captain, who was there a fishing, and had made his two and fortieth voyage hither: another was named of Resignol, whose ship was confiscated for trading there with the Sauages (a poore preferment, to leaue name to a Port by his misery) another was named Port-Mourton, and within a great Bay; they named another Port-Royall, 20 where after they fortified. The inhabitants of these parts were termed Souriquois. From them Westward are the people called Etechemins, where the next Port, after you are passed the Riuer of Saint Iohn, is Saint Croix where they erected a Fort, and wintered. Threecore leagues West from thence is the Riuer Kimbeki; and from thence the Land trendeth North & South to Malabarre, Authors place in that former extention of Land betwixt East and West, a great Towne and faire Riuer, called Norombega, by the Sauages called Agguncia. These French Discoverers vterly deny this History, affirming that there are but Cabans here and there made with Perkes, and covered with barks of trees, or with skins: and both the Riuer and inhabited place is called Pemiquet, and not Agguncia. And there can be no great Riuer (as they asseme) because the great Riuer Canada hath (like an insatiable Merchant) engrossed all 30 these water-commodities, so that other streames are in manner but mere Pedlers.

Armonchiquois.

The Armonchiquois are a traiterous and theuifh people, next vnnighbourly neighbours to the Etechemins: they are light-footed, and lime-fingered, as iwisit in running away with their stolen prey, as the Grey-hound in pursuing it. Champlain testifieth, that the Armonchiquois are deformed with little heads, short bodies, armes small like a bone, as are their thighs also; their legges great and long, and disproportioned with likeness of proportion: when they sit on their heeles, their knees are halfe a foot higher then their heads. They are valiant, and planted in the best Countrey.

M. du Point.

"Marq. L'escarbot.

Souriquois.

Monsieur du Point arrived in those parts in the yeere 1605, and du Monts removed the French Habitation to the Port-Royall, Monsieur de Pourtrincourt sailed thither in the yeere 46 1606, and with him the Author of the Booke called Nova Francia, who hath written the Rites and Customes of these Countreies. Hee saith, that the Armonchiquois are a great people, but haue no adoration. They are vicious and bloody. Both they and the Souriquois haue the industry of Painting and Caruing, and doe make Pictures of Birds, Beasts, and Men, both in bone and wood, as well as the workmen in these parts. They, as is said, ascribe not Diuine worship to any thing; but yet acknowledge some Spirituall and inuincible Power. I know not by what Diuine Iustice, and Injustice of the Diuell, it comes to passe, that God hath giuen some men vp to farre vnto the Diuels tyrannie, that he hath banished out of their hearts the knowledge and worship of the True God: and yet the nature of Man cannot be without apprehension of some greater, and more excellent Nature, and rather then want of all Religion, they will haue a Religious-irreligious commerce with the Diuell. Yea, the more all knowledge of God is banished, the baser seruice doe Men, in doing and suffering, yield to the Diuell: as (to leaue other parts to their owne places) it falleth out in these Regions. The Prince and greatest Commander of Men among them, seemes by this meane to be the Diuels Vicegerent, and by wizardly and diuellish practices to vp-hold his owne greatness. So it was with Sagamos Memberton: if any body were sicke, he was sent for, he made inuocations on the Diuell, he bloweth vpon the partie groued; maketh incision, sucketh the blood from it: (a practice vsed in very many Countreies of the Continent and Islands of America) if it be a wound, he healeth it after the same manner, applying a round slice of Beauers stones. Some present is therefore made to him, of Venison or skinner. 60

If it be a question to haue newes of things absent, hauing first questioned with his spirit, he tendereth his Oracle, commonly doubtfull, very often false, and sometimes true. He rendered rendered a true Oracle of the coming of Pomrincourt to de Pont, saying, his Duell had told him so.

When the Sauages are hungry, they consult with Membersious Oracle, and he relleth them the place whither they shall goe; and if there be no game found, the excuse is, that the Beast hath wandered and changed place; but very often they finde. And this makes them beleue that the Duell is a God, and know none other, although they yeeld him no adoration. When these Animouins (so they call these Wizards) consult with the Duell, they fixe a staffe in a pit, to which they tye a Cord, and putting their head into the pit, make inspections or consultations, in a language vnkowne to the others that are about; and this with beatings and howlings vntill they sweat with paine. When this Duell is come, the Matter Animouins makes them beleue that hee holds him tyed by his cord, and holdeth fast against him, torturing him to giue him an answer, before he let him goe. That done, he beginneth to sing something in the praises (as it seemeth) of the Duell, that hath discovered some game vnto them, and the other Sauages that are there, make answere with some concordance of musike among them. Then they dance with songs in another, not vulgar, language; after which, they make a fire and leape ouer it, and put halfe a pole out of the top of the Cabin, where they are, with something tied thereto, which the Duell carrieth away.

Membersious carried at his necke the marke of his profession, which was a purse, trianglewise couered with their imbroidered woike, within which there was somewhat as bigge as a Nut, which he said was his Duell, called Aontem. This function is successeful, and by tradition they teach their eldest sonnes the mystere of this inquir. Eury * Sagamos cither is, or hath his Animouin.

* Sagamos signifies a King or Ruler.

The men and women wear their blacke haire long, hanging loose over the shoulder; wherein the men sticke a feather, the women a bodkin. They are much troubled with a stinging fly, for preuention whereof, they rub themselves with a certaine kinde of greale and by les. They paint their faces with blue or red, but not their bodies.

For their marriages, they are contracted with the consent of Parents, who will not giue their Daughters in marriage to any, except he be a good hunter. The women are faine to bee chaste, and the contrary seldome found; and though the husband hath many wifes, yet is there no ialousie among them. The widowes here, if there husbands be killed, will not marie againe, nor eat flesh, till their death be reuenged. Other wile they make no great difficulty (which Cartier reporteth of Canada) to marry againe if they find a fit match. Sometimes the Sauages having many wifes, will giue one to their friend, if he likes her, so to disburden themselves. The women eat not with the men in their meetings, but apart. When they make feasts, they them end with dances all in a round; to which one singeth: as the end of euery long all make a loud & long exclamation: and to be the more nimble, they slip themselves stark naked. If they haue any of their enemies heads or armes, they will carry them (as a iewel) about their necks while they dance, sometimes biting the same.

After their Feasts they will diet themselves, huing sometimes eight dayes more or lesse with the smoke of Tobacco. They are in nothing laborious but in hunting. They sow but so much as will serue them for fixe moneths, and that very hardly; during the Winter they retire, three or foure moneths space, into the woods, and there liue on Acornes, Fish, and Venison. They wash not themselves at meales, except they be monstrous foule, and then wipe on their owne, or their Dogs haire. Their entertainment is with small complement: the Guest sits downe by his Host, if it be the King, takes Tobacco, and then giues the pipe to him that he thinks the worthiest person in the company. They vse humanitie to their Parents, obey their commandements, and nourish their persons in age. They vse humanitie to the wifes & children of their conquered enemies, but the men of defence they kill. Their chiefe hunting is in winter; they carry alwaies tinder-boxes with them, to strike fire when hunting is done, or night takes them. For they follow the game sometimes three dayes together.

Their Dogs are like Foxes, which spend not neuer giue ouer, and haue rackets tyed vnder their feet, to make them to run on the snow. They seethe the flesh in a tub of wood, by putting stones heated red hot therein. The womens duty is to slay the Beast, and bring it home. The Ellan, Dare, Stag, and Beare, are their game. They take also with their hands Beuers, which are of a cheit-nut colour, short legged, his fore-feet haue open clawes, the hinder finnes like a Goose, the tayle skaled, almost of the forme of a Sole-fish: it is the delicatest part of the Beast. The head is short and round, with two rankes of iawes at the sides; and before foure great teeth (two aboue, and two beneath) with which he cuts downe small trees. Quebec is a Streit of Canada, where is a goodly Country furnished with Oakes, Cypresses, wilde Vines, Peaches, Nuts, Cherries, Goose-berries, Diamonds, in the Rockes of Slate, and other profitable pleasures. They saw in forty five degrees a Lake fifteene Leagues long, and eight wide, with a Salt or fall not aboue three fadoms, but very furious. The Sauvages related to them of passages to a salt Lake, whereof they knew no end, reaching so farre Southerly; that the Sun set to the North thereof in Summer: it was four hundred leagues from the place where the French then were. In the Additions to Nova Francia, mention is made of a Lake about threecore leagues long, with faire Islands in it. The Iroquois haue no Townes; their dwellings and Forts are three or foure stories high, as in New-Mexico. Another lake is said to continue an hundred leagues in length, and some conceiue hope of passage to the South-Sea thereby.

The Scourie, or Scorbuch, much consumed the French in these parts, a disease that vsually attendeth euill Diet, and much salt meats; which, and want of exercise conuenient, are the Harbengers of this sickness, in long sieges and Navigations. Carriers company were in a little time wonderfully cured hereof by a Tree like to Sassafras. Of VIRGINIA.

¶ I.

The Preface, Sir WALTER RALEIGH'S Plantation, and the Northerne Colony.

LEaving New-France, let vs draw neerer the Sunne to New-Britaine, whose Virgin soyle not yet polluted with Spaniards lust, by our late Virgin-Mother, was iustly called Virginia. Whether shall I here begin with Elogies or Elegies? Whether shall I warble sweet Carols in praise of thy lovely Face, thou fairest of Virgins, which from our other Britaine World, hath won thee Woods and Suters, not such as Leander, whose loues the Poets haue blazed for swimming ouer the Straits betwixt Seitos and Abydos, to his lovely Hero; but, which for thy sake, haue forsaken their Mother-Earth, encountered the most tempestuous forces of the Aire, and so often ploughed vp Neptunes Plaines, furrowing the angry Ocean, and that to make thee of a ruder Virgin, not a wanton Minion, but an honest & Christian Wife? Or shal I change my accent, and plaine me (for I know not of whom, to whom to complaine) of those disadvantages, which these thy lovely louers haue sustained in seeking thy loue? What enuie, I know not, whether of Nature, willing to reserue this Nymph for the treasure of her owne loue, testified by the many and continuall presents of a temperate Climate, fruitfull Soile, fresh and faire streames, sweet and wholesome Aire, except neere the shore (as if her iealous policie had prohibited foraine Suters;) or of the Savage Inhabitants, unworthy to embrace with their rustlike armes so sweet a bosome, and to appropriate with greatest disparagement so faire a Virgin to Savage Loues: or haply some conceited indignitie, that some Parents should thither send their most vnruely Sonnes, and that our Britannia should make her Virginian lap to be the voider, for her lewder and more disordered Inhabitants, whose ill parts haue made distastefull those kinder offices of other our Britaine Worthies, which else had been long since with greatest gladnesse, and the recompence of her selfe entertained: or whether it be Virginian modesty, and after the vse of Virgins, she would say Nay at first, holding that loue surest in continuance, which is hardest in obtaining? Whether any, or all of these, or what else hath hindered, which we haue been, and haue not yet obtained the full fruition of her Love, and possession of her gainfull Dowry, which yet now (more then euer before) she seemeth to promise, and doubtlesse wil quickly performe, if niggardise at home doe not binder. And should men be niggardly in this adventure, where where Nabal must needs verifie his name, where keeping Ioseph, aduenturing promisseth so faire a purchase? Miserie of our times! that miserable men should here want what they already haue, & refuse to haue there, at no rate, abundant supply to their too miserable feares of want. Lift vp your eyes, & see that brightnesse of Virginia's beauty: which the Mountaines lift vp themselves alwayes with wild smiles to behold, sending downe slender streames to salute her, which powre themselves greedily into her lovely lap, and after many winding embacements, looke to depart, are at last swallowed of a more mighty Cortiuall, the Ocean: He also lends Armes of fishes to her Coasts, to winne her Loue, euen of his best fowle, and that in store and abundance: the Mountaynes out-bid the Ocean, in offering the secret store 10 houses of vndoubted Mines: he againe offereth Pearles: and thus while they seeke to outface each other with their puffed bigge and swolne cheeks, who shall get the Bride; the one layes hold on the Continent and detaines the same, maugre the Oceans fury, and hee againe hath gotten the Ilands all along the Coast, which hee guardeth and keepech with his watery Garrisons. Virginia, betwixt those two fowre-faced Suters, is almost distracted, and easily would giue entertainment to English loue, and accept a New Britan appellation, if her husband be but furnished out at first in sorts and sutes, befitting her Marriage solemnitie: all which her rich dowrie would maintaine for euer after with aduantage.

And well may England court her, rather then any other European louers, in regard of her loog continued amity, and first Discouerie of her Lands and Seas: this by Saſſanian Can- 10 bor with his English Mariners, a hundred and fiftene yeeres since, and the other by Sir Walter Raleighs charge and direction, Anno Dom. 1584.

Then first of all Christians, did Master Philips Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow, take possession in Queens Elizabeths name. The next yeere that mirrour of Relolution, * Sir Richard Greennile, conuoyed thither an English Colony, which he there left for Plantation, vnder the government of Master Ralph Lane, which there continued vntill the eighteenth of Iune in the yeere following, and then (vpon some vrgent occasions) returned with Sir Frances Drake into England. Yet, had they staid but a little longer, a ship of Sir Walter Raleighs had supplied their necessities: and soon after Sir Richard againe repaired thither with three ships, and then also left fiftene men more to keepe possession. In the yeere 1587 30 a second Colonie were sent vnder the government of Master Iohn White. To their succour Sir Walter Raleigh had sent five seuerall times, the last by * Samuel Maces of Weymouth, in March, one thousand fixe hundred and two; but he and the former performed nothing, but returned with fruitlesse allegations. The same yeere, Captaine Bartholomew Gosnold, and Captaine Gilbert, discouered the North parts of Virginia, of which Voyage Iohn Breton hath writtne a Treatise.

In the yeere 1603, 4 the Britlow men (by leaue of Sir Walter Raleigh) set forth a Voyage thither in 43. degrees. In this Expedition was Robert Salterne, which had bene the yeere before with Captaine Gosnold. They discouered Whitson-bay (so they termed it) in one and forty degrees twenty nue minutes. The people vsed Snakes skins (of which some were 40 six foot long) for Girdles: they were exceedingly rauished with the Musicke of a Gitterne-boy, dancing in a ring about him: they more feared two English Mastiues then twentie men. They had Iuch Boats as before are mentioned, seuentene foot long, foure broad, of Birch-bark sowed with Oylers, the seams covered with Rozen, almost as sweet as Frankincense, carrying nine men standing vpright, and yet not weighing aboue threescore pound. They brought one of them to Britoll. This yeere Captaine Gilbert set forth againe for Virginia: at Meys they laded twenty tuns of Lignum vite: hee had foure more were slaine by the Sa- 40 uages. And in the yeere 1605, Captaine George Weymouth made thither a prosperous Voyage, and discouered threescore miles vp a most excellent Riuer. His Voyage was set forth in print by * James Rolfe.

After this followed the plantation by the present Aduenturers, for the foundation of a New Britan Common-wealth: and the East and * West parts of England ioynd in one purpose of a two-fold Plantation, in the North and South parts of Virginia. Of the North parts our Method requires first mention. Mawoothen was many yeeres together visited by our men, extending betwene 43. and 45. degrees, 40. leagues in bredth, and 50. in length. They found therein nine Riuers, Quibiquetson, Pemaquid, Ramasso, Apanawapaskie, Apaumensek, Aponge, Sagadahoc, Asmahaga, Shawokotoc. Sagadahoc is in 43. degrees, it is a mile and halfe at the mouth, holding the same bredth a dayes iourney, and then makes a found three dayes 8 iourney broad, in which are fixe Ilands: it hath two branches, the one 60 from the North-east 24. dayes iourney, the other North-west 30. dayes iourney. At the heads are two Lakes the Westermost 8. dayes iourney long and foure wide, the Easternmost halfe so large. This is Bahabass his dominion. The Tarentines iourney is in 44. deg. two third parts, where the Sauges tell of a Rock of Allum, neere the Riuer of Salnowa. Captain! T. Hanbom

An. 1607. was settled a Plantation in the River Sagadahoc, the ships called the Gift, and the Mary and John, being sent thither by that famous English Iusticer Sir John Popham and others. They found this coast of Virginia full of Islands, but safe. They chose the place of their Plantation at the mouth of Sagadahoc, in a Westerly Peninsula: there heard a Sermon, read the their Patent and Lawes, and built a Fort. They sailed vp to discover the River and Countrey, and encountered with an Island where there was a great fall of water, ouer which they haled their Boat with a Rope, and came to another fall, shallow, swift, and vnpassable. They found the Countrey stored with Grapes white and red, good Hops, Onions, Garlick, Okes, Walnuts, the soile good. The head of the Riuer is in forty five and odde minutes. Cape Siniemamis in 43. deg. 30. min. a good place to fortifie. Their Fort bare name of Saint George, Fortie five remained there, I Captaine George Popham being President, Raleigh Gilbert Admirall. The people seemed affected with our mens deuotions, and would say, King I AM is a good King, his God a good God, and Tante naught. So they call an euill spirit which haunts them euery Moone, and makes them worship him for feare. He commanded them not to dwell neere, or come among the English, threatening to kill some and infect sicknesse on others, beginning with two of their Sagamos children, saying he had power, and would doe the like to the English the next Moone, to wit, in December.

The people = told our men of Canibals, a neere Sagadahoc, with teeth three inches long, but they saw them not. In the Riuer of Tamefoot they found Oysters nine inches in length: and were told that on the other side there were twice as great. On the 18. of Ianuary they had in seven houres space, thunder, lightning, raine, frost, snow, all in abundance, the last continuing. On February the 5. the President died. The Sauges remoue their dwellings in Winter neere the Deere. They haue a kinde of shoes a yard long, fourteen inches broad, made like a Racket, with strong twine or sinewes of a Deere: in the mid is a hole wherein they put their foot, buckling it fast. When a Sagamos dyeth, they blacke themselves, and at the same time yerely renew their mourning with great howling: as they then did for Kassow-rakeny, who died the yeere before. They report that the Canibals haue a Sea beside them. They found a Bath two miles about, so hote that they could not drinke it. Master Patteneson was slaine by the Sauges of Nanhoc, a Riuer of the Tarentines. Their short Commons caused feare of mutiny. One of the Sauges, called Aminquin, for a straw hat and knife giuen him, stript himselfe of his cloathing to Beuers skinner, worth in England 50. shillings, or three pound to present them to the President, leauing onely a flap to couer his priuities. He would also haue come with them for England. In winter they are poore & weak, and do not then company with their wiues, but in Summer when they are fat and lusty. But your eyes wearied with this Northerne view, which in that Winter communicated with vs in extremitie of cold, looke now for greater hopes in the Southerne Plantation, as the right arme of his Virginian body, with greater costs and numbers furnished from hence.

But first let me tell you that by some lately these Northerne Parts are stiled by the Name of New-England, as being supposed in the same Latitude with Nova Albion on the South Sea, discovered by Sir Francis Drake, hauing New France on the North, and the Southern Plantation of Virginia on the South; New Spaine, New Granada, New Andalusia, being in the same Continent. A Map and Discouerie heretofore was set forth this last yeere by Captaine John Smith, with new English Names exchanged for the Salvage. It lyeth betwixt 41. degrees, and 45. minutes. The harsh Names of the habitations of those parts, I forbear to recite: as the commodities are exprest by that Author. First for fish, (let not any thinke this contemptible, when, by his report, the Hollanders reape from three kinds, Herring, Cod, and Ling, fiftene hundred thousand pound yerely; hereupon principally founding their greatnest by Sea and Land.) In March, April, May and halfe Iune here is Cod in abundance; in May, Iune, Iuly, and August, Muller and Sturgeon, whose Roes doe make Caiuaries and Puttargo. Their store of Herrings they compare to the haire of their heads. In the end of August, September, October and November you haue Cod againe to make Corfish or Poore-John, wice as good as in New-found-land, where their fishing also is chiefly but in Iune and Iuly. Mulletts are here taken by Nets, (which at Cape Blanke are hooked) and twice as large. He addes store of Red-berries called Alkermes, Muske-Rats, Beuers, Otters, Martins, Blacke Foxes, probabilities of Mines, and manifold commodities of the soile, the particulars whereof I referre to the booke it selfe, together with the arguments for a Plantation there there. There also you may read his Observations and Discoveries, Anno 1614. with the success of sixe ships that went the next yeere, and his dilatters by French Pirats, and 9 English perfidie. This present yeere 1616. eight voluntarie ships went thither to make further tryall: and hereafter we hope to haue English Colonies renewed, in this Northerly Plantation newly called New-England.

They took one prize worth 50000. crownes, which was after split, the Captaine and halfe his company drowned.

q See the examination of D. Baker, and others of his company.

§. II.

Of the Southerne Plantation and Colonies; and many causes alledged of the ill successe thereof as the first.

Captaine Bartholomew Gosnold, having long solicited many of his friends, at last prevailed with some Gentlemen, as Master Edward Maria Wingfield, Captaine John Smith, and diuers others, with the helpe of some Noblemen and Merchants, his Maiestie granting Commission for establishing Councils to direct here, and to gouerne and execute there; so that December 19. 1606. they set saile, and after long contending with contrarie windes, and the windy inconstancie of some of the company that would haue returned for England before they had saluted their desired Port, they were by a storme forced into the same vnexpected; where, after some harme by assault of the Sauages, on the 13. of May, Master Wingfield was chosen President, their fort contriued, and the safe soone after discovered. Sixe weekes being thus spent, Captaine Newport returned with the ships, and Capaine Smith (before held in much ielousie) was by the paines of Mr Hunt the Preacher reconciled, and admitted of the Councell, a hundred being left there for the Plantation.

Within ten dayes after the departure of this moueable Tauerne, as they called it, a more sauge enemy then the Sauages had assaulted them, and scarcely ten left vnouched with sickness, through want of conuenient lodging and diet, of which from May to September fifty dyed. Wingfield was deposed, and Ratcliffe established in his place, and by the industrie of Smith, Jame Towne was builded, the Sauages supplying their necessities: they failing, Captaine Smith sought trade abroad; others at home, intending a returne in the Pinace for England, by his vnexpected returning were forced to stay or sink, which action cost the life of Captaine Kendall. Soone after, the like plot of the President, and Captaine Archer was discovered, and by him againe suppressed. The Winter approaching, the Ruers afforded them plenty of Cranes, Swannes Geese, Ducks, with which, and Pearle, wilde Beasts, and other land-commodities they dayly feasted. But in the discoverie of Chickahamine Riuer, George Casson was surprized, and Smith with two others, were beset with two hundred Sauages, his men slaine, and himselfe in a quagmire taken prisoner; but after a moneth he procured himselfe not onely libertie, but great admiration amongst them, and returning, once more stayed the Pinace from flight, and the Fort from being abandoned.

The Treasurer and Councell, meane-while carefull to supply their wants, sent two ships with more a hundred men: Capt. Newport arrived safely, Captaine Nelson with the other ship by force of windes was driven to thift: as hee could, elsewhere. Now the Sauages enchanted by Smiths relations of God, Nature, and Art, were in manner at his command, till the ambition of some (by giuing foure times as much for their commodities as he appointed, seeking to seeme of so much greater magnificence and authoritie) made them prize their commodities dearer. Newport (whom Smith had called father, and extolled with Powhatan the Emperour) went with solemnitie to visit him, sending Smith before, who after his manner of State, gaue him Royall entertainment; sitting vpon his bed of Mats, his pillow of leather embroidered with pearle and white beads, attired with a robe of skins, large as an Irish mantle; at his head and feet sate a handsome yong woman, on each side his house twenty others, their heads and shoulders painted red, with a great chaine of white beads about their necks; before those sate his chiefe men in like order in his Arbor-like house, Newport gaue him a boy, for whom Powhatan gaue him Namontacke his seruant, which was after brought into England. Powhatan wittily cheated our men, and offering so much corne as they gaue copper, said he could eate that, not this. Their gettings in this voyage, other commodities, and their rownes, were casually consumed by fire: and the ship staying foureteene weekes, spent most of that prouision for the reliefe of the Colony: and by the bitterness of that great Frost 1607. about halfe rook their deaths. Wingfield and Archer were sent for England. Being buied in the Spring to rebuild their towne. Nelson arrived with his loit Phantix (so they supposed his ship) and dealt honestlier then they report of the former

Mariners,

Mariners. The second of June 1668. Smith left the Fort to discover the Bay of Chesapeake: in the way, wanting of convenient watering places, they were to thirst, as they would have refused two Barreos of gold for one of water: and they arrived at Jamestown in September, where they found some sick, many dead, and the President prisoner: which place by election of the Council and request of the company was bestowed on Smith.

Captaine Newport returned with rich presents of Bacon, Ewer, Bed, Cleathes, with a Crowne for Powhatan, which made him over-value himselfe: some Poles and Dutch which were sent to make Pitch and Tarre, Glasse mills and Sops-althes, proued after treacherous. Powhatan minding murder and villany, at once sixteen of our men were belet with seven hundred, which by the policy of Smith (seeing on Opechancanough their King) was prevented, and turned to their enriching with their commodities and amongst other they vied poison, which wrought not: After, Smith tooke the King of Paspahigh prisoner, which forced the Sauges to peace. Thus haue we a little while beheld Tragical, more then shewes, on this Virginian Theatre, those things which were well intended, being ill performed, and their greatest advantages arising from casual disadvantages: Diversity of emulations beclouding that morning starre, a disastrous Comet, shining rather with fierie gleames of ciuill broiles and brawles in that Hemisphere, then comfortable illumination and influence to the common good.

The Sauges were now in good termes with the English: their Plantation at Jamestown, where they had built a Church and many houses, in some reasonable manner flourished: the country was with great paines and perils of the President further discovered: their Swine, Hens, and other prouision nourished; and some quantitie of many commodities, as Fures, Dyes, Minerals, Saltsalfrasse, Sturgeon, and other things sent hither, in testimony of their industry and success, and Virginia grew now in such request, that nine ships were furnished with the better part of five hundred men, to inhabit there, in the yeere one thousand six hundred and nine, the government being deuolued to the L. de la Ware.

Sir Thomas Gates was appointed Lieutenant Generall; Sir George Summers Admirall of Virginia, and were sent to reside there as Gouvernours of the Colony. By the Sea-menure, wherein the two Knights, and Captaine Newport, with a hundred and fifty persons, layd, after long conflict with the two angry elements, was sent to bee imprisoned in Bermuda, where betwene two Rocks the ship split, the people escaping to Land. In the mean time three of the other ships had landed their men in Virginia, some of whom were such as had been the emulous and enuious corsuals of the President, which they then began to shew and to second the same, a greater hurt by Gun-powder befell him, which forced him for his recovery to let sayle for England, after hee had liued there three yeeres; maintaining himselfe and his that time principally, with such food as the Countrey yielded. He saith, he left behinde at his returne five hundred men and women, three Ships, seuen Boats, two hundred expert Soldiers, thirte nine of their Weroances or Kings, as Subj-cts and Contributors to the English, so farre subiect, that at his command they haue sent their subiects to Jamestown, to receiue correction at his appointment for wrongs done; and their Countries were free to the English for trauell or trade. But Necessitie forced him to leaue the Countrey, which it forced the other appointed Gouvernours not to finde. Hinc ille lachryma. Hence proceeded the disorder and confusion which after happened amongst them. A great bodie was heere, which acknowledged no head, and therefore grew wauelide and distempred. Some fought for rule ouer others, which were ouer-ruled by vnuly passions of Ambition, and faction in themselves; others fought their ease, except sometimes they were ouer-busie in defeating others, and deuouring that which others had carefully laboured for. Ruine leisheth on the Church, Rapine makes prey and spoile of the goods, Ruine denoueth their beasts, Famine consumeth the men, Injuries make the Indians their enemies; two of the ships perish vpon Vshant, and one man alone was left to bring home newes of the perishing: the rest returne laden with Letters of discouragement, painting out Famine, Sedition, and other Furies, which had broken loose amongst them, in the blackest colours: which were sealed with report of the losse of their Admirall, to make vp the measure of mischiefe.

All this did not daunt the Noble Spirit of a that resolute Lord, appointed Lord Gouvernour, who in the beginning of April, one thousand six hundred and ten, set sayle from the coast of England, and on the ninth of Iune arrived safely at the disordered Fort in Virginia, where he found the present State like to the Boxe of Pandora, who being endowed with manifold good gifts (each of the gods bestowing one on her) was sent with a boxe full of evils to Prometheus, who refused the offer, but by Epimetheus was opened, whereby all evils were suffered to fly out, Hope onely remaining, which he shut fast in the bottom. And thus was it with this Virginian Pandora, enriched with the best offerings of Nature's bounty, bumy, but by Epimerthean carelesse, all euid had now disperfed themselves, and made the Virginian Colony a stage of Mifery: onely Hope remained. But alis, even that alio proud tickle and was ready to give up the Ghost; in the dangerous sicknesse, which befell that Noble Lord, which forced him after eight months sicknesse, to returne for England againe. He shipped himselfe indeed for Meis, an Island in the West Indies, famous for wholesome Batches, but by Southely winds was compelled to change his purpose, and at last to make home: having left Deputie Governour Captaine George Percie, a Gentleman of honour and resolution, with upward of two hundred persons.

Almightie God that had thus farre tried the patience of the English, would not suffer them to be tempted above that they were able: and therefore in his latter Providence, before any knowledge was here had of his Lordships sicknesse, had ordained Sir Thomas Dale should be furnished out with a good supply of civillishall, men, cattell, and many provisions; all which arrived safe at the Colony the tenth of May, 1612 by his Letters, and the Lord Governour by his Relations, did animate the Adventurers; the one protesting himselfe willing and ready to lay all that hee was worth vpon the Adventure of the action, rather then dishonourable a worke should faile; and to returne with all coniumit expectation; at their friendly endeavours would therein second his resolutions; the other writinge that foure of the best Kingdoms in Christendome, put all together, may no way compare with this Countrey, either for commodities or goodnesse of soyle. This sparke kindled in their hearts such constancie of zeale and forwardnesse, that they furnished out Sir Thomas Gates (who had happily returned with the rest from Bermudas) with six ships, 300. men, and a hundred Kine, with other Cattle, Munition, and provision of all sorts.

Sir Thomas Dale having newes that it was a Fleet of enemies, prepared himselfe and the rest to an encounter, but it ended with a common ioy, in the shaking of hands, and not of Pikes. Lawes are now made (for lawlesse had marred so much before) for the honour of God, frequenting the Church, obseruation of the Sabbath, reuerence to Ministers, obedience to superiours, mutual loue, honest labours; and against Adultery, Sacriledge, wrong and other vices, Harbengers of Gods wrath and mans destruction. The Colony consisted of seuen hundred men of sundry Arts and Professions (few of them sicke) which having left the Fort at Cape Henry, fortified and kept by Captaine Daniels, and the keeping of James Towne, to that Noble and wel-deserving Gentleman, Master George Percie, is removed by the Riuers foure-score miles further beyond James Towne, to a place of higher ground, strong and defensible by nature, with good Ayre, plenty of Springs, much faire and open grounds, freed from Woods, and wood enough at hand. Here they burnt bricke, cut downe wood, and euery man falls to some what: they liue built, they say, competent houses, the first story all of bricke; that euery man may haue his lodging and dwelling by himselfe, with a sufficient quantity of ground allotted thereto. Here also they were building an Hospirall with fourescore lodgings and beds already sent, for the sicke and lame, as the Booke, called the New life of Virginia, relateth. Master Whitaker in his Letter and Booke from Henricke, 1612. relesse the health and welfare of the Colonie. Samuel Argal in the yeere 1613. affirmed likewise that hee found the state of Virginia farre better then was reported. In one Voyage they had gotten 1100. bushells of Corne: they found a slow kind of Cattle, as bigge as Kine, which were good meate: and a medicinable sort of earth. They tooke Pokohuntis (a Powhatan dearelt daughter) prisoner, a matter of good consequence to them, of best to her, by this means being become a Christian, and married to Master Rolphe, an English Gentleman.

Thus I haue bene bold somewhat largely to relate the proceedings of this Plantation, to supplant such slanders and imputations as some haue conceiued or receiued against it, and to excite the diligence and industry of all men of ability, to put to their helping hand in this Action, so Honourable in it selfe, Glorious to God in the furtherance of his Truth, and beneficiall to the Common-wealth, and to the priuate purses of the Adventurers, if the blooming of our hopes be not blasted with our negligence.

As for the want of successe hitherto, Careat succellum opto, Quisquis ab euentu facta notanda pueri. Reason should preuaile with Men; leaue sense and euent of things as an argument for Beasts. That reason which sheweth Virginia's more then possibilities & probabilities, doth also point out the causes of those ill Successes; ^h Discontents at Sea; Ignorance of the Countrey, and of their Language; Division in the Conncill; Commanders (some of them) not skilfull Souldiers, nor forward Adventurers; Care to relade the Ships before they could provide Houses or Vintalls; Ambition; Cruelty; Neglect of the Seasons for Fish, and Land-commodities. Brackish slimy Water at James Fort; Riot; Sloth; False information in England, Sending ill People that consumed the rest with idleness; Want of Authority to punish them; That kind of Aristocraticall Authority first established, occasion of their Quarrells; Injuries to and from the Saluages, and yet a necessity of their vie and helpe; Sicknesse caused by the grosse and of the Bay is Powhatan, the mouth whereof is neere three miles broad: it is Nauigable an hundred miles: falls, rocks, shoalds, prohibite further Nauigation: hence Powhatan their greatest King hath his Title. In a Peninsula on the Northside thereof is situate Jamestowne.

The people inhabiting which haue their Weroances, are the Kacoughians, which haue not past twenty fighting men. The Pasabegbes, haue forty. Chichabamania, two hundred. The Weanocks, an hundred. The Arromatocks, thirty. The Place called Powhatan, forty. The Appamauicks, threecore. The Quiyonghebauckes, five and twenty. The Warraikoyacks, forty. The Nandamunds, two hundred. The Cbesapeake, an hundred. The Chickabamanians are not gouerned by a Weroance, but by the Priests. No place affordeth more Sturgeon in Summer (of which at one draught haue bene taken threecore and eight) nor in Winter more Fowle. Fourteene miles from Powhatan is the River Pamunke, nauigable with greater Vessels, not about threecore and ten miles. Toppabauk is nauigable an hundred and thirty miles, Patawomecke, an hundred and twenty. To speake of Powtuxunt, Bolus, and other Riuer on the East side of the Bay, likewise, of diuers places which receiued name by some accident, as Fetherstoner Bay: focalled of the death of one of ours there happening, and the like: or to mention the numbers which euery people can make, would exceed our scope, and the Readers patience. Captaine Smiths Map may somewhat satisfie the desirous, and his Booke now printed, further. This the Captaine saith, that hee hath bene in many places of Asia and Europe; in some of Africa and America, but of all, holds Virginia by the natural endowment, the fittest place for an earthly Paradise. Alexander Whitaker the Preacher at Henrico, writes, that at the mouth of Powhatan, are the Forts of Henrico and Charles, two and forty miles yward is Jamestowne, and threecore and ten miles beyond that the new Towne of Henrico, ten miles higher the falls (where the Riuer falleth downe betwene many mine-rall Rockes:) twelue miles beyond, a Chrystall Rocke, wherewith the Indians head their Arrowes: three dayes journey from thence is a Rocke or Hill found couered ouer with a rich siluer Ore. Our men that went to discouer those parts, had but two Iron Pickaxes with them, and those so ill tempered, that the points turned againe at euery stroke; but tryall was made of the Ore, with argument of much hope. Sixe dayes journey beyond this Mine, runs a ridge of Hills, beyond which, the Indians report, is a great Sea, which (if it bee true) is the South Sea. At Henrico they are exceeding healthfull, and more then in England.

Maister Thomas Hariot hath largely described the Commodities which the Water and Earth yeeld (set forth also in Latine with exquisite Pictures by Theodore de Bry) besides the relations of Bretonet and Rosier, and others. There is a Grass: which yeeldeth silke, beside flore of Silke-wormes. Hempe and Flaxe surpassing ours in growth and goodnesse, exceeded by a new found stuffe of a certaine ledge or water-flagge, which groweth infinitely, and with little paines of boyling yeeldeth great quantitie of sundry sorts of Skeines of good strength and length, some like silke, and some like Flaxe, and some a courser sort, as Hempe.

There is also a rich veine of Allum, of Terra Sigillata, Pitch, Tarre, Rrizen, Turpentine, Sassafras, Cedar, Grapes, Oyle, Iron, Copper, and the hope of better Mines, Pearle, Sweete Gummes, Dyes, Timber, Trees of sweet wood for profit and pleasure, of which kinde haue bene discovered fourteene severall kinds. Neither is it needfull that heere I relate the Commodities of Virginia for food in Fowles, Beasts, Fishes, Fruites, Plants, Hearbes, Berries, Graines, especially their Maize, which yeeldeth incredible recompence for a little labour. One Acre of ground will yeeld with good husbandry two hundred Buishels of Corne. They haue two Rootes: the one for Medicinall vse to cure their hurts, called Waghjacan, the other called Tuckabough, growing like a flagge, of the greatnesse and taste of a Potato, which passeth a fiery purgation before they may eate it, being poyson whiles it is raw. Yet in all this abundance our men haue had small store but of want, and no fire nor water could purge that poyson which was rooted in them, to the hinderance of the Plantation.

The chiefe Beasts of Virginia are Beares, lesse then those in other places. Deere like ours, Aronghann much like a Badger, but liuing on trees like a Squirrel: Squirrels, as big as Rabbits, and other flying Squirrels, called Assapauke, which spreading out their legs and skins, seeme to flye thirty or forty yards at a time. The Opasom hath a head like a Swine, a taylor like a Rat, as bigge as a Cat, and hath vnder her belly a bagge, wherein she carrieth her yong. Their Dogges barke not. Their Wolves are not much bigger then our Foxes. Their Foxes are like our siluer-haired Conies, and smell not like ours. Musquas is otherwise as our Water-Rat, but smelleth strongly of Muske: Maister Whitaker saith, they yeeld Muske as the Muske-Cats doe. Their Uetchungquas are wild Cats. Their vermine destroyed not our Egges and Pullen: nor were their Serpents or Flies any way pernicious. They haue Eagles, Hawkes, wild Turkeyes, and other Fowle, and Fish, which here to repeat, would to some nice fastidious stomacks breed a fulnesse, though with some of their Countymen in Virginia, they would haue bene fauoury sometimes and dainty.

Of the present estate of Virginia, and the English there residing.

f Twelve in all.

Peace betwixt
Savages.

The last of May 1616, Sir Thomas Dale (that worthy Commander, and best establisher of the Virginian Plantation) came from thence into England, to procure and further the common good: partly by conference with Him, and chiefly by a Trade and Relations of Master Rolph, the Husband of Pokahuntas, which came over with him, I have learned, what here I deliver you. The English doe now finde this Country so correspondent to their constitutions, that it is more rare to heare of a mans death in Virginia, then in that proportion of people in England. That Aristocratically Government by a President and Councell, is long since remoued, and those hatefull officers thereof together: Order and diligence have repayed, what confusion and idleness had distempred. The men have bene employed in Palazading, and building of Townes, impaling grounds to keepe their Cattle from ranging, and to preserve their Corne; and a Peace concluded betwixt the English and Indians: For howsoever they could well before defend themselves and their Townes from them, yet not easily their Corne and Cattle. This peace hath yielded many benefits, both opportunity of lawfull purchase of a great part of the Country from the Natives, freely and willingly relinquishing and selling the same for Copper, or other Commodities (a thing of no small consequence to the conscience, where the milde Law of Nature, not that violent Law of Armes, layes the foundation of their possession) and quiet enjoying thereof, yeerely planting and reaping without impediment; fowling, hunting, fishing, travelling, as securely as in England; Plenty and Health attending their Peace and Industry. They have Indian Wheate, called Mays, Pease and Beanes, and other the natural Commodities; English Wheate, Pease, Barley, Turneps, Cabbages, Carrots, Parsneps, Herbes and Flowres for pleasure and vse, with other things as good as the best made English ground can yeeld. And that you may know what two mens labours with Spade and Shouell onely can manure in one yeere, they refused fifty pounds offered for their Crop. Hemp, Flaxe, Tobacco, (which with a little better experience in the curing, would be as good as any in America) Fish, Fowle, Deere and other Beasts, I need not mention. Sir Thomas Dale (whose Prudence, Fortitude, Temperance, Justice in the well ordering and governing the English Virginian affairs, I cannot sufficiently honour) obserued two seasons for the taking of Fish, the Spring, and the Fall, himselfe taking no small paines in the triall: at one hale with a Saine, he caught five thousand; three hundred of which were as bigge as Cod, the least of the residue a kind of Salmon Trout, two foot long: Yet durst he not adventure on the maine Skul: for breaking his Net. Likewise two men with Axes and such like weapons have taken and killed neere the shore, and brought home forty as great as Cod in two or three houres space. And whereas heretofore wee were constrained yeerely to buy Corne of the Indians, which brought vs into base esteeme with them: now they seeke to vs, come to our Townes, sell the skins from their shoulders (which are their best garments to vse, come to our Townes, sell their petty Kings: haue this last yeere borrowed foure or five hundred bushells of Wheat; for payment whereof this Haruest they haue Mortgaged their whole Countries, some of them not much lesse in quantitie then a whole Shire in England: So that Famine, the quondam devourer of our Nation, is famished, and in it selfe deuoured.

The places inhabited by the English are six, Henrico and the limits, Bermuda, New Hundred, dred, West and Sherley Hundred, James Towne, Keoughthon, Dales Gift. The inhabitants are; Officers, Labourers, Farmers. The first have charge and care over both the latter, watching and warding for their preferuations in the due execution of their employments and business. These are bound to maintaine themselves and their families with food and raiment by the industrie of them and theirs. The Labourers are of two sorts: some employed onely in the generall workes, fed and clothed out of the store, Others are speciall Artificers, as Smiths, Shoemakers, Carpenters, Tailors, Tanners, &c. which worke in their professions to the Colony, and maintaine themselves with food and apparell, having time limited them to till and manure the ground. The Farmers live at most ease, yet by their good endeavours bring much plenty to the Plantation. They are bound by Covenant, both for themselves and their servants, to maintaine his Maiesties right and title in that kingdome, to watch & ward in the townes where they are resident; to doe one and thirtie dayes service for the Colony, when they shall be called thereunto; to maintaine themselves and theirs with food and raiment; to pay yeerely for themselves and each man-servant two Barrels and a halfe a piece, of their best Indian wheat (this amounts to twelve bushels & a halfe English measure) that no Farmer nor other shall plant Tobacco (knowne to be a vendible commoditie) except he yeerly manure for himselfe; and every man-servant two acres of ground with corne, and then to plant as much as they please. Also the Company have already sent a ship to Virginia with prouision of cloathing, household-stuffe and other necessaries, to establish a Magazine there; to be bought at easie rates in barta and exchange for their commodities, to a mutuall benefit of both parts.

I cannot heere omit the Christian care of his Maiestic, worthy the Defender of the Faith, in providing charitable collections and contributions in England, for the erecting and maintaining of a Colledge in Virginia to be a Seminarie and Schoole of education to the Natives in the knowledge and perfection of our Religion, which I beseech Almighty God to prosper with answerable successe. They haue likewise brought thence children of both sexes here to be taught our language and letters, which may proue profitable instruments in this designe. As for the English there now residing (likely to bee much encreased by good supplies now in sending) at Henrico and in the Precincts, which is seated on the North side the River, ninety and odde miles from the mouth thereof (which somewhat differs from the number before mentioned) and within fiftene or sixteene miles of the Falls, being our furthest habitation within land, are eight and thirtie men and boyes: of which two and twenty Farmers: Captaine Smaley Commander in the absence of James Daniell (who now is returning) Master William Wickham Minister. At Bermuda Nether Hundred (seated on the South side the River, which almost encompasseth it, and with a pale on a short necke of land boundeth this peninsula) are a hundred and nineteene. These are incorporated to Bermuda Towne, which is made a Corporation, according to certaine Orders and Constitutions. Captaine Tearldy Deputy gouernour liues most heere: Master Alexander Whitaker is Minister. West and Sherley Hundred is three or foure miles lower on the North side the River: here are twenty five men commanded by Captaine Maddison, employed onely in planting and curing Tobacco to the publike benefit. Lower by thirty seven miles is James Towne, where are fifty men vnder Captaine Francis West, Brother to the L. La Ware, and (in his absence) commanded by Lieutenant Sharp; Master Buck Minister. At Keoughthon thirty seven miles lower, neere the mouth of the River are twenty. Capt. Webbe commander, Master Mays Minister. Dales Gift is vpon the Sea neere Cape Charles, where are seuentene vnder Lieutenant Cradock; their labour to make salt and catch fish. The numbers of Officers and Labourers are two hundred and five. The Farmers eighty one, besides sixty five women and children, in every place some in all three hundred fifty one persons. These I haue thus particularly related as a witnesse to after-Ages of their little (but now hopefull) proceedings after ten yeeres habitation; which as Jacobs little family in Egypt, and Gedeons small Armie, lesse then that which the Father of the Faithfull mul-tiplied in his owne household, I hope and pray, may grow into Townes, Cities, and Christian-English Churches, in numberlesse numbers, to the glory of God, and honour of our Nation. Even in all the greatest workes of God, and exploits of Men, the beginnings are ordinarily slow and small. How many of the foure hundred and thirtie yeeres were almost, if not more then halfe spent, when Jacob was but a little Family, and those in a strange land, there suddenly growing vnder the Crosse, into a multitude and great people? From her Village-foundation, how did Rome peepe and creepe forth by degrees vnto the height of Maiestic? So may wee say of the Spanish Plantations in this American continent, from contemptible and troublesome beginnings, to their present Splendor. Nor are our hopes lesse, if our hearts bee sincere, and minde, as wee profess the propagation of Christianitie. As for their transported Cattell, there were the last of May of Bulls, Steeres,

Cecce

Cowes.

Cowes, Heifers, Calves, a hundred forty and foure. Horses three, and as many Mares, Goates, and Kids two hundred and sixteene. Hogges wilde and tame not to bee numbred, and great plenty of Poultry.

OW for the manners and Rites of the people, thus hath Master Harriot reported. They beleue that there are many gods, which they call Mantac, but of different sorts and degrees: one onely chiefe and great God, which hath bin from all eternitie. Who, as they affirme, when he purposed to make the world, made first other gods of a principall Order, to bee as meanes and instruments to be vied in the Creation, and Gouernment to follow; and after, the Sunne, 20
Moone, and Starres, as petty gods, and the instruments of the other Order more principall. First, they say, were made Waters, out of which by the gods was made all diuersitie of Creatures, that are visible or inuisible. For Mankinde, they say, a Woman was made first; which by the working of one of the gods, conceived and brought forth children. And in such sort they say they had their beginning: But how many yeeres or ages haue passed since, they say, they can make no relation: hauing no letters, nor other meanes to keep records of times past, but onely tradition from Father to Sonne. They thinke that all the gods are of humane shape, and therefore they present them by Images, in the formes of men, which they call Kewasowock; one alone is called Kewas. Then they place in Houses or Temples, which they call Machicowock; where they worship, pray, sing, and make many times offerings vnto 30 them. In some Machicowock we haue seene but one Kewas, in some two, in other three. They beleue the immortallitie of the Soule: that after this life, as soone as the soule is departed from the body, according to the workes it hath done, it is either carried to heauen the habitation of Gods, there to enjoy perpetuall blisse and happinesse: or else to a great pit or hole; which they thinke to be in the furthest parts of their part of the World toward the Sun-set, there to burne continually. This place they call Pepesasso. For the confirmation of this opinion; they tell tales of men dead and reuiued againe, much like to the Popish Legends.

Thus they tell of one, whose graue the next day after his buriall was scene to moue, and his body was therefore taken vp againe: who reported, that his soule had bene very neere the entering into Pepesasso, had not one of the gods saued him, and giuen him leaue to 40 returne againe, and teach his friends how to auoid that terrible place. They tell of another, which being taken vp in that manner, related, that his soule was aliue while his body was in the graue, and that it had travelled farre in a long broad way, on both sides whereof grew most delicate pleasant Trees, bearing more rare and excellent fruits, then euer he had seene before, or was able to expresse: and at length came to most braue and faire houses, neere which he met his father, that had been dead before, who gaue him great charge to goe back againe, and shew his friends what good they were to doe, to enjoy the pleasures of that place, which when he had done, he should after come againe.

What subtiltie so euer be in these Veruances and Priests, the vulgar are hereby very respectiue to their Gouernours, and carefull of their manners; although they haue also in criminall cases, punishments inflicted according to the heauitie of the offence. This I learned by speciall familiaritie with some of their Priests; wherein they were not so sure pronounced, but that they lent open eare to ours, with doubting of their owne.

The Priests in Secota haue their haire on the crowne like a Combe, the rest being cut from it; onely a fore-top on the forehead is left, and that Combe! They haue a garment of skins peculiar to their function. They are great Wizards.

Our artificiall Workes, Fire-workes, Gunnes, Writing, and such like, they esteemed the workes of Gods, rather then of Men, or at least taught vs by the Gods. They bare much respect to our Bibles. When the Veruans was sicke, he sent vs to pray for him. Some were of opinion that we were not mortall, nor borne of Women, but that wee were men of 60 an old Generation many yeeres past, then risen againe to immortallitie: some word like will seeme to prophesie, that there were more of our Generation yet to come, to kill theirs, and and take their places; which were now in the Aire inuisible, and without bodies, and that they by our entreatie did make men to die which had wronged vs.

They haue¹ their Idoll in the innermost roome of their house, of whom they tell incredible things. They carrie it with them when they goe to the warres, and aske counsell thereof, as the Romans did of their Oracles. They sing songs as they march towards the battell, instead of Drummes and Trumpets: their warres are bloody, and haue wasted much of their people.

A certaine King called Pietnachum, hauing inuited many men and women of the Secotans to a Feast, whiles they were merry, and praying before their Idoll, came vpon them and slew them. When² one of their Kings had conspired against the English, a chiefe man about him said; that we were the seruants of God, and not subiect to be destroyed by them; and that we, being dead men, could doe more hurt then while we were alieue. They vse to solemnize certaine months-minds, in their Savage manner, for any great personage dead. James 1. Kofier, from the relation of Owen Griffin, an eye-witnesse, thus tels of their ceremonies. One among them, the eldest as hee judged, riseth right vp, the other sitting still: and looking about, suddenly cryed with aloud voice, Bangh, Wangh: then the women fall downe, and lye vpon the ground: and the men all together answering the same, fall a stamping round about the fire, with both feet, as hard as they can, making the ground shake, with sundry out-cries, and change of voice and sound. Many take the fire-sticks and thrust them into the earth: and then rest a while. Of a sudden they begin as before, and continue so stamping, till the younger forsocthed from the shore many stones, of which euery man tooke one, and first beat vpon them with their fire-sticks, then with the stones beat the earth with all their strength. And in this manner they continued about two houres. After this ended, they which had wines,ooke them apart, and withdrew themselves seuerally into the wood. This seemed to be their ending deuotion.

When they haue obtained some great deliuerance from danger, or returne from warre, they obserue a publike and solempne reioycing by making a great fire, encompassed with the men and women promiscuously, all of them with Rattles in their hands, making a great noise.

They hold one time in the yeere Festiuall, and then they meet together out of many Villages, euery one hauing a certaine marke or Character on his backe, whereby it may be discerned whose Subiect he is. The place where they meet is spacious, and round about are set posts, caried with the resemblance of a Nuns head: In the mids are three of the fairest Virgins lovingly embracing and clasping each other: about this liuing Center, and artificiall Circle, they dance in their Savage manner.

Their Idoll called Kwasa, is made of wood foure foot high, the face resembling the Inhabitants of Florida, painted with flesh-colour; the breast white, the other parts blacke, except the legges, which are spotted with white; he hath Chaines or strings of Beads about his necke.

This Idoll is in Socota, as it were the keeper of the dead bodles of their Kings. In their Temple are houses of publike deuotion, they haue two, three, or more of them, set in a darke place. The dead bodles of their Weraunces are kept on certaine Scaffolds nine or ten foot high; this Kwasa their guardian being placed with them: and vnderneath dwelleth a Poest, which night and day there numbeth his deuotions.

II. Observations of their Rites by Captain S. M. A. and others.

BY the view of our last Colonies observations. Cape: Smith was taken by the Virginians, and while hee stayed amongst them, obserued these their Magickall Rites. There or foure dayes after his taking, seuen of their Priests in the house of the captiue, when he lay, each with a Rattle, (setting him by them) began at ten of the clock in the evening to sing about a fire, which they entoured with a circle of meale, at the end of euery song, (which the chiefe Priest began, the rest following) lay downe two or three graines of Wheat: and after they had laid downe sixe or seuen hundred in one circle (accourting thide songs by Graines, as the Papists their Orisons by Beads) they made two, or three, such Graines in like manner, and put at the end of euery song, betwixt euery two; or three, or foue Graines a little fluske. The High Priest disguised with a great skinne, his head hung round with liueli skins of Weasle, and other Vermin, with a Crownet of Feathers, painted as wylly as the Diuell, at the end of each long, or of strange and yehement gestures, casting great Cakes of Deere-suet, and Tobacco into the fire: thus till fixe of the clock in the evening, they continued these howling deuotions, and so held on three dayes. This they pretended to doe, to know if any more of his Country-men would arise, and what he there intended. They so fed this our Author, that he much mis-doubted, that he should haue been sacrificed to the Quyanghusick, which is a superiour Power they worship, then the Image whereof a more vgly thing cannot be described. To cure the sicke, a certaine man with a little Rattle, vsing extreme howlings, shouting, singing, with diuers anticke and strange behaviours ouer the patient, sucketh blood out of his stomacke, or diseased place.

Not much vnlike to that rattling deuotion of their exorcising Priests, (at least in absurditie) was that entertainment which Powhatan women gaue the same Captaine then being free, and President of the company, at Werowocomoco; where thirtie of them came out of the woods naked, onely couered behinde and before, with a few greene leaues, their bodies painted, but with some difference each from other; the Leader of these Nymphs resembled both Alceus and Diana, hauing on her head a faire paire of Stagges hornes, and a quiver of arrowes at her backe, with Bow and Arrowes in her hand: The rest followed all horned alike, weponed with vnlike instruments: these (as if they had bene the infernall guard, comming with Cerberus to welcome Proserpina to her Palace) rushed from the trees with hellish howles and cries, dancing about a fire, which there was made for that purpose: and after an houre thus spent, they departed.

Then did they solemnly inuite him to their lodging, where he was no sooner come, but all rounded about him with tedious kindnesse, crying, Come you not me? This salutation ended, which Pan and all his Satyres would haue accepted, they feasted him with plenty and variety, some singing and dancing whyles others attended: and at last led him with a fire-brand, in stead of a Torch, to his lodging.

When they intend any wars, the Weronaues or Kings consult first with the Priests and Coniurers. And no people haue there bene found so fange, which haue not their Priests; Gods, and Religion. All things that are able to hurt them beyond their preuention, they after their sort adore, as the Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, our Ordnance, Peeces, Horses: Yea, I haue heard Captaine Smith say, that they seeing one of the English Bores in the way, were stricken with a wofull fesse, because he bristled vp himselfe and gnashed his teeth, and took him for the god of the Swine; which was offended with them.

The chiefe god they worship is the Duell, which they call Okse. They haue conference with him, and fashion themselves vnto his shape. In their Temples they haue his Image illustrated by maye, painted, adorned with Chaines, Copper, and Beads, and couered with a skinnie. By him is commonly the Sepulchre of their Kings; whose bodies are first bowelled, then dried on a hurdle, and haue about the ioynts chaines of Copper, Beads, and other like stuffe; then lapped in white skinnies, and rowled in mats, and orderly entombed in arches made of mats, the remnant of their wealth being set at their feet. These Temples and Bodies are kept by their Priests. For their ordinarie burials, they digge a deepe hole in the earth with sharpe stakes, and the corps being wrapped in skinnies and mats, with their iewels, they lay them vpon sticks in the ground, and couer them with earth. The buriall ended, the women hauing their faces painted with blacke coale and oyle, sit foure and twenty houres in the houles mourning and lamenting by turnes, with yellings and howlings. Every Territory of a Weronaue hath their Temples and Priests. Their principall Temple is at Pitamussick in Pamaunk, where Powhatan hath a house vpon the top of certaine sandie hills in the woods. There are three great houses filled with Images of their Kings and Diuels, and Tombs of their Predecessors. Those houses are neere three score foot long, built, after their fashion, Arbour-wise. This place is in such estimation of holinesse, that none but the Priests and Kings dare enter: yea, the Sauages dare not passe by in Boats, without casting Copper, Beads, or somewhat into the Riuer.

Heere are commonly resident seuen Priests: the chiefe differed from the rest in his ornaments: the other can hardly be knowne from the common people, but that they haue not so many holes at their eares to hang their Iewels at. The High-Priests head-tires thus made: They take a great many Snakes skinnies stuffed with Moss, as also of Weasils and other vermines skinnies, which they tye by their tayles, so that all the tayles meet on the top of their head like a great tassell. The faces of their Priests are painted as vgly as they can devise: in their hands they haue Rattles, some Base, some Trebles.

Their deuotion is most in songs, which the chiefe Priest beginneth, the rest following: sometime he maketh inuocations with broken sentences; by starts and strange passions, and at euery pause the other giue a short groane. It cannot be perceived that they haue any set Holy-dayes: onely, in some great distresse of want, feare of enemies, times of triumph, and of gathering their fruits, the whole Countrey, Men, Women, and Children, assemble

to their solemnities. The manner of their deuotion is sometimes, to make a great fire, all singing and dancing about the same with Rattles and flours, foure or five houres: sometime, they set a man in the midst, and dance and sing about him, he all the while clapping his hands, as if he would keepe time: after this, they goe to their Feasts. They haue certaine Altar-stones, which they call Powouances, Raising from their Temples, some by their houses, others in the woods and wildernesses; vpon which they offer blood, Deere-suet, and Tobacco. This they doe when they returne from the warres, from their huntings, and on other occasions. When the waters are rough in stormes, their confurers runne to the waters sides, or passe in their boats, and after many hellish out-cries and inuocations, cast Tobacco, Copper, 10 Powoues, or such trash into the water, to pacifie that god whom they thinke to be very angry in those stormes. Before their dinners and suppers, the better sort will take the first bit, and cast it into the fire, which is all the grace they are knowne to vse. In some part of the Countrey they are said (which since is found false) to haue yettely a sacrifice of children: such a one was performed at Quiyongbohansuck, some ten miles from James Towne in this manner: Rapahannock, & Werowance made a Feast in the woods: the people were so painted, that a 1 Will. White. Painter with his penill could not haue done better. Some of them were blacke like Diuels, with hornes and loose haire, some of diuers colours. They continued two dayes dancing in a circle of a quarter of a mile, in two companies, with amick tricks, foure in a ranke, the Werowance leading the dances, they had Rattles in their hands; all in the midst had black hornes 20 on their heads, and Greene boughes in their hands: next them were foure or five principall men diuersly painted, which with Bastinadoes beat forward such as tired in the dance. Thus they made themselves scarce able to goe or stand. When they met together, they made a hellish noise, and every one flinging away his bough, ranne (clapping their hands) vp into a tree, and tare it to the ground, and fell into their order againe: thus they did twice. Fourteene well-fauoured children, or (if you had rather heare a Captaine Smith) fiftene of the properest yong Boyes, betwene ten and fiftene yeeres of age, they painted white: Having brought them forth, the people (saith he) spent the forenoone in dancing and singing about them with Rattles: in the afternoone they put these children to the root of a tree, all the men standing to guard them, each with a Bastinado of Reeds bound together, in his hand. 30 Then doe they make a lane betwene them all along, thorow which there were appointed fise yong men (White calls them Priests) to fetch these children. Each of these fetched a child, the guard laying on with their Bastinadoes, while they with their naked bodies defend the children to their great smart. All this time the women weepe and cry out very passionately, providing mosse, skinner, mats, and dry wood vnkowne to what purpose. When the children are in this manner fetched away, the guard teares downe trees, branches, and boughes, making wreathes for their heads, or bedecking their haire with the leaues. What elfe was done with the children was not seene, but they were all cast on a heape in a Valley, as dead, where was made a great feast for all the company.

William White relating this Rite, saith, That they remoued them from tree to tree three 40 times, and at last carried them into a Valley where the King sat, where they would not suffer our men to see, but feasted there two houres. On a sudden all arose with cudgels in their hand, and made a lane, as is before said, and the children being laid downe vnder a tree (to their seeming) without life, they all fell into a ring againe, and danced about the children a good space, and then fate downe in a circle about the tree. Rapahanna in the mids, caused burdens of wood to be brought to the Altar, made of poles set like a steeple, where they made a great fire, which our men thought, but were deceived, was to sacrifice their children to the Diuell (whom they call Kewasse) who, as they report, suckes their blood. They were vnwilling to let them stay any longer. They found a woman mourning for yong Paspaiba, sacrificed at the Towne of Rapahanna: but this Paspaiba is now aliue, as Mr. Rolfe hath since 50 related to me: and the mourning of the women is not for their childrens death, but because they are for diuers moneths detained from them, as we shall after see. Yea, the Virginians themselves, by false reports might delude our Men, and say they were sacrificed when they were not. For euen still, they are very inconstant (it is Mr. Rolfe report) in all that they speake of their Religion: one denying that which another affirmeth, and either not knowing, or not willing that others should know their diuellish mysteries. And hence perhaps it was, that (as Captaine Smith addeth) a Werowance being demanded the meaning of this sacrifice, answered, that the children were not all dead, but that the Oké or Diuell did sucke the blood from their left breast, who chanced to be his by lot, till they were dead, but the rest were kept in the wilderness by the yong men, till nine Moones were expired, during 60 which time, they must not conuerse with any, and of these were made their Priests, and conuicers. This Sacrifice they held to be so necessarie, that if they should omit it, their Oké or Diuell, and their other Quiyongbohsuckes, or gods, would let them haue no Deere, Turkeys, a Pocumet is a small River, which dried and beat into powder, turndred: they use it for wel-lings, aches, and paining. b In that ex-tremity of mi-lerie which our since sus-tained, have been told that both the Sa-uages and Egi-ptians would obliet our want, and their plenty, for theirs, and against our Religion. c The cruell death of George Casson, d Declaration of Virginia. e Priests in Virginia.

Corne, or Fish; and who would besides make a great slaughter amongst them. They think that their Worowances and Pilefts, which they also esteeme Quiyonghesughes, when they are dead, doe goe beyond the Mountaines towards the setting of the Sunne, and tuer remaine there in forme of their Oke, having their heads painted with Oyle and Pocumet finely trimmed with feathers, and shall have Beades, Hatchets, Copper, and Tobacco, neuer ceasing to dance and sing with their Predecessors. The common-people, they suppose, shall not live after death. Some sought to convert them from these Superstitions: the Worowance of Quiyonghebanock was so farre perswaded, as that he professed to beleue that our God exceeded theirs, as much as our Guns did their Bowes and Arrows: and many times did send to the President many presents, entreating him to pray to his God for raine, for his God would not send him any.

William White reporteth these their ceremonies of honouring the Sunne. By breake of day, before they eate or drinke, the men, women, and children about ten yeeres old, runne into the water, and there wash a good space, till the Sunne arise, and then they offer sacrifice to it, (srewing Tobacco on the land or water: the like they doe at Sun-set. Hee also relateth that one George e Casson (before mentioned) was sacrificed, as they thought, to the Duell, being stripped naked and bound to two stakes, with his backe against a great fire: then did they rip him, and burne his bowels, and dried his flesh to the bones, which they kept about-ground in a by-rome. Many other of our men were cruelly and treacherously executed by them, though perhaps not sacrificed; and none had been left, if their ambushes and treasons had taken effect. Powhatan thus invited 4 Captaine Ratcliffe and thirty others to trade for corne, and having brought them within his ambush, murdered them.

Alexander Whitaker saith, That their Priests (whom they call Quiyonghes) are Witchers, of whom the people stand in great awe. The manner of their life is Heremite-fashion, in woods, in houses sequestred from the common course of men, where none may come, or speake with them, vncalled. They take no care for victuals; for all such necessities are set in a place neere his Cottage for his wife. If they would have raine, or have lost any thing, he at their request coniureth, and often preuileth. He is their Physician if they bee sicke, and sucketh their wounds. At his word they make warre and peace, and doe nothing of moment without him. Master Relph affirms that these Priests live not solitarily, and in other things is of another opinion, which perhaps our former Author at his first coming, might have by relation of others.

The Worowance of Acawmacke told our men of a strange accident: two children being dead, and buried, being reviewed by the parents, seemed to haue liuely and cherefull countenances, which caused many to behold them, and none of the beholders escaped death.

§. III.

Of the Sasquesahanocks, with other, and later obseruations of the Virginian Rites.

The Sasquesahanocks are a Gyantly people, strange in proportion, behaviour, and attire, their voice sounding from them, as out of a Cane; their attire of Beares skins, hanged with Beares pawes, the head of a Wolfe, and such likeiewels: and (if any would haue a spoone to eate with the Duell) their Tobacco pipes were three quarters of a yard long, carved at the great end with a Bird, Beare, or other deuice, sufficient to beat out the braines of a Horse (and how many Ases braines are beaten out, or rather mens braines smoaked out, and Ases haled in by our lesse Pipes at home?) the rest of their furniture was suitable. The calfe of one of their legges was measured three quarters of a yard about, the rest of his limbes proportionable. With much adoe restrained they this people from worshipping our men. And when our men prayed (according to their daily custome) and sung a Psalm, they much wondered: and after began in most passionate manner to hold vp their hands to the Sunne, with a Song, then embracing the Captaine, they began to adore him in like manner, and so proceeded (notwithstanding his rebuking them) till their song was ended: which done, one with a most strange action and vncomely voice began an Oration of their loues. That ended, with a great painted Beares skinn they couered the Captaine, another hung about his necke a chaine of white Beades. Others laid eightene Mantles at his feet, with many other ceremonies, to create him their Gouvernour, that hee might defend them against the Massawomekes, their enemies. As these are very great, so the Weigwocomes are very little.

I may also here insert the ridiculous conceits which some Virginians hold, concerning their

their first originall, as I have heard from the relation of an English Youth,^a which lived long amongst the Sauges: that a Hare came into their Country and made the first men, and after persued them from a great Serpent; and when two other Hares came thither, that Hare for their entertainment killed a Deere, which was then the only Deere that was, and strewing the haire of that Deeres hide, euery haire proued a Deere. He said they worshipped towards a certaine Hoop or Sphere doubled a crosse, which was set vpon an heape of stones in their houles. They had a house without the Towne for the Women, in the time of their naturall sicknesse to keepe in, where no men might come.

^b Cap. Argols Boy, his name was Henry Spill. mal.

- But of their opinions and ceremonies in Religion, who fitter to be heard than a Virginian, an experienced Man and Counsellor to Opachanough their King and Gouvernour in Powhatan abience? Such is Tomacomo, at this present in London, sent hither to oblerue and bring newnes of our King and Country to his Nation; some others^c which haue bene here in former times, being more silly, which hauing seene little else then this Citie, haue reported much of the Houses, and Men, but thought we had small store of Come or Trees: the Virginians imagining that our men came into their Country for supply of these defects. This Man therefore, being landed in the West parts, found cause of admiration at our plenty in these kinds, and (as some haue reported) began to tell both Men and Trees, till his Arithmetike fayled. For their numbring beyond an hundred is imperfect, and somewhat confused. Of Him (Sir Thomas Dale man being our Interpreter) I learned, that their Okeus doth often appear to them in His Houle or Temple: the manner of which apparition is thus. First, toure of their Priests or sacred Persons (of which he said he was one) goe into the Houle, and by certaine words of a strange Language (which he repeated very roundly in my hearing, but the Interpreter vnderstood not a word, nor doe the common people) call or coniure this Okeus, who appeareth to them out of the Aire, thence comming into the Houle and walking vp and downe with strange words and gestures, causeth eight more of the principall persons to be called in, all which twelue standing round about him, he prescribes to them what hee would haue done. Of him they depend in all their proceedings, if it bee but in a hunting Iourney, d who by winds or other awefull tokens of his presence, holds them in a superstitious both feare and confidence. His apparition is in forme of a personable Virginian, with a long blacke locke on the left side, hanging downe neere to the foot. This is the cause why the Virginians weare these sinister lockes; which some thinke (I haue heard Sir Thomas Dale and Master Ralph of that opinion) was first by our Men in the first Plantation, little aboue thirty yeeres since, borrowed from these Sauges: (a faire vnlovely generation of the Lone-lacke, Christians imitating Sauges, and they the Deuill) this Virginian so admiring this Rite, that in arguing about Religion, he objected to our God this defect, that hee had not taught vs so to weare our haire. After that he hath stayed with his twelue so long as he thinkes fit, he departeth vp into the ayre whence he came. Tomacomo auerred that this was Hee which made Heaven and Earth; had taught them to plant so many kinds of Corne; was the Author of their good; had prophesied to them before of our mens comming; knew all our Country; whom hee made acquainted with his comming hither, and told him that within so many moneths he would returne: but the Deuill or Okeus answered, that it would bee so many more: neyther at his returne must he goe into that house, till Okeus shall call him. He is very zealous in his superstition, and will heare no persuasions to the truthe; bidding vs teach the Boyes and Girles (which were brought ouer from thence) Hee being too olde now to learne. Being asked, what became of the soules of dead men, he pointed vp to Heaven; but of wicked men, that they hung betwene Heaven and Earth? This Tomacomo hath Matanchanna one of Powhatans Daughters to wife. The vulgar are held in great awe by their ignorance; and when any of them haue got a good Deere, some of the greater will pretend Okeus his name, and cause it to be brought to His Houle, and then share it at their pleasure.
- They hold it a disgrace to feare death: and therefore when they must dye, doe it resolutely; as happened to one which had robbed the English, and by Powhatan (vpon complaint made to Him) was fetched sixscore miles from the place where he lurked, and by this Tomacomo, in the presence of the English executed, his braines being knocked out, shewing no signe of feare or dismayednesse. They vie to make Blacke Boyes once in fourteene or fiftene yeeres generally, for all the Country (this hapned the last yeere, 1615.) when all of a certaine age, that haue not bene made Blacke Boyes before, are initiated in this Ceremonie. They vie to make some at other times by themselves, as before shewed of Rapahannock out of Captaine Smith, and Master White, which then mistooke it for a Sacrifice. Some foure moneths after that Rite they lye apart, and are fed by some appointed to carry them their foode; they speake to no man, nor come in company, seeme distracted (some thinke by some Deuillish apparition feared; certaine, to oblige them to that Deuillish Religion as by a Hellish Sacrament of the Deuils institution) and will offer to shoot at such as come nigh them. And when

d Sometimes when they are preparing to hunt, hee will by some knowne signe manifest himselfe, and direct them to game: they all with great admiration acknowledge that signe, and following.

e This proued true, contrary to Tomacomo's minde, being delirious to returne in the first ship which is gone already.

they come into company, yet are for a certain time of silent and strange behaviour, and will do any thing neuer to desperate that they shall be bidden; if they tell them they shall bee old men if they goe not into the fire, they will doe it. There is none of their men but are made Blacke Boyes at one time or other. Let vs obſerue theſe things with pity and compaſſion, and endeavour to bring theſe ſilly ſoules out of the ſnares of the Deuill, by our prayers, our purges, and all our beſt endeouours. This may be added, that their young people haue in manner no knowledge, and the vulgar little, of their Religion. They vie alſo to beguile them with their Okee, or Image of him in their houſes, into whole mouth they will put a Tobacco pipe kindled, and one behind that Image drawes the ſmoke, which the ſillier vulgar and children thinke to be done by their God or Idoll.

M. George Percy

They haue a certaine herbe called W. yſake, like Liuert wort, which they chew and ſpit into poiſoned wounds, that are thereby healed in ſeure and twenty houres. In finding out their medicinall Roore (it is the Relation of Maſter George Percy) ſix of them hold together by the armes, and goe ſinging, and withall ſearching. and when they haue found it, ſit downe ſinging, croſſing the Root with their hands for a good ſpace, then gather, chew, and ſpit. He thus deſcribeth their dances; One ſtands in the middleſt, ſinging and clapping hands; all the reſt dance about him, ſhouting, hollowing, ſtamping with antike geſtures, like to many Deuils, their feet alwaye. (and only) agreeing in one ſtroke. Landing at Kecoughtan, the Sauages entertained them with a dolefull noyſe, laying their faces to the ground, and ſcratching the Earth with their nayles. The Horowance of Rapahanna met them, playing on a Flute of a Reed, with a Crowne of Deeres haire coloured red, faſhioned like a Roſe, with a Chaine of Beads about his necke, and Bracelets of Pearle hanging at his eares, in each eare a Birdes claw. The women are of a modeſt proud behaviour; with an Iron, pounce and raze their bodies, legges, thighes, and armes, wondrous knots and pourtraytures of Fowles, Fiſhes, Beaſts, and ruba painting into the ſame, which will neuer out. The Queene of Apamatica was attired with a Crownet beſet with many white bones, her eares hanged with Copper, a Chaine thereof ſix times compaſſing her necke. The Mas haue their heads all but the hinder part: the Wives wear it all of a length: the Men wear the left locke long, as is ſaid already, ſometimes an ell, which they tie when they pleaſe in an artificiall knot, bucke with feathers, the right ſide ſhauen. The King of Palpahey was painted all blacke, with hornes on his head like a Deuill. He teſtiſieth of their hard fare watching euery third night, lying on the bare cold ground, what weather ſoeuer came, and warding the next day a ſmall Can of Barley ſodden in water, being the ſuſtinance for hve men a day: their drinke bra-kish and ſlimy water. This continued ſixe moneths.

g Cap. Smith,

The Virginians are borne white: their chaire blacke, few haue beards, and they plucke out the hautes which would grow: the women with two ſuels are their Barbers: they are ſtrong, nimble, and handy, incontinant, timorous, quicke of apprehenſion, cautious, couetous of Copper and Brads; they ſeldome forget an injury, and ſeldome ſteale from each other, leſt the Coniurers ſhould bewray them, which it is ſufficient that theſe thinke they can doe. They haue their Lands and Gardens in proper, and moſt of them lue of their labour. The cauſe of their blackneſſe Maſter Ralph ſcribes to their Oynments which in their ſmoke Houſes they vie; euen as Bacon with vs is coloured: this within doores they vie againſt the fire, abroad againſt the Sunne. Maſter Wingfield ſayth, they would be of good complexion, if they would leaue painting (which they vie on their face and ſhoulders). He neuer ſaw any of them groſſe, or bald: they would haue beards, but that they pluck away the haire: they haue one wife, many Loues, and are alſo Sodomites. Their elder women are Cookes, Barbers, and for ſeruice; the younger for dalliance. The women hang their children at their backes, in Summer naked, in Winter vnder a Deere-skin. They are of modeſt behaviour. They ſeldome or neuer brawle: in entertayning a ſtranger, they ſpread a mat for him to ſit downe, and dance before him. They twear their nayles long to flye their Deere: they put Bow and Arrowes into their Childrens hand before they are ſix yeeres old.

In each eare commonly they haue three great holes, whereat they hang Chaines, Bracelets or Copper: ſome wear in theſe holes a ſmall Snake coloured greene and yellow, neere half a yard long, which crawling about his necke, offereth to kiſſe his lips. Others wear a dead Rat tied by the tail. Their names are given them according to the humour of the Parents. Their women they ſay are eaſily deliuered: they waſh in the Rivers their young Infants to make them hardie. The women and children doe the houſhold and ſeld-work, the men diſplaying the ſame, and only delighting in fiſhing, hunting, warres, and ſuch manlike exerciſes: the women plant, reape, beare burthens, pound their Corne, make baſkets, pots, bread, and doe their Cookery and other buſineſſe. They eaſily kinde fire by chaſing a dry pointed ſticke in a hole of a little ſquare piece of wood.

Powhatan had about thirty Commanders, or Wierowances vnder him, all which were not in peace only, but seruiceable in Captaine Smiths Prehensencie, to the English, and still, as I haue bene told by some, that haue since bene there they doe affect him, and will aske of him. Powhatan hath three Brethren, and two Sisters, to whom the Inheritance belongeth successiually, and not to his or their Sonnes till after their death, and then the eldest Sisters Sonne inheriteth. He hath his treasure of Skins, Copper, Pearles, Beades, and such like, kept in a house for that purpose, and there stored against the time of his buriall. This House is fifty or threescore yards long, frequented onely by Priests. At the foure corners of this House stand foure Images as Sentinels, one of a Dragon, another of a Beare, a third of a Leopard, and the fourth of a Gyant. He hath as many women as he will, which when he is weary of, he bestoweth on whom he best liketh. His Will, and Customs are the Lawes. He executeth ciuill punishments on Malefactors, as broyling to death, being encompassed with fire, and other tortures. The other Wierowances, or Commanders (so the word signifieth) haue power of life and death, and haue some twentie men, some forcie, some an hundred, some many more vnder their command. Some were sent to inquire for those, which were left of Sir Walter Raleighs Colonie, but they could learne nothing of them, but that they were dead. Powhatan was gone Southwards when our men came last thence; some thought for feare of Opechancanoughs his younger Brother, a man very gracious, both with the people and the English, jealous lest hee and the English should conspire against him, thinking that he will not returne; but others thinke hee will returne againe. His second Brother is decrepit and lame. His age is not so great as some haue reckoned; the error arising from the Virginian computation of yeeres; they reckoning euery Spring and euery Fall feuerall yeeres. So did Tomocomo at his coming into England, marke vp his time, accounting each day, and (because they sayed in the night, when hee thought they would haue anchored by the shore) each night another day.

CHAP. VII.

Of Florida.

§. I.

Of the Ails of the Spanish and French in Florida: And of the Soyle and Cities.

NEXT to Virginia towards the South is situate Florida, so called, because it was first discovered by the Spaniards on ^e Palme Sunday, or as the most interprete, Easter day, which they call Pascua Florida: and not, as Theuet writeth, for the flourishing Verdures thereof. The first finder, after their account, was John Ponce de Leon, in the yeere 1512. but wee haue before shewed, that Sebastian Cabota had discovered it in the name of King Henrie the Seuenth of England. This Region extendeth to the five and twentieth degree. It runneth out into the Sea with a long point of Land, as if it would euer set barres to that swift current which theré runneth out; or point out the dangers of these Coasts to the hazardous Mariners.

Into the Land it stretcheth Westward vnto the borders of New Spaine, and those other Countries which are not fully knowne: otherwhere it is washed with a dangerous Sea, which separateth Cibicora, Bahama, and Lucania from the same. John Ponce afore said, hearing a rumour of a prodigious Well, which (as the Poets tell of Medea) would make old men become young againe, plaid the yongling to goe search it sixe monethes together, and in that inquiry, discovers this Continent; and repyring into Spaine, obteyneth this Province with the title of Adelantado. He returned with a Nauy and band of Souldiers, but at his landing was so welcom by the Floridians, that many of his men were slaine, and himselfe wounded vnto death. Pamphilo de Narvaez had no better successe: hee entred Florida, 1527. Alonso Narvaez called Cabo de Vacca or Cabeça de Vacca, and some of his company, after long captiuitie, escaped.

Pamphilo carried with him sixe hundred men: about the Riuer of Palmes his ships were wracked, and most of the Spaniards drowned. A few escaped drowning, but twelue fell mad, and like Dogges sought to worrie each others. Scarcely teene returned into Spaine.

Don Ferdinand de Soto enriched with the spoiles of Atibalba King of Peru, in which action he was a Captain and Horseman, heere found place to spend that which there hee had gotten. For hauing obtained the government of Florida, and gathered a band of sixe hundred men for that Expedition, in it he spent five yeares, searching for Minerals, till hee lost himselfe. Isulan Samado, and Abmada made lute for the like grant, but could not obtaine it. Fryer Luis de Belustre, and other Dominicks had vnderaken, by the way of preaching, to haue reduced the Floridians to Christianity, and the Spanish obedience, and were sent at the Emperours charge: but no sooner set foot on shore, then hee and two of his companions were taken by the Sauages, and cruelly slaine and eaten, their haueen scalpes being hanged vp in their Temple for a monument. This hapned in the yeere 1549. In the yeere 1524. Francis the first, the French King, had sent Iohn de Verrazano thither, but, because hee rather sought to discouer all along the Coast, then to search or settle within Land, I passe him ouer. In the yeere, 1562. That Worthy of France, Chastillon, Champion of Religion, and of his Countrey, sent Captaine Iohn Ribault, to discouer and Plant in these parts, which his Voyage and Plantation is written by Rene Landouiniere, one employed therein. Hee left Capt. Albert there with some of his company, who built a Fort called Charles Fort: but this Albert was slaine in a mutiny by his Souldiers, and they returning home: were so pursued by Famine, the Pursuivant of Diuine Iustice, that after their Shoes and Leather Jerkins eaten (their drinke being Sea-water, or their owne Urine) they killed and ate vp one of their owne company. Landouiniere was sent thither againe to inhabit, Anno 1564. and the next yeere Ribault was sent to supply his place.

But vncouth Famine had so wasted and consumed the French, before his arriuall, that the very bones of most of the Souldiers pierced thorow their starued skinner in many places of their bodies, as if they would now trust the empty hands no longer, but would become their owne Purueyers, and looke out for themselves. And yet, better it is to fall into the hands of God, then of mercilesse men: Famine being but a mere Executioner to Gods Iustice, but these executing also a Diuelliish malice. Such were the Spaniards, who were sent thither vnder the conduct of Don Pedro Melendez, which massacred all of every sexe and age, which they found in the fort: and Ribault being cast by shipwracke on the shore, and receiued of Vallemadus the Spaniard, with promises of all kindnesse, was cruelly murdered with all his company, except some few which they referred for their owne employments. The manner of it is at large handled by Landouiniere, by Morgues, by Challusius, which were as brands by diuine hand plucked out of the Spanish combustion. The Petition or Supplication put vp by the Orphanes, Widowes, and distressed kindred of that massacred number to Charles the Nijeth, mentioneth nine hundred, which perished in this bloody deluge.

The Spaniards hauing laid the foundations of their habitation in blood, found it too slippery to build any sure habitation thereon. For their cruelties both to the French and Floridians were retorted vpon themselves, in the yeere 1567, by Monsieur Dominique de Guzman, and his Associates, assisted by the Native inhabitants, and Florida was left destitute of Christian Inhabitants. Thus hath Florida becuse first courted by the English, wooed by the Spanish, almost wonne by the French, and yet remains a rich and beautifull Virgin, waiting till the Neighbour Virginia bestow on her an English Bridegroom, who as making the first loue, may lay the justest challenge vnto her.

Heretics are such, that Cabeza de Vaca, who was one of Naruaez wrecked companion, and Soto Cerrinall in this Floridian sute, and had trauelled thorow a great part of the In-land) affirmed to Charles the Emperour, that Florida was the richest Countrey of the World, and that he had therein seene Gold and Silver, and Stones of great values. Besides there is great varietie of Trees, Fruits, Bowles, Brasse, Beares, Leopards, Ounces, Wolves, wilde Dogges, Goats, Hares, Conies, Deere; Oxen with woolly hydes, Camels backs, and Horses manes. Sir Iohn Hawkins his second Voyage, published by Master Hakluyt, mentioneth viciorious hornes amongst the Floridians, which they wear about their necks, whereof the French-men obtained many pieces: and that they affirmed there are many of those beasts with one horne, which they put into the water before they drinke. Haply, this might be a tale of the French, to sell such pieces deare to the English, or the hornes of some other bea, or of the Sea-Viccorne. Our Discourse hath most right vnto their Rees. For their many Cities, the manner of their building, the manners of their Inhabitants, I would not bee so long. Morgues hath let vs see them in the Pictures.

They wall or impale them with poits fastned in the ground, the circle as of a Snail, continuing within that point where it began, and leauing a way but for two men to enter; at this ther end of that double empaling or entrance, stand two Watch-towres, one within, the other without the Circle, where Watch-men alway are set for defence: their hostles are round: their apparell nakednesse, except a beasts skin, or some ornament of Moose about their secret parts. They paint and raise their skins with great cunning; the smoke makes them sicke (even or eight dayes after; they rubbe ouer those raised workes, with a certaine herbe, which coloureth it is lame, so as it cannot be done away. They paint their faces, and their skins cunningly (this Morgues a Painter being Iudge) even to admiration. They let the nailes on their toes and fingers grow long: they are tall, nimble comely.

§. II.

Of their Customs, Manners and Superstitions.

They warre a alway one Country vpon another, and kill all the men they can take; the women and children they bring vp: they cut off the haire of the head together with the skin, and dry it, to reserve the same as a monument of their valour. After their returne from the warres, if they be victorious, they make a solema Feast, which lasteth three dayes, with Dances and Songs to the honour of the Sunne. For the Sunne and Moone are their Deities. Their Priests are Magicians also, and Physicians with them. They have many Hermaphrodites, which are put to great drudgerie, and made to beare all their cariages. In necessitie they will eat coales, and put sand in their Pottage. Threemonths in the yeere they forsake their houses, and lue in the Woods: against this time they haue made their prouision of victuall, drying the same in the smoke. They meete in consultation euery morning in a great common house, whither the King resorteth and his Senatots, which after salutation, sit downe in a round. They consult with the Lawas or Priest. And after this they drinke Cassine, which is very hote, made of the leaues of a certaine Tree, which none may taste that hath not before made his valour euident in the Warres. It sets them in a sweat, and taketh away hunger and thirst foure and twentie houres after. When a King dyeth, they bury him very solemnely, and vpon his graue they set the Cup wherein he was wont to drinke: and round about the graue they sticke many Arrowes, weeping and fasting three dayes together without ceasing. All the Kings which were his friends, make the like mourning: and in token of their loue, cut off halfe their haire (which they otherwise weare long, knit vp behind) both men and women. During the space of fixe Moneths (so they reckon their moneths) there are certaine women appointed which bevaile his death, crying with a loud voyce thrice a day, at morning, noone, and euening. All the goods of this King are put into his house, which afterwards they set on fire. The like is done with the Goods of the Priests, who are buried in their Houses, and then both House and Goods burned.

The women ^b that haue lost their Husbans in the Warres, present themselves before the King, sitting on their heeles, with great lamentations suing for reuenge, and they with other Widows spend some dayes in mourning at their husbands graues, and carry thither the Cup wherein he had wont to drinke: they cut also their haire neere the eares, throwing the same in the Sepulchre. There they cut also their weapons. They may not marry againe till their haire be growne that it may couer their shoulders.

When any is sicke, they lay him flat on a forme, and with a sharpe shell rasng off the skin of his forehead, sucke out the blood with their mouths, spitting it out into some Vessel. The women that giue sucke, or are great with child, come to drinke the same, especially if it be of a lusty youngman, that their milke may be bettered, and the child thereby nourished, may be stronger.

Ribauts ^a at his first being there, had fixed a certaine Pillar of stone, engrauen with the Armes of France on a Hill in an land, which Landoumiere at his coming found the Floridians worshipping as their Idoll, with kisses, kneeling, and other Deuotions. Before the same lay diuers Offerings of fruits of the Country, Rootes (which they vied cyther for food or Physicke) vessels full of sweet Oyles, with Bowes and Arrowes. It was girt about with Garlands of Flowres, and boughes of the best trees, from the top to the bottom. King Ashore himselfe performed the same honour to this Pillar, that hee receiued of his Successors. The King Athors was a goodly personage, higher by a foot and halfe then any of the French, representing a kind of Majestie and grauitie in his demeanure. He had married his owne Mother, and had by her diuers Children of both sexes; but after she was espoused to him, his Father Satoniona did not touch her.

This Salouina when he went to warre, in the presence of the French vsed these Ceremonies: The Kings his coadiutors sitting around, hee placed himselfe in the midst, at his right hand had a fire, and at his left two vessels full of water. Then did hee expresse indignation and anger in his lookes, gesture, hollow murmurings, and loud cries, answered with the like from his Souldiers: and taking a wooden dish, turned himselfe to the Sunne, as thence desiring victorie, and that as he now shed the water in the dish, so he might shed the blood of his Enemies. Hurling therefore the water with great violence into the Ayre, and therewith besprinkling his Souldiers, he said, Doe you thus with the blood of our Enemies: and powring the water which was in the other vessell on the fire, So (saith hee) may you extinguish your foes, and bring backe the skins of their heads. Outina or Vina another King was an Enemy to this Salouina: he in his expedition which hee made against his Enemies (wherein he was assisted by the French) consulted with this Magician about his success. He espying a Frenchmans Target, demandeth the same, and (in the midst of the Armie) placeth it on the ground, drawing a circle five foote ouer about it, adding also certaine notes and characters: then did he set himselfe vpon the Target, sitting vpon his heeles, mumbling I know not what, with variety of gestures about the space of a quarter of an houre: after which he appeared so transformed into deformed shapes, that he looked not like a man, wreathed his limbes, his bones cracking, with other actions seeming supernaturall. At last he returns himselfe as it were weary and astonished, and comming out of the Circle, saluted the King, and told him the number of their Enemies and place of their encamping, which they found very true. This King was called Helata Outina, which signifieth, a King of Kings, and yet had but a few hundredths of men in his Armie, which he conducted in their ranks, himselfe going alone in the midst. They drye the armes and legges, and crownes of their Enemies which they haue slaine, to make solempne triumph at their returne, which they doe, fastning them on Poles pitched in the ground, the men and women sitting round about, and the Magician with an Image in his hand, mumbling curses against the Enemy: ouer-against him are three men kneeling, one of which beatech a stone with a club, and answereth the Magician at euery of his imprecations, the other two sing and make a noyse with certaine Rattles.

They sow or set their Corne rather, as in Virginia: and haue two Seed-times, and two Harvests, which they bring into a publike Barne or common Store-house, as they doe the rest of their victuals, none fearing to be beguiled of his Neighbour. Thus doe these Barbarians enioy that content, attended with sobrietie and simplicitie, which wee haue banished together out of our Coasts: euery one distrustful or defrauding others, whilst cyther by miserable keeping, or luxurious spending; he (which is bad to all) is worst to himselfe. To this Barne they bring, at a certaine time of the yeere, all the Venison, Fish, and Crocodiles, (dried before in the smoke for the better preservation) which they meddle not with, till need forcéth them, and then they signifie the same to each other. The King may take thereof as much as he will. This provision is sent in baskets on the shoulders of their Hermaphrodites, which wear long haire, and are their Porters for all burthens.

They hunt Harts after a strange manner: for they will put on a Harts skinn, with the legges and head on, so that the same shall serue them to stalk with, and they will looke thorow the eye and the holes of the Hide, as if it were a Vizard, thereby deceiuing their Game, which they shoot and kill, especially at the places, where they come to drinke. Their Crocodiles they take in a strange manner. They are so plagued with these beast, that they keepe continual watch and ward against them, as other-where against their Enemies. For this purpose, they haue a watch-houle by the Rivers side, and when hunger driues the beast on shore for his prey, the Watchmen call to men appointed: they come tenne or twelue of them, bearing a beame or tree, the smaller end whereof they thrust into the mouth of the Crocodile (comming vpon them gaping for his prey) which being sharpe and rough, cannot be got out, and therewith they ouer-turne him, and then being laid on his backe, easily kill him. The flesh is tasteth like Veale, and would be fauourie meate, if it did not fauour so much of a Muskie sent. Their sobrietie lengtheneth their liues, in such sort that one of their Kings told me, saith Morgues, that he was three hundred yeeres old, and his Father, which there he shewed me alius, was fiftie yeeres elder then himselfe: when I saw him, mee thought I saw nothing but bones covered with skinn. His sinewes, veines, and arteries, (fiyeth Lamdenierre, in description of the same man,) his bones and other parts appeared to cleetly thorow his skinn, that a man might easily tell them, and diuerne the one from the other. He could not see, nor yet speake without great paine. Monseur de Origny demanding of their age, the younger of these two called a company of Indians, and striking twice on his thigh, laid his hand on twof of them, he shewed that they were his Sonnes: and striking on their thighes, he shewed others which were their Sonnes, and so continued till the fire generation. And yet it was told them, that the eldest of them both might by the course of Nature live thirtie or fortie yeeres more.

They have a diuellish custome, to offer the first-borne male-children to the King for a sacrifice. The day of this dismall Rite being notified to the King, he goeth to the place appointed, and sits downe. Before him is a blocke two foot high, and as much thicke, before which the mother of the child sitting on her heeles, and covering her face with her hands, deploreth the death of her sonne. One of her friends offereth the child to the King: and then the women, which accompanied the mother, place themselves in a Ring, dancing and singing, and shee that brought the child, stands in the mids of them with the child in her hands, singing somewhat in the Kings commendation. Sixe Indians stand apart, and with them the Priest with a Club, wherewith after these ceremonies, he killeth the child on that blocke: which was once done in our presence.

Another religious Rite they obserue about the end of Februarie: they take the hide of the greatest Hart they can get (the hornes being on) and fill the same with the best hearbs which grow among them, hanging about the hornes, hecke, and bodie, as it were Garlands of their choicest fruits. Having thus sowed and trimmed it, they bring the same with fouggs and pipes, and set it on a high tree, with the head turned toward the East, with prayers to the Sunne, that hee would cause the same good things to grow againe in their land. The King and his Magician stand neerest the tree and begin, all the people following with their Responses. This done, they goe their wayes, leaving it there till the next yeere, and then renew the same ceremone.

Ribaulte at his first coming had two of the Floridians aboard with him certaine dayes, who, when they offered them meat, refused it, giuing them to vnderstand, that they were accustomed to wash their face; and to stay till sun-set before they did eate: which is a ceremone common in all those parts. They obserue a certaine Feast called Toya, with great solemnitie. The place where it is kept, is a great circuit of ground, swept and made neat by the women the day before: and on the Feast-day they which are appointed to celebrate this Feast, come painted and trimmed with feathers, and set themselves in order. Three others in differing painting and gestures follow with Tabrets, dancing and singing in a lamentable tune, others answering them. After that they haue sung, danced, and turned three times, they fall to running like vnbridled Horses, through the midst of the thicke Woods: the Indian Women continuing all the day in weeping and teares, cutting the armes of the yong Gyles with Muske-balls, with hurling the blood into the Ayre, crying out three times, He Toya. Those that ranne through the Woods returne two dayes after, and then dance in the midst of the place, and cheere vp those which were not called to the Feast. Their dances ended, they deuoure the meat, for they had not eate in three dayes before. The Frenchmen learned of a boy, that in this meane-while the Lamas had made inuocation to Toya, and by Magickall Characters had made him come that he might speake with him, and demand diuers strange things of him, which for feare of the Lamas he durst not viter.

To prouoke them vnto reuenge against their enemies, they in their Feasts haue this custome: There is a Dagger in the roome, which one taketh, and striketh therewith one that is thereunto appointed, and then places the Dagger where he had it, and anon reneweth the stroke, till the Indian falling downe, the women, Girles, Boyes, come about him, and make great lamentation, the men meane-while drinking Cassine, but with such silence, that not one word is heard: afterwards they apply Mosse warmed, to his side to heale him. Thus doe they call to minde the death of their Ancestors slaine by their enemies, specially when they haue snauaded, and returne out of their enemies Countrey without the heads of any of them, or without any Captiues.

§. III.

Of the more in-land parts of Florida, discovered by NUNEZ.

¶ Let vs take view of the more Southerly and Westerly parts of Florida beyond the point. Of Pamphilo Naruaz his vnfortunate Expedition ye haue heard. The whole history written by one of his company, Aluaro Nunez, is extant in Campanus, out of which I haue inserted such things as I hold most fit. At their landing in Cuba a Temista a tempest by land and sea assailed them, so furious, that it ouerthrew all the houses and Churches, making them to fly with no lesse feare of the Trees falling on them, and holding fixe or seuen together, lest the wind should haue lifted them into the aire: they heard also (or feare so phantasied) the noise of bells, cries, flutes, and other instruments making this dreadfull musicke, to which the hills, trees, and houses thus danced: and after found one of the ship-Boats vpon the trees; the ships being perished. The first towne in Florida they came to, was Apalachen, which had not about fortie small low cottages, so built by reason of continuall tempests. From thence they trauelled to Aute, by the way encountering a Giant-like people, with bowes as big as ones arme, eleuen or twelue spannes long, wherewith they shot both exactly and forcibly, piercing good armours. A long time they held on an vnprofitable march, till many of them were slaine or consumed by sicknesse and famine, which made them bethinke them of building vessels there, to transport them. But their hard hip pursued them at Sea, and besides outward tempests, assaulted them with one inward (more implacable) of thirst, which forced them to drinke the sea-water, and that so greedily that some died therewith presently. Neither would the Sea continue this hospitalitie (howsoever inhospitable) but hauing satisfied himselfe in the persons of some, and goods of all, betrayed the rest to the barbarous Indians, through many Nations of which they trauelled with as hard disaduentures as euer Virginia yeelded, euen when it was at worst, and let our most clamorous excepters bee Iudges. Cold, which then attended the Winter, was exceeding sharpe, and they naked: and yet Famine was more terrible then cold, which made eue of their companie eate vp each other, till only one remayned. And no maruell; for famine which will be a traueiler and sojourner in all places, hath seemed to fixe his habitation in these, and to hold all the nations adioyning vnder his lawlesse law, and tyrannicall subiection.

q They called this place Maljatta.

The first Indians they met with, had one, and some, both of their teats bored thorow, in the hollow whereof (with no little gallantry) they wear a Reece, two spans and a halfe long, and two fingers thicke: and likewise for greater brauerie, wear another lesse Reece thorow their nether lip. They liued in these parts two moneths (which was the season of certain rootes growing vnder the water, which they then liued on) at other times in other places, with fish, and what they can finde. When one of them hath a sonne dead, all of the kindred and people mourne for him a yeere, at morning and noone, & then burie him. These exequies they obserue to all but the old folkes, of which they hold no such account, as hauing already liued out their time. They haue amongst them Physicians or Priests, whose dead bodies they burne with great solemnitie, and make powder of the bones, which the kindred men a yeere after drinke. These may haue more wives, the rest but one. When any brother or sonne is dead, those of that house in three months space, seke not abroad for their fooode, though they die of famine, leauing that care to their kinsfolkes and neighbors, which sometimes almost sturue their cures. The Physicians vied to heale with breathing on the sicke, and touching them, they beleeuing, that if Bones and herbs haue such facultie being applyed, much more Man, as a more excellent creature: they would needes haue these Spaniards such Physicians, who (if you beleue them) did many cures with great admiration, but could not cure their Famine and captiuitie in many yeeres.

s Al. Nurec,
his peregrination thorow many strange Nations.

This our Author fled from these to the Queues and Marianes, which three moneths in the yeere leaue their former habitations, to goe seeke a kind of fruit called Tune, of the bignesse of an egge, blacke, and of good taste. These are festiuall moneths to these fistiuall nations eating and drinking the iuyce of these Tune, yea, many months afore comforting their present famine, and pacifying their croaking entrailes, with hope of the approaching Tune-season: and thus with words they solaced Aluinos impatient hunger fixe months before he could thus indeede satisfie it. Their houses are Mats vpon foure Arches, shifted euery second or third day, to seeke fooode. They sowe nothing, hauing as well a dogs ease, as hunger, yea, (like some of Duke Humphreys gallant guests) they set a good face on the matter and passe the time in mirth and dancing, when sometimes their teeth dance not in foure daies together. They doted so superstitiously on their dreames, that vpon this dreame-warning, they would kill their sonnes, and without so much, would leaue their daughters to be deuoured of beasts, lest (said they) they should grow vp (as the times then were) by marriages with them, to increase the number of their enemies. They haue two or three kinds of bad Rootes, and sometime Fish, or Venison, but all rare. They eate Ants eggs, Wormes, Serpents Frogs, Earth, Wood, Dung of wilde beasts, and keepe the Bones of Fishes and Serpents, to grinde, and eate afterwards. Their women and olde men are put to beare their burthens and drudgeries. They are molested with three sorts of flies, whose biting leaues a seeming leproie: they vie smoke fires in their roomes, almost with the price of their eyes, lausing their skins: others carrie fire-brands in their hands, and therewith set all things as they passe on fire, both to preuent them, & to lunt their game into fittest places for their taking the same. They haue Kine as big as in Spain, with small hornes and long haire, 400. leagues alongst the country.

Much like was the state of the Canagadi, Camoni, Auatares, Malicones and other Floridian nations. These keepe no reckoning of time by the Sunne or Moone, but (like Plautus his Parasite) by the bellie, which is Magister artis in obseruing the seasons of their fruits and and fish. They tell strange things of an euill Spirit, which in fearfull apparitions did astonish them, and cut their flesh. All these Indians haue a custome, not to lyue with their wiues after they know them once conceiued, till two yeares after their deliuerie, and their mothers giue them sucke: (he saith) till they be twelue yeeres old, and are able to get food for themselves: which they did because of the famine in those parts, whereby they would otherwise haue died. If any sicken by the way, they leaue him there to die, except he hath a father or brother which wil carry him (in this their fleeting habitation) on their necks. They vpon any discontent, diuorce themselves and marry to others, except they haue had children together: and in mutuall contentions they come to buffets and bastinadoes, till wearied, or their wiues part them: but neuer deal with deadly weapons, and sometimes separate themselves and their families, till time waste away their indignation, and then returne: yet are the fierce and politike in warre.

bigges.

These Nations, and the Sufolas, Comos, Camoles, Quitones, and other Names of Barbarisme, v/e Tobacco, and a drinke made of the leaues of certaine trees boiled with water, and put vp into certaine vessels, which they drinke as hot as they can endure, crying meane-while, who will drinke? And when the women heare this cry, they suddenly stand still, without stirring any way, although they be laden; they beleeuing that if any woman should then moue her selfe, some euill thing would enter into the drinke, whereof they must die soone after: and therefore if any such accident happen, they cast all away; and like wife if a woman passe by whiles they are brewing it, if the vessell be vncouered. When the women haue their naturall fluxe, they must be their owne Cookes, but for no body else. They haue some Men married to other Men, being attired in habit of Women, and performing onely womanly offices. In some places as they passed, their Physicians (which commonly are in savage Nations, Magicians and Priests) had rattles of Gourds, which they suppose to come from heauen, and to haue great vertue, none other daring to touch them. Some vfed for boiling wild Gourds, not by putting fire vnder, but by heating stones continually in the fire, and putting them into the liquor till it seethe. Some people on the Mountaines, for a third part of the yeere ate nothing but a powder made of straw. In some places were trees of such venomous qualitie, that the leaues thereof in standing waters would poison 30 whatsoeuer dranke thereof. Some acknowledged a certaine man in heauen called Agnar, who gaue them raie, and all good things. All these people, as he passed with a Negro and two others, (after he had escaped some of his first Masters which held him in hard slaerie) held them for children of the Sunne, and therefore receiued them with great reuerence, and festiuall pompe, and conueyed them still to the next nation Westward towards the South Sea, till they came to Spaniards: alwayes vsing to rob those people to whom they deliuered them of their little wealth, which departed from the same with the greater content, because they serued the next people (and so successiue) with like fauour. They found some rich Sables of muskie sent, and Emeralds. They were out in this Expedition and captiuitie, ten yeeres before they could recouer Spaine, from 1527. to 1537.

Other Observations of Florida.

These things following, Ortelius saith, he had from his Nephew Celins Ortelius, by the relation of an eye-witnesse: The King giueth, or selleth rather, to every man his wife. If a woman commit adulterie she is bound to a tree, her armes and legges, stretched out all day, and sometimes whipped. A woman, three houres after she is deliuered 30 of a child, carries the Infant to the Riuer to wash it. They obserue no discipline in their families with their children. They haue fleas, which bite so eagerly, that they leaue a great deformitie like a leproie after. They haue winged Serpents, one of which I saw, saith, Nicotian, Challapus, the wings whereof seemed to enable it to fly a little height from the ground. The Inhabitants were very carefull to get the head thereof, as was thought, for some superstition. Baters saith, that they haue three sorts of Harts, and of one of them make the same commodities which we doe of our Kine, keeping them tame, and milking them. The Spaniard hath three Garrisons on the coast of Florida, S. Iacomo, S. Agostino, and S. Philippo.

They are much addicted to venery, and yet abstaine from their wiues after conception. When Ferdinando Soto entred Florida, he there found amongst the Indians 50 one Iohn Ortiz, a Spaniard, which by the subtiltie of the people, vnder colour of deliuering a Letter which they had fastened to a cleft Cane, was taken, and liued twelue yeeres with them. Volta the Lord of the place made him his Temple-keeper, because that by night the wolves came and carried away the dead corps. Hee reported that these people are worshippers of the Devil, and wile to offer unto him the life and blood of their Indians, or of any people that they can come by: and when he will have them doe that sacrifice unto him, hee speaketh wth them, and tells them that he is a thief, and enioynes them this sacrifice. They have a Prophecie, That a white people should subdue them; wherein the French and Spaniards have hitherto failed in their attempts. Soto having in his greedy hopes neglected the many commodities he might have enjoyed, to finde greater, was brought to such damps, that he chereless sickened, and after died. But before he tooke his bed, he sent to the Cacique of Quigalta, to tell him that he was the Child of the Sunne, and therefore would have him repaire to him; he answered, That if he would dry v^p the River, he would beleue him. And when he was dead, because he made the Indians beleue that the Christians were immortal, the Spaniards sought to concale his death. But the Cacique of Guachoya busily enquiring how him, they answered, that he was gone to heauen, as many times he did, and had left another in his place. The Cacique thinking he was dead, ^b commanded two yong and well proportioned Indians to be brought thither, saying, it was their custome to kill men, when any Lord died, to wait on him by the way: which their cruell courtisie the Spaniards refused, denying that their Lord was dead. One Cacique asked Soto what he was, and why he came thither? He answered, that he was the sonne of God, and came to teach them knowledge of the Law. Nofso, saith the Cacique, if God bids thee thus to kill, Ileale, and worke all kind of mischiefte.

For their credulitie in like case, Landoniere telleth, that a strange and vnheard-of lighting hapned within a league of their Fort, which consumed in an instant 500. acres of meadow, being then greene; and halfe couered with water, together with the fowles that were therein. It continued burning three dayes together, and made the Frenchmen thinke, that for their likes the Indians had set fire on their dwellings: and were gone to some other place. But a certaine Paracussy, which is one of their petty Kings, or Caciques, sent to him a Present, beseeching him to command his men that they should shooe no more towards his dwelling, thinking that the Ordinance had caused all this, which occasion he vsed to his owne good, by arrogating that to himselfe which he saw their simplicitie conceived of. Within two dayes after this accident, fell such an beast, that the River (I thinke) was ready to see the sand in the mouth of the River were found dead therewith, fishes enow to haue laden fifty Cares, whiet of illuck by this facion much sicknesse.

c Landon was told this of certain Spaniards which lived in those parts.

Calos is neere the Cape of Florida. The King there made his subjects beleue, that his Sorceries and charmes were the cause that made the earth bring forth her fruit, and that he might the easier perswade them, he retired himselfe once or twice a yeere to a certain house, accompanied with two or three of his friends, where he vsed incantaments. If any man offered to see what he did, it cost him his life. Every yere he offereth a man in the time of harvest, which was kept for that purpose, and taken of such Spaniards as had suffered shipwrack on that Coast.

They which further desire to know the riches and commodities of these Countreys, may report to the Authors in this Chapter mentioned. Sir Francis Drake, in the yeere 1586, besides his worthy exploits in other places; tooke the Forts of S. Iohn, and Saint Augustine; whence he brought Pedro Morales, and Nicholas Bergogon, whose relations concerning that Countrey Master Hackluit hath inserted among other his painfull labours.

d David Ingram reported many strange things which he saith he saw in these parts, Elephants, Horses, and beasts twice as big as Horses, their hinder parts resembling Greyhounds; Bulls with eares like Hounds; beasts bigger then Beares, without head or necke, but having their eyes and mouthes in their breasts; and another beast, (Cerberus) heealls with Columbin, which he (saith he) the Devil in likeness of a Dogge, and sometimes of a Calfe, with many other matters, wherein he must pardon me, if I be not too prodigall of my Faith. He tellys of punishment of adultery by death, the woman curing the adulterers throat, and the neerest kinsman, hers, after many prayers to the Collubus, and a further punishment; in that they haue no quick bodie buried with them, to attend them into the other world, as all others haue. But they that list to beleue, may consult with the Author. Anthony Goddard, (another of *Ingram*s company, left by Sir Iohn Hawkins) going another way, at Panuco yeelded himselfe to the Spaniards: with whom was Miles Philips, and Iob Horrop, whose discourses of their disaduentures with the Spaniards and Indians, Master Hackluit hath published: and hath Goddards also written.

Of the Countreys situate Westward from Florida and Virginia towards the South-Sea.

ð. I.

of Cibola, Tiquis, Quinira, and Nona Albion.

10 WE haue hitherto discovered those parts of this Northerne America, which trend along the North Sea, which the English and French Nations haue most made knowne vnto vs: further Westward the mid-land countreys are not so well knowne; yet following our Spanish guides, wee here present them from their relations to your view. When as Cortez had conquered Mexico (as after followeth to be related) he was made Admirall of the South-Seas, but the government of Mexico and New Spaine was, with the title of Vice-roy, giuen to Antonio de Mendoza. These two, partly in emulation of each others glory, partly in hope of enriching themselves, sought to discover vnkowne Lands; the one by Sea; the later both by Sea & Land.

20 The Viceroy sent ⁴ as he himselfe telleth, Francis Vasquez de Coronado, and Frier Marco de Niza, with Stephen a Negro by land: out of whose relations we haue inferred that which concerneth our purpose. Mark ⁵ the Frier, and Stephen set forth with certaine Indians in this Discouerie: and Stephen going before, came to Ceuola, as Mark related, where hee was slaine: the Frier followed with his Indian guides, and passed thorow one place where was small store of Victuall, because it had not there rained, as the Inhabitants affirmed in three yeares space. The Indians call him Hayota, that is, a man come from Heauen. Hee passed on further, led by the fame of Ceuola, which with other fixe Cities were reported to beynder the government of one Lord, and to haue houses of stone, consisting of diuers stories, where were many Turqueses, with many other strange reports of their Markets, multitudes, and 30 wealth. But because the Frier came not there for feare of the Negros entertainment, let vs listen to ⁶ Francis Vasquez, who came, saw, and ouercame. An 1540. He went with his Army from Culiacan, which is 200. leagues from Mexico, and after a long and tedious journey, he at last arrived in this Prouince, and conquered (almost with the losse of himselfe) the first Citie of the seven, which he called Granado. Twice he was stricken downe with stones from the wall, as he offered to scale the same: He saith that their houses were of foure or fixe stories or lofts, to which they ascended on ladders; and that they had Cellers vnder the ground, good, and paved. But those seven Cities were small Townes, all standing in the compasse of foure leagues, all called by that generall name of Ceuola, or Cibola, and none of them particularly so called, but hauing other peculiar names, they were of like building. In this Towne which he conquered, stood 200. houses, walled about, and 300. others not walled. The Inhabitants had remoued their wiues and wealth to the Hill. Hee reporteth of beasts there, Beares, Tygres, Lions, and Sheepe as bigge as horses, with great hornes, and little tayles, Ounces also, and Stagges. That which the Indians worshipped (as farre as they coulde learne) was the Water, which, said they, caused the Corne to grow, and maintained their life. Hee found there a garment excellently embroidered with needle-worke. Vasquez went hence to Tiguez, to Cicuic, and to Quinira, as ⁷ Lopez de Gomara reporteth. This way is full of crooke-backed Oxen. Quinira is in 40. degrees, and the Countrey is temperate. They saw Ships in the Sea, which bare Alcatrazes, or Pelicans of Gold and Siluer in their Prowes, laden with Merchandise: which they tooke to be of China or Carhay.

40 The men in these parts cloath and shoo themselves with leather: they haue no bread of any kinde of graine: their chiefe food is flesh, which they often ate raw, either for custome, or for lacke of wood. They ate the fat as they take it out of the Ox, and drinke the blood hore (which of our buls is counted poison) and the flesh they warme (for they see the it not) at a fire of Ox-dung. They rather may be said to rauin, then to eat it: & holding the flesh with their teeth, cut it with ralsors of stone. They goe in companies as the Scythian Nomades, Tartarian floods, and many other Nations, following the seasons and best pasturings for their oxen. These Oxen ⁸ are of the bignesse and colour of our Buls, but their hornes are not so great. They haue a great bunch vpon their shoulders, and more haire on their fore-part, then on the hinder: and it is like wooll. They haue, as it were, a horse-mane on their backe bone, and much haire, and very long from their knees downwards. They haue great tufts of haire on their foreheads, and haue a kinde of beard vnder their chins and throats. the males haue very long tayles, with a great knob or stocke at the end: so that in some respect they resemble a Lyon, in other the Camels, Horses, Oxen, Sheepe, or Goats. They pass with their horns, and in their rage would overtake and kill a horse; for the horses fled from them, either for their deformitie, or because they had never seene the like. The people have no other riches: they are vnto them meat, drinke, apparell: their Hides also yield them houses, and ropes; their bones, bodkins: their sinewes and haire, thred: their horns, mawes, and bladders, vessels: their dung, fire: the Calues-skins, budgets, wherewith they draw and keepe water.

Ganara also mentioneth their Sheepe, which they so call, because they have fine wool and horns: they are as bigge as horses; their horns weigh fifty pound weight a peece. There are also Dogs which will fight with a Bull, and will carry fifty pound weight in Sacks, when they goe on hunting, or when they remove from place to place with their herds.

The winter is long and sharpe, with much snow in Cibola, and therefore they then keepe in their Cellars which are in place of Stoues vnto them. In the height of thirty seuen degrees, at Tiguez, the cold was so extreme, that the horses and men passed ouer the Riuer vp on the Ice. They there tooke a towne after five and forty dayes siege, but with much losse, and little gaine. For the Indians killed thirty horses in a night: and in another place certaine Spaniards; sent Onando vp into the countrey (they could not tell whether for sacrifice or for the shew) and wounded fifty horses: they drunke snow in stead of water: and seeing no hope to hold out, made a great fire, and cast therein all they had of worth, and then went all out to make way by force; where they were all in manner slaine, but not vnrueged, forcing some Spaniards to a company them into the Regions of Death, and wounding many more, both men and horses. The Snow continueth in these parts halfe the yeere. Quijara is more Northerly, and yet more temperate. The Spaniards returned to Mexico in the end of the yeare 1542, to no small grieve of Medozas, who had spent in this expedition six thousand Duckets. Some Friars staid, but were slaine by the people of Quijara, only one man escaped, to bring newes to Mexico.

Sir Francis Drake sailed on the other side of America to forty degrees of Northerly Latitude, and with cold was forced to retire, although the Sunne followed him all the way from Guatulo hither (which he sailed from the 6. day of April, to the 5. day of Iune) as if that most excellent and heavenly Light had delighted himselfe in his societie, and acknowledged him for his Soueraine more truly then the Spaniards (whereof anon we shall heare) or than Phaeton of the Poets, not able to compass this compassing journey: once, hee was so good a Scholler and learned the Sunns instruction so well, that he followed him in a watery field, all that his fiery circle, round about this earthly Globe, carried with the moving winde (as it were ariue wing), new stars, Islands, Seas, attending and admiring the English colours: and first of any Generall, loosed the girde of the world, and encompassing her in his fortunate armes, enjoyed her loue. But I lole my selfe while I find him: and yet excellent names, I know not how, compell men to stand awhile, and gaze with admiration, if not with adoration. This our English Knight landed on this coast in thirty eight degrees, where the inhabitants presented themselves vnto him, with presents of feathers, and kalls of Net-worke, which hee required with great humanity. The men went naked, the women knit loose garments of bull-rubes about their middles. They came a second time, and brought feathers, and bags of Tobacco; and after a long Oration of one that was Speaker for the rest, they left their bowes on a hill, and came downe to our men: the women meane-while remaining on the hill, tormented themselves, tearing the flesh from the cheekes, whereby it appeared that they were about some sacrifice. The newes being further spread, brought the King thither, which was a man of goodly stature: many tall men attended him: two Embassadors with a long Speech of halfe an houre, signified his coming before. One went before the King with a Scepter or Mace, wherein hanged two Crownes with three chaines: the Crownes were of knit-worke, wrought artificially with diuers coloured feathers, the chaines of a bony substance. The King followed clothed in Cony-skinnes: the people came after, all hauing their faces painted with white, blacke, and other colours, every one bringing his present, euen the very children also. The Scepter-bearer made a lowd speech of halfe an houre, taking his words from another, which whispered the same vnto him, which with a solempne applause being ended, they came all downe the hill in order without their weapons: the Scepter-bearer beginning a Song and dancing, wherein all the rest followed him. The King and diuers others, made severall Orations or Supplications to the Generall, to become their King: and the King with a Song did set the Crowne on the Generals head, and put the chaines about his necke, honouring him by the name of Etah. The common fort leaving the King and his guard, scattered themselves, with their Sacrifices, among our people, taking view of all, and so such as best pleased their fancy, which were the youngest, offered their Sacrifices, with weeping, scratching and tearing their flesh, with much effusion of blood. The English English disliked their deuotions, and directed them to the liuing God: they shewed againe their wounds, whereunto the other applied paysters and lotions. Every third day they brought their Sacrifices, till they perceiued that they were displeasing. And at the departure of the English, they (by stealth) provided a Sacrifice, taking their departing very grievously. They found herds of Deere feeding by thouldands, and the Country full of strange Conies, headed like ours, with the feet of a Want, and taile of a Cat, hauing vader their chins a bagge, into which they gather their meate when they haue filled their body abroad. There is no part of this Earth, wherein there is not some speciall likelihood of Gold or Silver. The Generall named the Country Nona Albion.

Of New Mexico and Cinaloa.

IN the yeere 1581. Augustine Ruiz, a Frier, learned by the report of certaine Indians called Concher, that toward the North there were certaine great Townes, not hitherto discovered by the Spaniards: whereupon, he, with two other companions of his owne Order, and eight Souldiers, went to seeke thele parts, and to preach vnto them. They came vnto the Prouince of les Tiguas, two hundred and fittie leagues Northwards from the Mynes of Saint Barbara, where one of the Friers was slaine by the Inhabitants. This caused the Souldiers to returne backe, but the Friers stayed still behind. The Franciscans fearing the losse of these their Brethren, procured Antonio de Espejo to vndertake this Iourney, with a company of Souldiers. Hee passing the Conchos, the Passaquates, the Toboques, came to the Patarabueyes, which is a great Prouince, and hath many Townes, their Houses flat roofed, and built of lime and stone, their streets orderly placed. The people are of great stature, and haue their faces, armes, and legges razed and pounced: Here were many Lakes of salt-water, which at a certaine time of the yeere waxeth hard, and becommeth very good salt. The Caciques kindly entertaigned them with 30 victuals and other presents, especially hides, and Chamois skins very well dressed, as well as those of Flanders: And passing many dayes Iourney further Northwards, they came where the Houses were foure stories high, well built, and in most of them, Stoues for the Winter season. The men and women weare Shoes and Boots with good soles of Neats Leather, a thing not elsewhere to be seene in the Indies. In this Prouince they found many Idols, which they worshipped: and particularly they had in euery Houe an Oratory for the Deuill, whereinto they ordinarily carry him meate: and (as the Papiests erect Croffes vpon high wayes) so haue this people certaine high Chappels, very well trimmed and painted, in which they say the Deuill wseth to take his ease, and to recreate himselfe as hee trauelleteth from one Towne to another. In the Prouince of Tiguas there were sixteene Townes, in one 40 of which the Friers aforesaid were slaine. Sixe leagues from thence was the Prouince Los Quires, which worship Idols as their Neighbours: they law there certaine Canopies, wherein were painted, the Sunne, Moone, and many Stars. It is in 37. degrees and an halfe. Hence they passed, keeping still their Northerly course, and found a Prouince called Cuames, where were fve Townes, one of which was Chia, which contained eight Market places, the houses were playstered and painted with diuers colours: they presented them curious Mantles, and shewed them rich Metals. Beyond this they came to the Ameies, and fteene leagues thence, to Acoma, which is situate vpon a Rocke: and hath no other entrance but by a Ladder, or paire of staires, hewne in the same Rocke: all their water was kept in Cisternes. They passed hence to Zuny, which the Spaniards call Cibola, and there found three Spaniards, left by Vasquez forty yeeres before, which had almost forgotten their owne Language.

50 Westward from hence they came to Mohotze, where were exceeding rich Mynes of Silver, as likewise in some of the other. These parts seeme to incline toward Virginia.

Martin Perez, a Iesuite writeth of these Inland parts, from Cinaloa 1591. that the flies about the Mountain Tepeluan (in 23. degrees) are so troublefome, as no beast can abide there: the Cimmechi are warlike Indians. Some Spaniards kept there, which heare Malle scarcely once in a yeere. The Prouince of Cinaloa is watered with eight Riuers. The soyle fertile and ayre wholsome: extending three hundred miles Northwards, and within two dayes Iourney of new Mexico. The people weare many Earrings in fifty holes which they make for that purpose, so that they are forced to sleepe with their faces vpwards. The women are clothed beneath the waste, aboue naked. Both they and the men weare long haire tied vp on knots, with Corals and shels therein: They are a handfull higher then the Spaniards, valiant, yf poysoned Arrows, perceable at home, terrible in warre, they haue many Languages. Some of them haue familiaritie and com mit abominable sinnes with the Deuill, They vie Polygamy, and thinke it not vnseemly to vse the Mother, Sister, Daughter, as furthering domesticke peace. Thus respect they affinity, but of Conianguitie are very Religious. They correct not their children. Their Marriages are solemnized after consent of Parents on both sides, with dances; the consummation is stayed till fit age of the parties, to whom they then leaue a House and household. They obserue a custome to make Gentlemen or Knights, giuing a Bow, and then setting him to fight with a Lion or wild beaſt, the death of which as the life of their Gentilitie. When one adopteth another, a stake is thrust into his throat, causing him to vomit all in his belly, and (as it were) his former birth together. They are great Gamesters, their play like that of Dice: in which they carry themselves very patiently without swearing or wording, and yet will lose the clothes from their backs, and goe home naked. If any be dangerously sicke, a Graue is digged and stands open, in which they bury him presently being dead, or else burne him together with his Houſe and stuffe, and there couer the ashes: sprinkling the Sepulchre with certaine dust, whereof they make a drinke, and eate and drinke themselves drunke.

J. J. Toltem.

Ludouicus Tribaldus Teletm in his Letter to Maſter Hakny 1605. writeth of one Iohn Onnate, who in the yeere 1599. travelled fūe hundred leagues from the Old, to New Mexico. He sent his Nephew to Acoma (a Towne strongly fortified by Nature) to trucke with them, whom they deceitfully ſue with his six companions. Onnate in reuenge, takes and kills the Indians and fires their dwellings: forced a great City to ſwear obedience to the King of Spaine, and another Citie also greater then the former. They built a Towne named Saint Iohn: found Mines of Gold and Silver: hunted the herds of Cibola. In the yeere 1602, he made another Expedition to the Lake of Conibas, on the banks whereof was a Citie (euen leagues long, and two in breadth, the houses built scattering with Hills and pleasant Gardens betwene. The Inhabitants all had fortified themselves in the Market place which was very large: the Spaniards departed without assault. Neere California were found large Hauens, before vnkowne; and the Spaniards determined to build Forts.

Now that wee haue heard of the In-land Discoveries by the Spaniards, and that Nahua Albion of Sir Francis Drake, let vs take some view of the Spanish Navigation on these Coasts.

The Discoveries of VLLOA and ALARCHON, on the Coasts of the South Sea.

a Fran. Vlloa
and Renns &
Hak. vol. 3.

Orres the Conquerour of Mexico sent Francis de Vlloa with a Fleet for Discoverie, in the yeere 1539. from Acapulco, which came to Santa Cruz in California. They layd ouer the Gulfe, and came to the Riuer of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, where they beheld, on both sides, a goodly Country. I am loth to hold on with them in their Voyage, lest I ſaile from my scope, and leaue the offended Reader behind me. Here they found in their course burning Mountaynes, which cast vp fire, ashes, and smoke in great quantitie. They encountered with a cruell storme, and being almost out of hope, they saw, as it were, a Candle vpon the shrowdes of the Trinitie (one of their ships) which the Mariners said was Saint Elmo, and saluted it with their Songs and Prayers. This is the darkness of Popery, to worship a naturall light: yea that which hath little more then being, and is an imperfect Meteor, is with them more perfect then Humane, and must participate in Diuine worship. Without the Gulfe of California they found store of great fish, which suffered themselves to be taken by hand: also they saw weedes floating on the Sea, fifty leagues together, round, and full of goulds, vnder them were store of fish, on them store of fowle: they grow in fiftene or twenty fathome depth. They caught with their Dogges, a beaſt very fat, haired like a Goat, otherwise resembling a Deere: in this, neither, that it had foure Dugges like vnto a Cow full of Milke. But because they had little dealing with the Inhabitants, I leaue them, and will see what Fernando Alarchon can shew vs of his Discoverie. He was set forth by Antonio de Mendoza, the Vice-roy, in the yeere of our Lord 1540. with two ships. He came to the bottom of the Bay of California, and there found a mighty Riuer, which ranne with such furious violence, that they could scarce saile against it. Here leauing the ships with some of his company, hee passed vp with some Peeces of Ordnance, and two Boats: and so drawing the Boats with haliars, they made vp the Riuer called Buena Vista: they were encountered with the Indian Inhabitants, who torbade them lan.

standing: but Alarcon hurling his weapons downe, and pulling out certaine wares to give them, appeased their fury, and caused them also to lay downe their weapons, and receive of him some trifles, which he gave them. Two leagues higher many Indians came and called to him: these were decked after a strange manner, some had painted their faces all over, some had warts, others had Vizards on with the shape of faces: they had holes in their nostrils, whereto certain pendants hung: others wore shells, having their eares full of holes, with bones and shels hanging thereas. All of them wore a Girdle about their waste, wherunto was fastned a bunch of Feathers which hung downe behind like a taile: they carried with them bags of Tobacco. Their bodies were traced with cole, their haire cut before, hang d downe long behind. The women wore banchets of Feathers before and behind them. There were foure men in womens appaile. Alarcon perceived by signes, that the thing they most reuerenced, was the Sunne, and therefore signified vnto them, that he came from the Sunne; whereto they manuell'd, and tooke curious view of him with greater euerence then before; brought him abundance of food first flinging vp part of euery thing into the Aire, and after, turning to him to give him the other part, offering in their armes to carry him into these Houses, altho doing else whatsoever he would haue them. And if any stranger came, they would goe and meet him, to caule him to lay downe his weapons, and if he would not, they would breake them in pieces. Hee gave the chiefe of them small Wares. They needed not pray them to helpe draw the Boat vp the streame, euery one laboured to get hold of the Rope: etherwise it had bene impossible to haue gotten vp against the Current. Hee caused Crosses to be made and given them; with instruction to honour them, which they did with extasie of blind zeale, kissing them, and lifting them vp, euery one coming for them till he had not paper and stickes enow for that purpose.

And as he passed further, he met with one which vnderstood his Interpreter, and asked of him many questions, to which he answered, that he was sent of the Sunne; which the other doubting, because the Sunne went in the Skie, he said that at his going downe and rising, he came neere the Earth, and there made him in that Land, and sent him hither to visit this Riuer and the People, and to charge them not to make further warres one vpon another. But why saith the Indian, did he send you no sooner? he answered, Because before he was but a child. A long Dialogue thus passed betwixt them, the issue whereof was that the Indians cryed out, they would all receive him for their Lord, seeing hee was the childe of the Sunne, and came to see them good. This vnto did hee make of their superstitious obseruation of the Sunne, which they worshipped because he made them warme (said they), and caused their crops to grow, and therefore of all things which they eat, they call a little vnto the charge to him. They warre one vpon another (a thing common to all Sauages) for small occasions: the chiefest and most valiant guided the Armes (for in some places they had no Lord, and of whole which they took in the Warre, some they burned, and from some they plucked out the hearts, and ate them). Alarcon caused a Croffe to be made of Timber, commanding his owne people to worshipping it, and leaving it with the Indians, with instructions euery morning at the Sunne-rise to kisse before it. This theyooke with great deuotion, and would not suffer it to touch the ground, vntill they knew by questioning, how deepe they should see it, with what composition of gesture to worship it, and the like curiosities of Paganish superstition. It was told, that this Riuer was inhabited by three and twenty Languages, that they married but one woman to one man, that Mides before Marriage, consulted not with men, nor talked with them, but kept at home and wrought; Adultery was death; they burned the dead. Widowers stayed halfe a yeere or a whole yeere before they married againe. Euery family had their feuerall Gouernour; other Ruler they had none. The Riuer yied a some times to overflow the banks. These people told Alarcon, that in Ceyula they had many blue stones, or Turqueses, which they digged out of a Rocke of hope, and when the Gouernours dyed, all their goods were buried with them: that they ate with Napkins, many wayeing at Table: that they killed the Negro before mentioned, because he said he had many Brethren, to whom they thought he would give intelligence, and therefore killed him. An old man told him the names of two hundred Lords and people of those parts. This old man had a Son clothed in woman attires, of which sort they had foure: these lerued to the sodomitical lusts of all the ynnmarried young men in the Countrey, and may not themselves haue to deale with any woman. They pay no reward for this brutall trade, but haue libertie to goe to any House for their food: when any of them dyes, the first Sonne that is borne after, succeeds in their number.

As for the more Northerly parts, both within Land, and the supposed Strait of Amir, with other things mentioned in Maps, because I know no acquaintance of them, I leaue them. The way by Sea from these parts to the Philippinas, two of the lowe Nation haue passed, whose Voyage, is also that exact description of the same, by Francisco de Gualle, a Span-

OW are we safely arrived out of the South Sea, and North unknowne Lands, where we haue wandered our selues, and wearied the Reader in this great and spacious Country of New Spaine. New Spaine is all that which lyeth betwene Florida and California, and confines on the South, with Guatimala and Lucatan; how it came to be so called, asketh a long Discourse, concerning the Conquest thereof by Cortes, whose History is thus related.

Hernando Cortes was borne at Medellin in Andulozia, a Province of Spaine, Anno 1485. When he was nineteene yeeres old, he sayled to the Iland of Saint Domingo, where Ouando the Governour kindly entertayned him. Hee went to the conquest of Cuba in the yeere 1511. as Clerke to the Treasurer, vnder the conduct of Lames Velasques, who gaue vnto him the Indians of Manicorao, where he was the first that brought vp Kine, Sheepe and Mares, and had herds and flocks of them: and with his Indians hee gathered great quantitie of Gold, so that in short time he was able to put in two thousand Castlins for his stocke, with Andres de Duero a Merchant. At this time Christopher Morante had sent (An. 1517.) Francis Hernandez de Cordona, who first discovered Yucatan, whence he brought nothing (except the relation of the Country) but stripes: whereupon Lames Velasques in the yeere 1518. sent his Kinsman John de Grijalua, with 200. Spaniards in foure ships: hee traded in the River of Tauasco, and for trifles returned much Gold, and curious workes of Peethers. Idols of Gold; a whole harness or furniture for an armed man of Gold thin beaten, Eagles, Lions, and other pourtrayures found in Gold, &c. But while Grijalua deferred his returne, Velasques agreed with Cortes to be his partner in the Discoverie, which hee gladly accepted, and procured licence from the Governour in Domingo, and prepared for the Voyage.

Velasques afterward yeld all meanes to breake off, in so much that Cortes was forced to engage all his owne stocke, and credit, with his friends in the Expedition, and with five hundred and fiftie Spaniards in eleven Ships, yet sayle the tenth of February 1519. arrived at the Iland of Acufamil. The Inhabitants at first fled, but by the kinde entertainment of some that were taken, they returned, and received him and his with all kinde Offices.

They told him of certaine bearded men in Yucatan, whither Cortes sent; and one of them Gerónimo de Aguilar came vnto him, who told him, that by shipwracke at Iamaca, their Caruell being lost, twentie of them wandered in the boat without sayle, water, or bread, thir.

thirteene or fourteene dayes, in which space the violence of the Current had cast them on shore in a Prouince called Maiji, where, as they trauelled, seuen died with famine and their Capayne Ualdina and other ioues were sacrificed to the Idols by the Cacike, or Lord of the Countrey, and eaten in a solemne banquet, and hee with fixe other were put into a coope or cage to be fained for another Sacrifice. But breaking prison, they escaped to another Cacike, enemy to the former, where all the rest died, but himselfe and Gusalo Querer a Mariner. Hee had transformed himselfe into the Indian Cut, boring his Nose full of holes, his eares jagged, his face and hands painted; married a wife, and became a Capitaine of name amongst the Indians, and would not returne with this Aguilar.

- 10 Cortes with this new Interpreter passed vp the River Tausco, called of the former Discoverers, Guajalus; where the Towne that stood thereon, refusing to victuall him, was taken and sacked. The Indians here with enraged, assembled an Armie of fortie thousand, but Cortes by his Horse & Ordnance perswaded the Indians thinking the Horse and Rider had bene but one Creature, whose gaping and swiftnesse was terrible vnto them, whereupon they submitted themselves. When they heard the Horses ney, they had thought the Horses could speake, and demanded what they said: the Spaniards answered, These Horses are sore offended with you, for fighting with them, and would haue you corrected: the simple Indians presented Roses and Hens to the beasts, desiring them to eat and to pardon them.

Indian simplicity.

- Cortes* purposed to discover Westward, because he heard that there were Mines of Gold, 20 baving first received their Vassalage to the King his Master, to whom (hee said) the Monarchie of the Vniuersall did appertaine. These were the first Vassals the Emperour had in New Spaine. They named the Towne, where these things were done, Vitorie, before called Potochcan, containing neere five and twenty thousand Houses, which are great, made of Lime, and Stone, and Bricks, and some of mudwals and rafters, covered with Straw; their dwelling is in the vpper part of the House, for the moystnesse of the Soyle. They did eat mans flesh sacrificed.

Potochcan called Vitorie.

- The Spaniards sailed further Westward, and came to Saint Iohn de Ulua, where Tendilli, the Gouvernour of the Countrey, came to him with foure thousand Indians. He did his reverence to the Capitaine, burning Frankincense (after their custome) and little straws, touched in the blood of his owne bodie: and then presented vnto him Vassals, and Jewels of 30 Gold, and other curious workes of Feathers; which Cortes requited with a Collar of Glasse, and other things of small value. A woman-slave given him at Potochcan, vnderstood their Language, and she with Aguilar, were his Interpreters. Cortes professed himselfe the Seruant of a great Emperour, which had sent him thither, whose power is so highly extolled, that Tendilli marvelled, thinking there had beene no such Prince in the World, as his Master and Soueraigne the King of Mexico, whose Vassal he was named, Mutezuma. To him he sent the representations of these bearded Men, and their Horses, Apparell, Weapons, Ordnance, and other Rarities, painted in Cotton-clothes, their ships and numbers. These painted Cottons he sent by Posts, which deliuered them from one to another with such celeritie, that in a 40 day and night the message came to Mexico, which was two hundred and ten miles distant. Cortes had demanded, whether Mutezuma had Gold? Tendilli affirmed, and Cortes replied, That hee and his fellows had a Disease of the heart, whereunto Gold was the best remedie.

Spanish incurable sickness.

- Mutezuma* sent him many Cotton-clothes of diuers colours, many Tiffes of Feathers, two Wheels, the one of Silver, with the signe of the Moone, and the other of Gold, made like the Sunne; which they hold for Gods, and giue vnto them the colours of the Metals most like them. Each Wheele was two yards and a halfe broad. These with other parts of the Present were esteemed worth twenty thousand Duckets. Mutezuma also professed ioy, to heare of so great a Prince, and so strange people, and promised prouision of all necessities; 50 but was very vnwilling that Cortes should come to see him, as he pretended. Yet Cortes persisted in that his desire of seeing Mutezuma, that hee might further acquaint himselfe with the knowledge of those parts.

- The silly Indians hauing neuer seene such strange sights, came daily to the Campe to see them: and when they heare the Ordnance discharged, they fell downe flat, thinking the Heauens had falne: the ships they thought were the God of the Ayre, called Quasacochtli, which came with the Temples on his backe, for they daily looked for him. Amongst the rest, or rather aloofe off from the rest, were certaine Indians of differing habit, higher than the other, and had the griffles of their Noses slit, hanging ouer their mouthes, and Rings of Iet and Amber hanging thereat: their nether lips also bored, and in the holes Rings of 60 Gold and Turkeesse-stones, which weighed so much, that their lips hung ouer their chinnes, leaving their teeth bare. This vnglincfe, they accounted gallantry, and such vncomely deformity to be the only brauery. And thou Gallant, that readeest and derideest this madnesse of Zempoallan. These Indians of this New-cut, Cortes caused to come to him, and learned that they were of Zempoallan, a Citie distant thence a dayes Iourney, whom their Lord had sent to see what Gods were come in those Tenacallis, that is Temples (so, it seemeth, that they called the ships:) which held no conuerlation with the other Indians, as being not subiect to Mutezuma, but onely as they were holden in by force. He gaue them certaine toys, and was glad to heare that the Indians of Zempoallan, and other their Neighbors were not well affected to Mutezuma, but readie, as farre as they durst, to entertaine all occasions of war with him. He sayled from thence to Panuco, and passed the Ruer farther, till he came to a little Towne, where was a Temple, with a little Towre, and a Chappell on the top ascended by twentie steps, in which they found some Idols, many bloudie Papers, and much Mans blood, of those which had bene sacrificed; the blocke also whereon they cut open those Sacrifices, and the Razors made of flint, wherewith they opened their breasts, which strucke the Spaniards with some horreur and feare: They passed a little further, and there hauing taken possession, in the Emperours name, of the whole Country, they founded the Towne De la vera Cruz, Cortes resigning his authoritie, and Officers being elected; and lastly all with generall consent appointing Cortes their Captaine.

§. II.

CORTES his Expedition to Mexico, and entertainment by MUTEZUMA.

Cortes went forward to Zempoallan, where hee was solemnely receiued and lodged in a great Houle of Lime and Stone, whited with Playster, that shined in the Sunne, as if it had bene Silver; so did the Silver conceits of the Spaniards imagine, the desire of that Metall hauing made such an impression in their imagination, that they told Cortes before he came at it, they had seene a Houle with walls of Silver. Here, and at Chiauitlan, Cortes incited them to rebell against Mutezuma, and to become seruants to the Spaniards, which they did: and hee vnder-hand so wrought, that Mutezuma tooke him for his friend.

All his intent was to fish in troubled waters, and to set them both by the eares, that hee might watch opportunitie to benefit himselfe. His owne people rebelled, some of whom he chastised with the halter and the whip for example to the rest; and after caused all his ships to be sunke closely, that they should not minde any returne. Hee left an hundred and fifty men for the guard of the new Towne, vnder Padro de Henrique, and with foure hundred Spaniards, fiftene Horses, and sixe Peeces of Artillery, and 1200. Indians, they went from Zempoallan, and came to Zaclotan, the Lord whercof was Olinotl the subiect of Mutezuma, who to testifie his ioy, and to honour Cortes, commanded fifty men to be sacrificed, whole blood they saw, new and fresh.

They carried the Spaniards on their shoulders, sitting on Beeres, such as whereon they use to carry dead men. He bragged as much of the power of Mutezuma, as the Spaniards of their Emperour. Hee said hee had thirty Vassals, each of which was able to bring into the field an hundred thousand men of warre, and sacrificed twenty thousand men yearly to the Gods: in this he somewhat exceeded; the other was true, although some yeeres, the Sacrifices also were thought to amount to fifty thousand. This Towne was great, and had thirtene Temples, in each of which were many Idols of stone, of diuers fashions, before whom they sacrificed Men, Doves, Quales, and other things with great perfumes and veneration. Here Mutezuma had fise thousand Souldiers in Garrison. Cortes passed from thence to Mexico by the Frontiers of Tlaxcallon, which were enemies to Mutezuma, whom he might easily haue overcome, but refused, partly for the exercise of his subiects to the war: partly for the Sacrifices to his Gods.

Bloudy Sacrifices,

sumas friend: and yet every day sent him Guinny-cocks & bread, partly to espy his strength, and partly in a brauery, lest their glory should bee obscured in the conquest of men already starued. But when in many skirmishes and fights they could not preuaile against that handfull of Spaniards, they thought they were preferred from harme by incantments: and sent him three presents with this message; that if he were that rigorous god which eateth mans flesh, he should eat those five floues which they brought him, and they would bring him more; if he were the meeke and gentle God, behold Frankinsence, and Feathers: if he were a mortall man, take heere Fowle, Bread, and Cherries. At last they made peace with him, and submitted their Citie to him. Their Citie Tlaxcallan was great, planted by a Riuers side, 10 which issued into the South-Sea. It had four streets, each or which had their Captain in the time of Watre. The government was an Aristocratic, having Monarchy no lesse then tyranny. It had eight and twenty Villages, and in them an hundred and fifty thousand households, very poore, but good warriors. They had one market-place so spacious, that thirty thousand persons in a day came thither to buy and sell by exchange: for money they had none.

great Citie.

Muteczuma had sent before to Cortes, and promised tribute to the Emperour, whatsoever should be imposed; onely he would not haue him come to Mexico. And now he sent againe, that he should not trust that new friendship with the beggerly Nation of Tlaxcallan, and they againe counselled him not to aduenture himselfe to Muteczuma. Cortes held his determination for Mexico, and being accompanied with many of the Tlaxcallanexas, he went to 30 Chololla, a little from whence Muteczuma had prepared an Army to intrap him in the way; but he finding the treacherie, it redounded vpon the Cholollois, the same day they had thought to haue executed the same vpon him. For this end they had sacrificed ten children, five males, and as many females, three yeares old, to Quetzalcoatl their god, which was their custome when they began their Warres. He out-going them in their owne art of subtiltie, intrapped their Captaines in Councell, and sent his Armie to spoile the Citie, where were faine thousands. There were twenty Gentlemen, and many Priests which ascended vpon to the high Towre of their Temple, which had an hundred and twenty steps, where they were burned, together with their gods and Sanctuary.

Chololla.

This City had 30000. Households within the Walls, & as many in the Suburbs. It shewed 30 outward very faire and full of Towres, for there were as many Temples as dayes in the yeere, and euery one had his Towre. The Spaniards counted 400. Towres. It was the Citie of most deuotion in all India, whither they travelled from many places far distant in Pilgrimage. Their Cathedrall Temple was the best and highest in all New-Spain, with 120. steps vp to it. Their chiefe god was Quetzalcoatl, god of the Aire, who was (they say) founder of their City being a Virgin, of holy life and great penance. He instituted fasting, and drawing of blood out of their eares and tongues, and left precepts of Sacrifices. Hee neuer ware but one garment of Cotton, white, narrow, and long, and vpon that a Mantle, beset with certain red crosses. They haue certaine greene stones which were his, and are kept for great reliques: one of them is like an Apes head. Eight leagues from Chololla is the hill Popocatepec, or 40 smoke-hill, which the earth seemeth to haue erected as a Fort to encounter and assault the Aire: now with smoky mists endeavouring to choke his purer breath, another while with violent flames, and naturall fire-works threatening to ioyne league with his elder and superior brother to disinherit him: sometimes with showres of Ashes and embers, as it were, putting out the eyes, and sometimes with terrible and dreadfull thunders, rending the eares of that Aire Element; alwayes (such is the euent of warre) hurting and wasting it selfe, to indamage the enemy. The Indians thought it a place of Purgatory, whereby tyrannicall and wicked Officers were punished after their death, and after that purgation passed into glory. The Spaniards aduentured to see it, but two onely held on their journey, and had there been consumed, had they not by a Rock bin shadowed fro the violent eruption of the fire which 50 then hapned. It chanced that the Earth, weary it seemeth of the Warre, as hauing spent her store and munition, agreed on a truce which continued ten yeares: but in the yeere 1540. it brake forth into more violent hostilitie then before, quaking and renting it selfe with vnbridled passion: and whereas the Aire had alwayes a snowy Garrison about her high tops and frontiers, to coole and quench her fiery showres, yet these did but kindle a greater flame, the ashes whereof came to Huexozincó, Quelaxcopon, Tepiaca, Chololla and Tlaxcallan, and other places, ten, or as some say fiftene leagues distant, and burned their herbs in their Gardens, their fields of corne, trees and clothes that they laid a drying. The Vulcan, Crater, or mouth whence the fire issued, is about halfe a league in compasse. The Indians killed their garments (an honour done vnto their gods) which had aduentured themselves to this dreadfull spectacle.

vp himselfe alone, abiding eight dayes in prayer and fasting, with Sacrifice of many men, to allake the fury of his offended deities. The Diuell bids him not to feare, and that hee should continue those bloody Rites, assuring him that hee should haue the gods Vitziliputzli and Tefcatlipuca to preferue him, saying, That Quezalcoatl permitted the destruction at Chololla, for want of that bloodie sacrifice, Cortes passed a Hill six miles in height, where, by the difficultie of the passage, and of the cold (being alway covered with snow) the Mexicans might easily haue prevented his passing further. Hence hee clyped the Lake, whereon Mexico and many other great Townes did stand, Iztacpallapan a Towne of 10000 houliholds, Coyacan of fixe thousand, Vizilopuchtli of fise thousand. These townes are adorned with many Temples and Towers, that beautifie the Lake. From Iztacpallapan to Mexico is two Leagues, all on a faire caulay, with many Draw-bridges, thorow which the water passeth.

Mutezuma received Cortes with all solemnitie on the eight of November 1519. into this great Citie, excusing himselfe of former vnkindnesse the best hee could. Of his house, and Majestie and the diuine conceit the people had of him, we shall speake after more fully, as also of the Temples, Priests, Sacrifices and other remarkable things of Mexico.

Mutezuma prouided all things necessarie for the Spaniards and Indians that attended them: euen beds of flowres were made, in place of litter for their Horses. But Cortes disquieted with those thoughts which commonly attend Ambition (discontent in the present, hopes and feares of the future) vsed the matter so, that he tooke Mutezuma prisoner, and detained him in the place appointed for the Spaniards lodging, with a Spanish guard about him, permitting him otherwise to deale in all priuate or publike affaires, as before. Hereupon Cacama, Lord of Tezcuc, Nephew to Mutezuma, rebelled, but by treachery of his owne people was presented prisoner to Mutezuma. He, after this summoned a Parliament, where he made an Oration vnto his Subiects, saying, ^f That He and his Predecessors were not Naturals of the Country, but his Fore-fathers came from a farre Country, and their King returned againe, and said, he would send such as should rule them. And he hath now sent these Spaniards, saith he. Hereupon he counsellled them to yeeld themselves Vassals to the Emperour, which they did at his command, though with many teares on his part and theirs, at this farewell of their libertie. Mutezuma presently gaue to Cortes, in the name of tribute, a great quantitie of Gold and other Jewels, which amounted to fixteene hundred thousand Castillins of Gold, besides Silver.

^f The like speech he had made at first to Cortes, who easily wrought on that advantage applying this Tradition to the Spaniards. Cortes Narret.

§. III.

The conquest of Mexico.

CORTES had hitherto a continuall victory in Mexico without any fight, but newes was brought him of Pamphilo de Naruaez, who was sent with eighty horse, and some hundredth of Spaniards by Velasquez, to interrupt the proceedings of Cortes: who leauing two hundred men in Mexico, with 250. other came suddenly in the night, and took Naruaez prisoner, and returned to Mexico with Naruaez his company, now his followers also, where he found his men exceedingly distressed by the Citizens, for a murder committed in the great Temple at a solemn Feast, where in a religious dance they were slain, for the rich garments and Jewels they ware, by the Spaniards. Cortes came in good time for the reliefe of his men: and Mutezuma caused the Mexicans to bridle their rage, which presently was renewed; and when Mutezuma was againe by his Guardians, the Spaniards, caused to speake to the people, a blow of a stone on his temples wounded him, whereof three dayes after he died.

Mutezumas death.

Cortes had some thousands of the Tlaxotecas to help him, but was driuen to fly from Mexico with all his Spaniards and Indians, which he did closely in the night, but yet an all-arme was raised, and the bridges being broken, much slaughter of his people was made by the Mexicans, and all his treasure in manner lost. They pursued after him also, and had two hundred thousand in the field: when it was Cortes his good hap to slay the Standard-bearer, whereupon the Indians forsooke the field. This battell was fought at Otumpan.

At Tlaxcallan, he and his were kindly entertained; they had prepared before 40000. men to goe to Mexico for his helpe, and now they promised him all offices of loyaltie and seruice. With their helpe he subdued Tepeacac; and built certaine Brigandines, and Frigates, which were carried many leagues on the backs of those Indians, and there fastned and finished, without which he could neuer haue wonne Mexico.

In Tezcuc certaine Spaniards had been taken, sacrificed and eaten, which Cortes now reuenged.

revenge on them. Eight thousand men had carried the loose pieces and Timber of this Naue, guarded with twenty thousand Tlaxcalans, and a thousand Tamemez, or Porters (which carried victuals attending. They calked them with Towe, and for want of Tallow and Oyle, they used Mans Grease, of such as had been slaine in the Warres. For so the Indians vied, to take out the Grease of their Sacrifices. Cortes had here nine hundred Spaniards, of which twofscore and six were horsemen, three cast Pieces of iron, fifteene small Peeces of Brasse, and a thousand weight of Powder, and 10000 Indian Souldiers on his side. Hee made a fluce or trench about twelve foot broad, and two fathome deepe, halfe a league long, in which forty thousand men wrought fifty dayes. He lanchd his Vessels, and some ouercame all the Canoas of the Lake, or which were reckoned in all five thousand. The Spaniards brake the Conduits of sweet water, wherewith the Citie was wont to be serued.

Quatinimo, now the new King of Mexico, receiuing encouragement from the diuellish Oracle, caused to brake downe the Bridges, and to exercise whatsoeuer wit or strength could doe in defence of his City, sometimes conquering, sometimes (as is the doubtfull chance of warre) conquered. Cortes had in Tezcuco orained a new King, a Christian Indian, of the royall blood, who much assisted him in this siege. The Spaniards being Lords of the Lake, and of the Causeys, by helpe of their Gallions and Ordnance, they fiered a great part of the Citie. One day the Mexicans had gotten some aduantage, and thereupon celebrated a Feast of Victory. The Priests went vp into the Towers of Tlatelulco, their chiefe Temple, and made there perfumes of sweet Gummes, in token of victory, and sacrificed forty Spaniards (which they had taken captiues, opening their breasts, and plucking out their hearts) sprinkling their blood in the Aire; their fellowes looking on, and not able to reuenge it. They slew likewise many Indians, and foure Spaniards of Almarado's company, whom they are in the open sight of the Armie. The Mexicans danced, dranke themselues drunke, made bonfires, strucke vp their Drummes, and made all solempne expressings of ioy. Dead, Disdaine, and all the Furies that Passion or Compassion could coniuine vp, had now filled the Spaniards hearts and their Indian partakers: and Cortes, that hitherto had hoped to rescue some part of the Citie, now did the vermost that Rage and Reuenge could effect, helped no lesse within with Famine and Pestilence, then with Sword and Fire without. At last Mexico is razed, the Earth and Water sharing betwixt them what Fire had left, and all which had sometime challenged a lofty inheritance in the Ayre. Their King also was taken; all that mighty State subuerted. And as the Mexicans before had prophesied, That the Tlaxcalteca's should againe build the Citie, if conquered, for them; if conquerors, for the Spaniards: It was re-builded with a hundred thousand houses, fairer and stronger then before. The siege lasted three moneths, and had therein two hundred thousand Indians, nine hundred Spaniards, fourescore Horses, seuentene Peeces of Ordnance, thirteene Gallions, and six thousand Canoas. Fifty Spaniards were slaine, and sixe Horses: Of the Mexicans, a hundred thousand, besides those which died of hunger and Pestilence.

This was effected Anno 1521. on the thirteenth day of August, which for that cause is kept festiuall euery yeere. For the Description of the Country wherein Mexico is situate, Cortes in his second Narration to the Empeirour saith, it is enuironed with hills: (He telleth of some hills also in his iourney, wherein diuers of his people died with cold) in the midst is a plaine of 70. leagues compasse, and therein two lakes which extend the circuit of fifty leagues; the one salt, which ebboeth and floweth, (an argument for Patrius his opinion that saltneesse is a chiefe cause of that vicissitude of ebbing and flowing, in the Ocean) the other fresh: When the Water of the salt Lake increaseth, it runneth like a violent stream into the fresh Lake, which when it increaseth, is repaired againe by the like issue of this into the former.

Nunno di Gusman, hath written his expedition into Mechoacan and other Countiees of New-Spaine 1530. subduing and taking possession for the Emperour: Hee found some of them Sodomiters, others Sacrificers of mens flesh, and some closely praftising this butcherie after they had professed themselves Christians: none of them which durst looke a Horse in the face, but were afraid, that that Beast would eate them. The feuerall peoples by him reckoned, would here be tedious to name: which we may say of the like made by Godey and Almarado. Of the customs of the Ancient Mexicans, one of Cortes his Gentlemen hath written a Treatise extant in Ramusius, wherein are described their Citie, Temples, Rites of Sacrifice, and the like; as after followeth out of him and others.

so called.

Having now declared the subversion of this State and Kingdome by the Spaniards, I hold it not amiss to looke backe vpon the first people which here inhabited, with the beginnings and proceedings of the Mexican Empire. The first Inhabitants of New-Spaine were very barbarous and savage, which lived only by Hunting, and for this reason were called Chichimecas. They lived naked, solitary in the Mountaines, without Tillage, Police, or any religious Ceremonies: their wives followed the same Hunting exercise, leaving their children tied in a Panier of Reeds to the boughs of some tree. They did eat what they got in hunting, raw. They ate also Snakes and Lizards, which they offered likewise in sacrifice to the Sunne, whom only they worshipped, and that without any Image: they offered to him Fowles, from the Butter-fly to the Eagle. And some remnants of the like beastly men (as is said before) are yet found, which doe great hurt, and will not, by either cunning or force of the Spaniards, be reduced to any other course. They seeme to have learned the Savage nature of the wilde Beasts, of whom, and with whom they live. By this means it came to passe, that this wilde Mountainous people left the best and most fertile part of the Country vnpeopled, which certaine remote Nations possessed, whom they called Naualtecas, for their ciuillitie. These came from those Northerne parts, which now they call new Mexico. The Naualtecas paint their beginning and first Territorie in manner of Cauers (because of their fewen Tribes, and men coming out of them. By the supposition of their Bookes, this departure was about eight hundred yeeres since, and (by reducing to our account) about the yeere of our Lord 720. Fourescore yeeres they stayed on the way, the cause whereof they ascribe to their Gods, which spake visibly to them, and bade them seek new Lands, that had such signes as they notified.

Thus they proceeded in seeking those signes, and peopled the best parts, still remouing their habitations as they found more fertile Countries, leauing onely the aged, sicke, and weary, with a few others, to remaine in the former. And by these leisurly proceedings, they entred the land of Mexico, about the yeere 902. after our account. Those seven Nations came not all at once; but first, the Suchimilcos, next, the Chalcas, and thirdly, the Tepanetans, fourthly, those of Tescuco, after them the Tlalluicans; the six were the Tlaltecatlans, which helped the Spaniards to conquer Mexico, and therefore are exempted from tribute to this day. These expelled, as their Histories say, certaine Gyants, whom in pretence of Friendship they had invited to a banquet, and in their drunkennes stole away their weapons, and slew them. Neither doth this seeme a fable; for at this day are found dead mens bones, of incredible bignesse. I saw a tooth (saith Acosta) at Mexico, in the yeere 1586, as bigge as the fist of a man, and according to this, all the rest was proportionable. Three hundred and two yeeres after the first transmigration, those of the seventh Cauer Line arrived, which is the Mexican Nation: they worshipped the Idoll Vitzliputzli, and the Diuel spake & governed this Nation: He promised to make them Lords ouer all, which the six Nations possessed, and to giue them a Land plentifull in riches: whereupon they went forth carrying their Idoll with them in a Coffer of Reeds, supported by foure of their principall Priests, with whom he talked, and communicated his Oracles and Directions. He likewise gaue them Lawes, and taught them the Ceremonies and Sacrifices they should obserue. And euen as the pillar of Cloud and Fire conducted the Israelites in their passage thorow the Wildernesse, so this apish Diuell gaue them notice when to aduance forwards, and when to stay. The first thing they did wherefoeuer they came, was to build a house or Tabernacle for their Vitzliputzli, which they set alway in the midst of their Campe, and there placed the Arke in the midst of the Altar. This done, they sowed the Land, and if their God commanded to gather, they did so, and if to raise their Campe, they obeyed, leauing the aged, sicke, and weary, to gather their fruits, and to dwell there. The chiefe Captaine whom they followed, was called Mexi, whence came the name of their City and Nation. Their Idoll perswaded them, when some were bathing themselves in certaine Lakes, to remoue remove the Campe closely, and steale away their clothes: whereat they which were thus forsaken, changed their language and manner of life, retayning alway their hatred to the Mexicana. They peopled the Province Mechouacan: from hence to Mexico is fifty leagues and vpon the way is Malinalco, which they say was peopled by a Witch and her familie, whom by the commandement of their God they left behinde, closely removing the armie by night. They stayed in a place called Tuta, where by stepping a River, they drowned a Plaine, and planted it round with Willowes and other trees, and many liking the place, talked of staying there: whereat their God offended, threatned the Priests, and in the night slew those which had consulted of staying. Their hearts were found pulled out, and their stomackes opened; which, after that, they obserued in their Sacrifices. The Mexi-

10 cans, by the aduice of their Idoll, proceeded, and by force made way thorow the Chalcas, and sent to the Lord of Culhuacan, who granted them the place of Teacapan to dwell in, which was full of Snakes and venomous Beasts, which by the helpe of their God they tamed. He would not suffer them to stay there, but commanded them to proceed, and to seeke forth a Woman, whom they should name the Goddesse of Discord. Whereupon they sent to the King of Culhuacan, to demand his Daughter to bee Quene of the Mexicans, and Mother of their God, who easily condescended, and sent his daughter gorgeously attired: The same night she arriued, by order of their God, shee was murdered and slayed, and a yong man was couered with her skin, with her apparell thereon; and being placed neere

10 the Idoll, she was consecrated a Goddesse and Mother of their God; they cut after worshipping the same, making an Idoll which they call Tescy, that is, Our Grand-mother. The King of Culhuacan hereupon warred against them, and chased them out of those parts, by which means they came to the place where Mexico now is. Heere certaine old Priests or Sorcerers, entering into a place full of Water-Lillies, they met with a very faire and cleare current of Water, with Trees, Medowes, Fish, and other things: all very white, which were the signes their God had giuen them of their promised Land. In the night following, Vnc-lipuztli appeared in a dreame to an ancient Priest, saying, That they should goe seeke out a Tunal in the Lake, which grew out of a stone, vpon which they should see an Eagle feeding on small Birds, which they should hold for the place where their City should be built, to become famous through the world. Hereupon, the next day they all assembled, and diuid-30 ding themselves into bands, made that search with great diligence and deuotion.

In their search they met with the former Water-course, not white (as it was then) but red like blood, diuiding it selfe into two streames, one of which was an obscure Azure. At last they espied the Eagle, with wings displayed to ward the Sunne, compassed about with many rich feathers of diuers colours, and holding in his Talions a goodly Bird. At this sight they fell on their knees, and worshipped the Eagle, with great demonstrations of ioy and thanks to Unc-lipuztli. For this cause they called the Citie, which there they founded, Tenoxitlan, which signifies Tunal on a stone; and till this day carry in their Armes an Eagle vpon a Tunal, with a bird in his Talion.

g Mexico Tenoxitlan.

40 The next day following, by common consent, they made an Hermitage, adjoining to the Tunal of the Eagle, that the Arke of their God might rest there, till they might haue means to build him a sumptuous Temple. This they made of Flagges and Turfes, couered with Straw. Afterwards they consulted to buy of their neighbours Stone, Timber, Lime, in exchange of Fish, Fowles, Frogges, and other things which they hunted, foran the Lake: by which means they procuring necessaries, built a Chappell of Lime and Stone, and laboured to fill vp part of the Lake with rubbish. The Idoll commanded, that they should diuide themselves into foure principall quarters about this house, and each part build there- in to which he enioyned certaine Gods, to his appointment, called Cuauitepec, which is, Quarrier Gods. This was the beginning of Mexico.

50 The Historie of eight of their first Kings.

THIS diuision seemed not equall to some of the Ancients, who valued their desertes faire about their allotted portion, who therefore separated themselves, and went to Tlatelulco: whose practices against the Mexicans caused them to chuse a King, to which Soueraignie was choised Acamapitzli, Nephew to the King of Culhuacan, and of the Mexican blood by the Fathers side. Him by Embassage they demanded, and obtained in the name of their God, with this answer from the King of Culhuacan: Let my whom we line; who is the Lord of Night, Day, and Windes: Let him see and bee Lord of the Water and Land, and possesse the Mexican Nations, &c.

Hee was solemnely welcommed by the Mexicans: welcome thou art (saith an Orator vnto him in their name) is this poore House and City, amongst the Weedes and Muds, where thy poore Fathers, Grand-fathers, and Kinfolkes endure what it pleaseth the Lord of things created. Remember, Lord, thou comest to see our defence, and to bee the resemblance of Vitzliputzli, not to reffe thy selfe, but to endure a new charge: with many words to that effect, expresse in the Mexican Histories, referred by tradition; the children to that end learning them by heart, and these being as Presidents to them which learned the Art Oratorie. After this, they were i sworn, and hee crowned. The Crowne was like that of the Dukes of Venice. His name Acamapitzli, signifieth a handfull of Reedes, and therefore they carrie in their Armories a hand, holding many Arrows of Reedes.

The Mexicans at this time were tributaries to the Tapaneans, whose chiefe Citie was Azcapuzalco: who iudging according to the nature of Enuie and Suspition, that they were so much weaker, how much the stronger they saw their neighbours, thought to oppresse them by a strange policie, in imposing an vncouth, and (in shew) impossible tribute: which was, that they should bring the Tapanean King a Garden, planted and growing in the water. In this their distresse, Vitzliputzli taught them to doe it, by casting earth vpon Reedes and Grass laid in the Lake, and planting in this mowing Garden, Maiz, Figs, Gourds, and other things, which at the time appointed they carried growing and ripe: a thing often since produced in that Lake, emulous no lesse of that glorie, to be accounted one of the Wonders in that New World, then those pensill Gardens, towred vp in the Ayre at Babylon, both heere and there the reason of Man according to his naturall priuiledge, subiecting to his vie the most rebellious Elements of Ayre and Water.

Acamapitzli, the Mexican King, after he had reigned fortie yeeres, dyed, leaving it to their choice to chuse his Successor. They chose his Sonne Vitzliputzli, which signifieth a rich Feather: they anointed him with an Oyntment, which they call Diuine, being the same wherewith they anointed their Idoll.

Of their Coronation, thus Lopez de Gomara saith, that this was done by the High Priest, attired in his Pontificalibus, attended with many others in Surplices: the Oyntment was as blacke as Inke. They blessed him, and sprinkled him foure times with Holy-Water, made at the time of the Consecration of their God. Then they put vpon his head a Cloth, painted with the bones and skulls of dead men, clothed him with a blacke garment, and vpon that a blue, both painted with figures of skulls and bones. Then did they hang on him Laces, and bottles of Powders, whereby he was deliuered from diseases and Witchescrafts. Then did he offer Incense to Vitzliputzli, and the High Priestooke his Oath, for the maintenance of their Religion, to maintayne Iustice and the Lawes, to cause the Sonne to giue his light, and the Clouds to raine, and the earth to be fruitfull, &c. Lastly, followed the acclamations of the people, crying, God saue the King, with dances, &c.

He being crowned, and hauing receiued homage of his Subiects, obtained the King of Azcapuzalco his daughter to wife, by whom he had a sonne called Chimalpopoca, and procured a relaxation of Tribute from his father in Law. Hee was deuout in his Superstitions: hauing reigned thirtee yeeres, he dyed. His son then but ten yeeres old, was chosen in his tooome, but was soone after slaine by the Inhabitants of Azcapuzalco. The Mexicans enraged with this iniury, assembled themselves, and an Orator, among many other words, tell them, That the Sonne is velsped and darkened for a time, but will returne suddenly in the choice of another King. They agreed vpon Tzacoatl, which signifieth a Snake of Rats, the sonne of Acamapitzli their first King. The common people were earnest with this new King, for peace with the Tapaneans, for the obtaining whereof, they would carry their God in his Litter for an intercessor. This was hindered by Tlacaelel the Kings Nephew, a resolute and valiant yong man, who also with perill of his life, vndertooke an Embassage to Azcapuzalco, and there defied the King, anointing him with the ointment of the dead, after their manner. The Commons of Mexico were herewith offended, and to pacifie them, the King indented with them, that if he lost the Field, they should eate him and his Nobles; they on the other side promising, if he did overcome, to become his Tributaries (for before they enioyed much freedom) and to labour in his Fields and Houses, and to become his seruants in Warre & Peace. In fine, such was the valour of Tlacaelel the Generall, that the enemies were ouertrowne, their Citie sacked, and the remainder of them made tributarie, the lands and goods of the conquered being diuided among the Conquerors, and some reueired to each quarter of Mexico, for the vie of their Sacrifices.

Coyacan had the next place in the Mexican Conquests: who hauing induced the Mexicans to a banquet, in the end thereof sent for the last service, Women habill, which they forced forced them to put on : but Izcoatl and Tlacaelle made them know, by their ruine, the Manhood of the Mexicans. They subdued also the Suchimilchos, and Cuitlauca, a Citie in the Lake, Tescuco yielded it selfe. Izcoatl after twelue yeeres died, and Moteczuma the first was chosen in his stead.

Moteczuma fit King

Presently after his Election, they conducted him to the Temple with a great traine, where, before the Divine Harb, (so called in regard of the continual fire there kept) they enthronized him. The King there drew blood from his eares and legs with a Griffons talons, as a Sacrifice, and was congratulated with many Orations of the Priests, Ancients, and Captaines. And whereas before they had accustomed, in their Elections to make great Feasts and Dances, and wasted many Lights; He brought in the custome, personally to make Warre in some Prouince, thence to procure Sacrifices, to feast their Gods and Men: This he performed at Chalco, from whence he brought many Captiues, which on the day of his Coronation were sacrificed and eaten. At this Feast all his Tributes were brought in with great solemnitie, each Prouince marching by it selfe, besides innumerable Presents. All Commers were bountifullly entertained, and the poore were clad with new garments, given them by the King. The Chalcas had taken a brother of Moteczuma, and would haue made him their King, but he enioyning them to make a high Scaffold, ascended thereon, and telling them the Gods would not permit, that to be a King, he should be a Traytor vnto his Country, cast downe himselfe; whose death Moteczuma reuenged, with the ruine of that whole Nation, conquering further vnto the North and South Seas, by the counsell and courage of Tlacaelle. This King instituted new Ceremonies, and encreased the number of the Priests : hee built the great Temple of Vitzliputzli, and sacrificed great numbers of men at the Dedication. Having reigned eight and twentie yeeres, he died.

Tlacaelle was chosen his Successor by the foure Deputies, and the two Lords of Tescuco and Tacuba (these were the Electors) but refused the Empire, as being fitter for the common good, as an instrument to another, then if himselfe weyled the Scepter. At his nomination they chose Tuecic, sonne of the late King, and piercing his nostrils, for an ornament put an Emerald therein. He, in seeking Captiues for the solemnitie of his Coronation, lost more of his owne people, and after foure yeeres was poisoned by his male-content Subjects.

Tuecic.

Axayaca his brother succeeded, altogether of another spirit. In his time died Tlacaelle, chiefe Author of the Mexican greatness, whom before in his age, they vied to carry in his Chaire, on mens shoulders, to Councell. Hee was buried more it selfe, then any of the Kings, and his Sonne was made Generall for the warres. Axayaca conquered Tehuantepec, two hundred leagues from Mexico, thence to furnish the bloudie solemnities of his Coronation. Hee added to his Conquests Guatuleo on the South Sea; in single combat hee came the Lord of Tlatelulco, and subdued those Mexican-enemies of the Mexicans, setting fire on their Citie and Temple. After eleven yeeres hee died, and Anzol the eight King was chosen. Hee punished the pride of Quetzalten, a rich Prouince, with those Captiues, to celebrate his Coronation-Feast, and extended his Dominion to Guatemala, three hundred leagues from Mexico. Hee much adorned his Royall Citie, pulling downe the old houses, and in their roomes erected fairer. Hee set in a course of water to the Citie, because that of the Lake was muddie. But because they of Guyocan vsed these waters, the chiefe man of that Citie, which was a great Magician, sought to hinder it, whereby the King being provoked; sent to attatch him : Hee elaped by his Protean Arts ; now appearing like an Eagle, the second time like a Tygre, the third like a Serpente. But at last hee was taken and strangled, and the Mexicans forced a Channell, whereby the water might passe to their Citie, the Priests meane-while casting Incense on the bankes, sacrificing the blood of Quails; others winding their Comets; and one of the chiefe went attired in a habit like to the Goddess of the Waters, which was saluted and welcommed by all the people. All which things are painted in the Annales of Mexico: which Booke is now in the Vatican Library at Rome. Thus he enuironed the Citie with water, like another Venice; and having reigned eleven yeeres, dyed.

Moteczuma the second, was chosen, who before his Sovereignie, was of Grays and stayed disposition, much addicted to his deuotions. Hee retired himselfe to a Chappell, appointed for him in the Temple of Vitzliputzli, where (they say) the Idol spake to him; wherein also he hid himselfe, where he had intelligence of this this Election. From whence he was led to the Hatch of their Gods, where hee sacrificed, with drawing blood from his eares, and the calves of his legges. They attired him with the R. yall Ornamentes, and piercing his nostrils, hung thereat a rich Emerald. Being seated in his Throne, the King of Tezcucan, one of the Electors, made an Eloquent Oration, which I append As it hath I set downe word by word, and deferueth a room here, if our haire Pilgrimage would suffer.

This Motezuma commanded, that no Plebeian should serue him in any Office in his house providing Knights and Nobles for that purpose. His Coronation was solemnized with Dances, Comedies, Banquets, Lights, and other pompe: the sacrificed Captiues were of a farre Province toward the North Sea, which hee lubdued. Macbenacan, Tlascalla, and Tepasco, neuer yielded to the Mexicans; which Motezuma told Cortes, that hee spared for the vie of his sacrifices, and the exercise of his Souldiers. He laboured to be respected and worshipped as a God. It was death for any Plebeian to looke him in the face: Hee neuer let his foot on the Ground, but was alwaies carried on the shoulders of Noble men, and if he lighted, they laid rich Tapestrie, whereon hee did goe. Hee neuer put on one Garment twice, nor vied one Vessell, or Dish aboue once. Hee was rigorous in execution of his Lawes, and for that purpose would disguise himselfe, to see how they were executed, and offer bribes to the Iudges, to prouoke them to iniustice, which, if they excepted, cost them their liues, though they were his kinsmen or brethren. His fall is before declared: it shall not be amisse here to mention some prodigious fore-runners of the same. The Ioll of Cholula, called Quetzacoatl, declared, that a strange People came to possesse his Kingdome. The King of Tezcucan, a Magician, and many Sorcerers, told him as much. The King that vp the Sorcerers in prison where they vanished presently: wherefore hee exercised that rage on their wives and children, which hee had intended against them. He sought to appeale his angrie Gods by Sacrifices, and therefore would haue remoued a great stone, which by no humane industrie would be moued, as refusing his atonement. Strange voices were heard, accompanied with Earthquakes and swellings of the waters. A prodigious Bird, of the bignesse of a Crane, was taken; which on his head had (as it were) a Glasse representing armed men, and in the kings presence vanished. A stranger thing betell a poore man, who was taken vp by an Eagle, and carried into a certaine Cane, where hee let him downe, pronouncing these words: Thou mightiest Lord, I haue brought him whom thou hast commanded. There hee saw one like the King, lying asleepe; touching whom, hauing receiued threatening Prophecies, hee was againe by that former Pursuivant placed where hee had bin taken vp. These things, as Diuellish illusions abusing Gods Providence and Lustre, and imitating his Power, to rob him of his glorie, deserue to be mentioned.

Motezuma hauing intelligence of Cortes his arrival, was much troubled, and conferring with his Councell, they all said, that without doubt, their great and ancient Lord Quetzacoatl, who had said, that hee would returne from the East, whither hee was gone, had now fulfilled his promise, and was come. Therefore did hee send Embassadors with presents vnto Cortes, acknowledging him for Quetzacoatl, (sometime their Prince, now esteemed a God) and himselfe his Lieutenant.

The Mexican Historie described in Pictures, and sent to Charles the first, (which I haue scene with Master Hakluyt) in the first part sheweth their first Expedition and Plantation in this place; then all drowned with water, with great bulges, and some dried bushie places; their Kalender, and the names, yeeres, and conquests of their Kings. In the second part their tributes are described; the particulars whereof are, reparations of cerant Churches; so many baskets of Maiz grownd (holding halfe a bushell) and Almonds of Cacao, baskets of Chia anpinoli, mantles, paid every fourth day, and once a yeere Armours and Targets of Feathers; all this was paid by the Citee Tlatilulco. And in like proportion to witte and Nation subiect, was to pay the Nanual or Artificiall commodities thereof: as Armours garnished with feathers, rich mantles, white, or of other colours; Eagles shile, beames of timber, boards, salt made in long moulds for the Lords of Mexico onely; pots of honie, Naguas and Huipiles (which were attire for women) Copale for perfume, Corton, Woolf, Red Sea-shells, Richars in which they drinke Cacao, others full of Gold in powder, each containing two handfulls, plates of Gold, three quarters of a yard long, and foure fingers broad, as thicke as parchment; Yellow Varnish to paint themselves, Bells, and Hatchets of Copper, Turkeffe-stones; Chalke, L. me, Deere-skins; Cochinle; Feathers, Frizoles, Targets of Gold Diadems, Borders, Beades of Gold, Beades of Gemmes, Tigres-skins, Amber, Axes of Welle Indian Pepper, &c.

Concerning the State of Mexico vnder the Spaniards, *Robert * Tomson*, who was there about the yeere 1555, saith, that then it was thought there were a thousand and five hundred households of Spaniards, and aboue three hundred thousand Indians. The Citee is environed ned with a Lake, and the Lake also with Mountaines about thirty leagues in compass; the raines falling from these Hils, caule the Lake.

In this City resideth the Viceroy, and heere the highest Indian Courts are kept. There are weekly three Faires or Markets, abounding with plenty of Commodities at a cheape price. Many Rivers fall into the Lake, but none goe out. The Indians know how to drowne the City, and would haue profited it, had not the Conspirators beente taken and hanged. The Indians here are good Artificers, Gold-smiths, Copper-smiths, Black-smiths, Carpenters, Shoemakers, Taylors, Sadlers, Embroderers, and of all other Sciences, and worke exceeding cheape, liuing of a little. They will goe two or three leagues to a Faire, carrying not above a penny-worth of Commodities, and yet maintaine themselves thereby.

Miles Philips saith, that when Sir Francis Drake was on the South Sea, the Viceroy cauled a generall muster to be made of all the Spaniards in Mexico, and found about seuen thousand houtholds, and three thousand singlemen, and of Mestizoes twentie thousand.

Master Chilton testifieth, that euery Indian payeth tribute to the King twelue Reals of Plate, and a Haunge of Maiz (siue Haunges make a quarter English) and euery Widow halfe so much. And all their children, about fiteene yeeres old, pay after the same rate. He hath great gaine by his sifels, and by the Popes Bulls: this leaden ware was worth to the King at first about three Millions of Gold yeerely. The greatnesse of exactions caused two Rebelions whiles he was there, and the King will not suffer them to haue Oyle or Wine there growing, although the Earth would prodigally repay them, that they may still haue need of Spaine. Tlaxcala, for their merits in the conquest of Mexico, as before is shewed, is free: only they pay a handfull of Wheate a man in signe of subiection: but some later encrochers haue forced them to till at their owne charge, as much ground as their tribute would amount to. There are in it two hundred thousand Indians.

Some of the wild people in New Spaine are deadly enemies to the Spaniards, and eate as many as they get of them. John Chilton fell into their hands, but being sicke and leane, they thought (as a Captiue Wench told him) that he had the Pox, and was but vnwholsome food, and so let him depart. It is an ill wind that blowes none to good: sicknesse the Harbenger of death, was to him a preferer of life.

Mexico is now an Vniuersitie, and therein are taught those Sciences which are read in our Vniuersities of Europe. This Vniuersitie was there founded by Antony Mendoza; and King Philip created a Colledge of Iesuites, Anno 1577. Mexico is an Archbishopssee. There are many Spanish Colonies or Plantations, Compostella, Colima, Guadaleira, Methocan, Citie of Angels, and others: whereof diuers are Episcopall Sees. Antonio Herrera reckoneth in this and other parts of America, siue Archbishopssees, twentie seuen Bishopssees, two Vniuersities, foure hundred Monasteries and Hospitals innumerable.

In Guastecan, not farre from Panuco, is a Hill, from whence spring two Fountaynes; one of blacke Pitch, the other of red, very hot. To speake largely of New Gallicia, Mechucan, Guastecan, and other Regions, would not be much to the Readers delight, and lesse to my purpose.

wood like a Serpents head. The steele signified that he was set in Heaven. He had the forehead Azure, and a band of Azure vnder the nose, from one eare to the other. Vpon his head hee had a rich plume of feathers couered on the top with Gold: hee had in his left hand a white Target, with the figures of five Pine Apples, made of white Feathers, set in a crosse; and from about issued forth a Crest of Gold: At his sides he had foure Darts, which the Mexicans say, had bene sent from Heaven. In his right hand hee had an Azure staffe, cut in fashion of a wauing Snake. All these ornaments had their mysticall sense. The name of Vitzaliputzli signifies the left hand of a shining feather. Hee was set vpon an high Altar in a small booke, well couered with linnen Clothes, Jewels, Feathers, and ornaments of Gold: and for the greater veneration hee had alwayes a Curtain before him. Ioyning to the Chappel of this Idoll, there was a Pillar of lesse work, and not so wel beaurified, where there was another Idoll called Tlaloc. These two were alwayes together, for that they held the same companions, & of equal power. There was another Idoll in Mexico much esteemed, which was the God of Repentance, and of Iubilees and Pardons for their sinnes. Hee was called Tzacalipuca, made of a blacke shining stone, attired after their manner, with some Ethnicall deuices; it had Earrings of Gold and Silver, and through the nether lip a small Canon of Chrifall, halfe a foot long, in which they sometimes put an Azure Feather, sometimes a greene, to resembling a Turkeis or Emerald: it had the haire bound vp with a haire-lace of Gold, at the end whereof did hang an Eare of Gold, with two Fire-brands of smoke painted therein, signifying that he heard the Prayers of the afflicted, and of sinners. Betwixt the two eares hung a number of small Herons. Hee had a Jewell hanging at his necke, so great, that it couered all his stomack: vpon his armes, Bracelets of Gold, at his naill a rich greene stone, and in his left hand a Fan of precious Feathers of greene, azure, and yellow, which came forth of a Looking Glasse of Gold, signifying that he saw all things done in the World. In his right hand he held foure Darts as the Ensignes of his Iustice, for which cause they feared him most. At his festiual they had pardon of their sinnes. They accounted him the God of Famine, Drought, Barrenesse, and Pestilence. They painted him in another forme, sitting in great Maiestie on a steele, compassed in with a red Curtaine, painted and wrought with the heads and bones of dead men. In the left hand was a Target with five Pines, like vnto Pine Apples of Cotton; and in the right hand a little Dart, with a threatening countenance, and the arme stretched out, as if he would cast it: and from the Target came foure Darts. The countenance expressed anger, the body was all painted blacke, and the head full of Quails Feathers. Tzucalcuani was their God of the Aire.

In Cholula ^a they worshipped the God of Merchandize, called Quetzalcoatl, which had the forme of a Man, but the visage of a little Bird with a red bill, and aboue, acombe full of Warts, hauing allorankes of teeth, and the tongue hanging out. It carried on the head a pointed Mitre of painted paper, a Sithe in the hand, and many toyes of Gold on the legs: it had about it Gold, Silver, Jewels, Feathers, and habits of diuers colours: and was set aloft in a spacious place in the Temple. All this his furniture was significant. The name importeth Colour of a rich Feather. No maruell if this God had many Suters, seeing Quetzalcoatl is both God and godlike to the most; the whole World admiring and adoring this Ammon or Quetzalcoatl. Tlaloc was their God of Water: to whom they sacrificed for Raine.

They had also their Goddeses, the chiefe of which was Toci, which is to say, Our Grand Mother, of which is spoken before; she was slayed by the command of Vitzaliputzli, and from hence they learned to slay men in Sacrifice, and to clothe the liuing with the skins of the dead. One of the Goddeses, which they worshipped, had a Sonne who was a great Hunter, whom they of Tlaxcala afterwards tooke for a God; being themselves addicted much to that exercise. They therefore made a great Feast vnto this Idoll, as shal after follow.

They had another strange kind of Idoll, which was not an Image but a true Man. For they tooke a Captiue, and before they sacrificed him, they gaue him the name of the Idoll, to whom he should be sacrificed, apparelling him also with the same ornaments. And during the time that this representation lasted (which was for a yeere in some fastes, sixe moneths in some, in others lesse) they worshipped him in the same manner, as they did their God; he in the meane time eating, drinking, and making merry. When hee went through the streets, the people came forth to worship him, bringing their Almes with children and sicke folkes, that hee might cure and blesse them, lest he should see. And hee (to the end hee might be reuerenced as hee passed) sometimes sounded on a small Flute. The Feast being come, this fat Foole was killed, opened, and eaten. The Massilians are said to haue vied thelke order, nourishing One a whole yeere with the purest meats, and after with many Ceremonies to leade him through the City and sacrifice him.

Lopez de Gomara writeth, that the Mexicans had two thousand Gods, but the chiefe were were Vatzipuzli and Texcatlipuca. These two were accounted Brethren: There was another God, who had a great Image placed on the top of the Idols Chappell, made of all that Country seeds, grownd, and made in paste, tempered with childrens bloud, and Virgins sacrificed, whose hearts were plucked out of their opened breasts, and offered as first fruits to that Idoll. It was consecrated by the Priests with great solemnitie, all the Citizens being present, many deuout persons sticking in the dowie Image Gold and Jewels: after which consecration no Secular person might touch that Image, nor come in his Chappell. They renew this Image with new dow many times, and Oterque quaterque blessed man hee that can get any Relikes of him. The Souldiers thought themselues hereby safe in the Warres. At this consecration also a Vessell of water was hallowed with many Ceremonies, and kept at the foot of the Altar for the Kings Coronation, and to blesse the Captaines that went to the warres, with a draught of it.

Of their sacrifices of Men.

NExt after their Gods it followeth to speake of their godlesse Sacrifices: wherein they surmounted all the Nations of the World in heauly butcheries. The persons they sacrificed were ^k Captiues: to get which, they made their warres, rather seeking in their victories to take then to kill. Their manner of Sacrificing was this. They assembled such as should be sacrificed in the Pallisadoe of dead mens skuls, of which we shall after speake, where they vsed a certaine Ceremonie at the foot of the Pallisadoe: they placed a great guard about them. Presently there slept forth a Priest attired with a short Surpleisse full of tassels beneath, who came from the top of the Temple, bearing an Idoll made of Wheate and Mays mingled with Honey, which had the eyes thereof made of greene Glaske, and the teeth of the graines of Mays. He descended the steps of the Temple with all speed, and ascended by a little Ladder vp a great stone, planted vpon a high Terrace in the midst of the Court. This stone was called Quauixi-calli, that is, the stone of Eagle: as he went vp and came downe, still he embraced his Idoll. Then went hee vp to the place, where thole were which should be sacrificed, shewing his Idoll to euery one in particular, saying vnto them, This is your God. This done; hee descended by the other side of the staires, and all such as should die, went in Procession to the place where they should be sacrificed, where they found the Ministers ready for that office. Six of the Priests were appointed to this execution; foure to hold the hands and feet of him that should be sacrificed, the fift to hold his head, the sixt to open the stomacke, and pull out his heart. They called them Cachalmua, that is, the Ministers of holy things. It was a high dignitie wherein they succeeded their Progenitors.

The sixt, which killed the Sacrifice, was as high Priest, or Bishop, whose name was different according to the difference of times and solemnities. Their habits also differed according to the times. The name of their chiefe dignitie was Papa and Topilem. Their habit and Robe was a red Curtain with tassels below, a Crowne of rich Feathers, Greene, White, and Yellow vpon his head, and at his eares like pendants of Gold, wherein were set greene stones, and vnder the lip vpon the midlt of the beard, hee had a Peece like vnto a small Canon of an Azure stone.

The Sacrificer came with his face and hands shining blacke; the other fise had their haire much curled, and tyed vp with Laces of Leather, bound about the midlt of the head: vpon their forehead they carried small Roundlets of Paper painted about with diuers colours, and they were attired in a Dalmatike Robe of white wrought with blacke, in this attire representing the Deuill. The Soueraigne Priest carried a great Knife in his hand of a large and sharpe flint, another carried a collar of wood wrought in forme of a Snake, all put themselves in order before a Pyramidall stone which was directly against the doore of the Chappell of their Idoll. This stone was so pointed, that the man which was to bee sacrificed, being layed thereon vpon his backe, did bend in such sort, as letting the Knife butt fall vpon his stomacke, it opened very easily in the middest. Then did the Guard cause them to mount vpon certaine large staires in ranke to this place, and as euery one came in their order, the six Sacrificers tooke him, one by one foot, another by the other; and one by one hand, another by the other, all naked, and cast him on his backe vpon this pointed stone: where the fift of them put the collar of wood about his necke, and the high Priest opened his stomacke with the Knife with a strange dexteritie and nimblenesse, pulling out his heart with his hands, the which he shewed smoking vnto the Sun, to whom hee did offer this heart:

and presently he turned towards the Idoll, and did cast the heart at his face, and then cast away the body, tumbling it downe the staires of the Temple, there being not two foot space betwixt the stone and the first step. In this sort they sacrificed them all one after another. Their Masters, or such as had taken them, tooke vp the bodies and carried them away, and diuiding them amongst them, did eate them. There were euer forty or fifty at the least, thus sacrificed. The Neighbour Nations did the like, imitating the Mexicans in this sacred Butchery.

There was another kind of Sacrifice, which they made in diuers Feasts, called Racaxipzo Velazh, which is as much as the slaying of men, because they slayed the Sacrifice (as is said) and therewith apparelled a man appointed to that end. This man ¹ went dancing and leaping through all the Houses and Market places of the Citie, euery one being forced to offer some thing vnto him: which, if any refused, he would strike him ouer the face with the corner of the skin, defiling him with the congealed blood. This continued till the skinned did stinke, during which time much Almes was gathered, which they employed in necessities for their deuotions. In many of these Feasts they made a challenge betweene him that did Sacrifice, and him that should bee sacrificed, thus: They tied the slau by one foote to a wheele of stone, giuing him a Sword and Target in his hands to defend himselfe: then (stepping forth the other armed in like manner. And if he, that should be Sacrificed, defended himselfe valiantly against the other hee was freed, and was reputed a famous Capitaine; but if he were vanquished, he was Sacrificed on that stone where to he was tied.

They euery yeere gaue one slau to the Priests, to represent their Idoll. At his first entry into the office after he had bene well washed, they adorned him with the Idols ornaments and name, as before is said: and if he escaped before his time of Sacrifice was expired, the chiefe of his Guard was substituted to that representation and Sacrifice. Hee had the most honourable lodging in all the Temple, where hee did eate and drinke, and whither all the chiefe Ministers came to serue and honour him: hee was accompanied with Noblemen though the streets. At night they put him into a strong Prison, and at the appointed Feast sacrificed him.

The Deuill (as Muribera from the beginning) suggested to the Priests, when there seemed defect of these Sacrifices, to goe to their Kings, telling them that their Gods died for hunger, and therefore should be remembered. Then assembled they their people to warres to furnish their bloody Altars.

There happened a strange accident in one of these Sacrifices, reported by men of worthy credit, That the Spaniards beholding these Sacrifices, a young man, whose heart was newly plucked out, and himselfe tumbled downe the staires, when he came to the bottome, he said to the Spaniards in his Language, Knights they haue slaine me. The Indians themselves grew weary of these cruell Rites, and therefore they easily embraced the Spaniards Christianitie: Yea, Cortes writ to the Emperour Charles, that those of Mechnacan sent to him for his Law, being weary of their owne, as not seeming good vnto them.

3 Lap. de Gou. part. 3.

Some of the Spaniards ⁴ were thus sacrificed at Tescuco, and their Horse-skinnes tanned in the haire, and hung vp with the Horse-shoes in the great Temple, and next to them the Spaniards garments for a perpetuall memory. At the siege of Mexico, they sacrificed at one time, in sight of their Countreimen, forty Spaniards.

4 Aug. 1. 5. 47

The ⁵ Mexicans, besides their cruelties, had other vnseemling Rites in their Religion: as to eate and drinke to the name of their Idols, to pisse in the honour of them, carrying them vpon their shoulders, to anoint and belmeare themselves filthily, and other things, both ridiculous and lamentable.

5 Gen. 30. 38.

They ⁶ were so deuout in their Superstitions, and superstitious in their deuotions; that before they would eate or drinke, they would take a little quantitie and offer it to the Sun, and to the Earth. And if they gather Corne, Fruit, or Roses, they would take a leafe before they would smell it, and offer the same: he which did not thus, was accounted neither loving nor loued of God.

The Mexicans in the siege of their Citie, being brought to all extremities, spake thus, as Lopez reporteth, vnto Cortes: Considering that thou art the childe of the Sunne, why dost thou not enreat the Sunne thy Father to make an end of vs? O Sun that canst goe round about the World, in a day and a night, make an end of vs, and take vs out of this miserable life, for we desire death, to goe and rest with our God Quetzanab, who tarrieth for vs.

§. I.

Of their Temples.

WE have already mentioned the Temple of Uitzilpuzli in Mexico, which requireth our further description. It was built of great stones, in fashion of Snakes tyed one to another: and had a great circuit, called Coatepan, that is, a circuit of Snakes. Vpon the top of every Chappell or Oratorie, where the Idols were, was a fine pillar wrought with small stones blacke as Jet;

the ground raised vp with white and red, which below gaue a great light: Vpon the top of the Pillar were Battlements wrought like Snails, supported by two Indians of stone, sitting, holding Candlesticks in their hands, were like Croysants, garnished and enriched at the ends, with yellow and Greene feathers, and long fringes of the same. Within the circuit of this Court there were many chambers of Religious men, and others that were appointed for the Priests and Popes. This Court is so great and spacious, that eight or ten thousand persons did dance easily in a round, holding hands, which was an vsuall custome there, how-euer it seemeth incredible, Cortes relateth, that within the compasse of the wall, a Cite of five hundred houses might have bene builded: round about encompassed with goodly buildings, Halls, and Cloisters for the Religious Votaries to dwell in. In that circuit he num-bereth forty high Towers well built, to which the ascent was by fifty steps or staires: the least of them as high as the steeple of the Cathedrall Church in Siuill. The stone-wooke as curious as in any place, full of grauen and painted imagerie. All these Towers were sepulchres of great Lords, and had each of them a Chappell to some speciall Idol. There were there three large Halls with their Chappells annexed, into which none but certaine Religious men might enter, both full of Images: the chiefe of which Cortes cast downe, and in stead thereof placed the Image of the Emper-blessed, neuer worthy to bee dignified with indignitie, the glorious Virgin and Mother our Lord, with such other Saints.

b Herod. 2. ad Car. 5.

There were foure gates or entries, at the East, West, North, and South, at every one of which began a faire Causey of two or three leagues long. There were in the midst of the Lake wherein Mexico is built, foure large causies. Vpon every entry was a God or Idol, hauing the visage turned to the cause right against the Temple gate of Uitzilpuzli. There were thirty steps of thirty fadome long, diuided from the circuit of the court by a street that went betwene them. Vpon the top of these steps, there was a walke of thirty foot broad, all plastered with chalke: in the midst of which walke was a Pallisado artificially made of very high Trees planted in order a fadome asunder. These Trees were very bigge; and all pierced with small holes from the foot to the top, and there were rods did runne from one Tree to another, to which were tied many dead mens heads. Vpon every rod were many skuls, and these ranks of skuls continued from the foot to the top of the Tree. This Pallisado was full of dead mens skuls from one end to the other, which were the heads of such as had bin sacrificed. For after the flesh was eaten, the head was deliuered to the Priests, who tied them in this sort, vntill they fell off by morsels. Vpon the top of the Temple were two stones or Chappels, and in them the two Images Uitzilpuzli and Tlaloc. These Chap-pels were carued and grauen very artificially, and so high, that to ascend vp to them there were an hundred and twenty staires of stone. Before these Chappels there was a Court of forty foot square, in the midst whereof was a high stone of five hand breadth, pointed in fashion of a Pyramide, placed there for the sacrificing of men, as is before shewed.

c Gomara saith that the fourth was not a causey, but a street of the Cite.

Gomara saith, that this and other their Temples were called Tenecalli, which signifieth Gods house. This Temple, he saith, was square, containing every way as much as a Crof-bow can shoot euell in the midst stood a mount of earth and stone fifty fadome long every way, built Pyramide-fashion, saue that the top was flat; and ten fadome square. It had two such Pyramide Stones or Altars for Sacrifice, painted with monstrous figures. Every Chappell had three lofts, one aboue another sustained vpon Pillars: From thence the eye with much pleasure might behold all about the Lake. Besides this Tower, there were forty other Townes belonging to other inferiour Temples; which were of the same fashion: onely their prospect was not Westward, to make difference. Some of those Temples were bigger then others, and every one of a severall God.

Quelconatl.

There was one round Temple dedicated to the God of the Aire, called Quelconatl, the forme of the Temple representing the Aires circular course about the earth. The entrance of that Temple had a doore, made like the mouth of a Serpent, with foule and deuillish resemblances, striking dreadfull horror to such as entered. All these Temples had peculiar houses, Priests, Gods, and Seruices. At every doore of the great Temple was a large Hall and goodly buildings, which were common Armories for the Citie. They had other daike houles full of Idols of diuers metals, all embred with blood, the dayly sprinkling whereof made them shew blacke: yea, the walls were an inch thicke, and the ground a foot thicke with blood, which yielded a lothsome sent. The Priests entered dayly therein, which they allowed not to others except to Noble personages, who at their entry were bound to offer some Man to be sacrificed to those slaughter-houses of the Diuell. There did continually reside in the great Temple 5000. persons, which had there their meat, drinke, and lodging; the Temple enioying great reuenues, and diuers Townes for the maintenance thereof.

f. Acq. l. 5. c. 13.

Next to the Temple of Uitziliputzli was that of Tescalipuca, the God of Penance, Punishments (and Providence) very high and well built. It had toure ascents; the top was flat, an hundred and twenty foot broad; and ioyning to it was a Hall banded with Tapisstry, and Curtains of diuers colours and workes. The doore being low and large was alwayes covered with a Vaile, and none but the Priests might enter. All this Temple was beautified with diuers Images and Pictures most curiously: for that these two Temples were as the Cathedrall Churches, the rest as Parishionall. They were so spacious, and had so many chambers, that there were in them places for the Priests, Colledges and Schooles.

g. Lep. Gom. p. 1.

Without the great Temple, and ouer against the principall doore, a stones cast distant was the Charnell house, or that Golgotha, (before mentioned) where, vpon poles or sticks, and also in the wals (two Townes having no other stufte but Lime and Skuls) Andreu de Tapia certified Gomara, that he and Gonsala de Vmbrina did reckon in one day, an hundred thirty sixe thousand skuls. When any wastad, supply was made of others in their roome.

§. II.

Of their Nunnes, Friers and other Potaries.

Nunnes.

In this great Circuit of the principall Temple were two Houses, like Cloisters, the one opposite to the other, one of Men, the other of Women. In that of Women they were Virgins onely, of twelue or thirteene yeeres of age, which they called the Maids of Penance: they were as many as the men, and liued chastly, and regularly, as Virgins dedicated to the seruice of their God. Their charge was to sweepe and make cleane the Temple, and every morning to prepare meat for the Idol and his Ministers, of the Almes the Religious gathered. The food they prepared for the Idol were small Loaves, in the forme of hands and feet, as of Marchpane: and with this bread they prepared certaine lawces, which they cast dayly before the Idol, and his Priests did eate it.

These Virgins had their haire cut, and then let them grow for a certaine time: they rose at midnight to the Idols Mattins, which they dayly celebrated, performing the same exercises which the Religious did. They had their Abbesse, who employed them to make cloth of diuers fashions, for the ornaments of their Gods and Temples. Their ordinarie habite was all white, without any worke or colour. They did their penance at midnight, sacrificing and wounding themselves, and piercing the tops of their eares, laying the blood which issued forth vpon their cheekes, and after bathed themselves in a poole which was within the Monastere. If any were found dishonest, they were put to death without remission, saying, she had polluted the house of their God.

They held it for an ominous token, that some religious man or woman had committed a fault, when they saw a Rat or Moufe passe, or a Bat in the Idol-Chappell, or that they had gnawed any of the vales, for that they say, a Cat or a Bat would not adventure to commit such an indignitie, if some offence had not gone before: and then began to make inquisition, and discovering the offender, put him to death, None were receiued into this Monastere, but the daughters of one of the sixe quarters, named for that purpose: and this profession continued a yeere, during which time, their fathers and themselves had made a vow to serue the Idoll in this manner, and from thence they went to be married.

The

The other Cloyfter or Monasterie was of young-men of eightene or twentie yeeres of age, which they called Religious. Their Crowns were shaven, as the Friars in these parts, their haire a little longer, which fell to the midst of their eare, except on the hinder part of the head, where they let it grow on their shoulders, and tyed it vp in trusses. These serued in the Temple, liued poorly and chastly, and (as the Leuites) ministred to the Priests, Incense, Lights and Garments, swept and made cleane the Holy place, bringing wood for a continuall fire, to the Harth of their God, which was like a Lampe that still burned before the Altar of their Idoll. Besides these, there were other little Boyes that serued for manuell vices, as to decke the Temple with Boughes, Roses, and Reeds, to giue the Priests water to wash, Rasors to sacrifice, and to goe with such as begged almes, to carrie it. All these had their superiours, who had the gouernment ouer them; and when they came in publike, where women were, they carried their eyes to the ground, not daring to behold them. They had sinnen garments, and went into the Citie foure or fixe together, to aske almes in all quarters and it they got none, it was lawfull for them to goe into the Corne-filds, and gather that which they needed, none daring to contradiect them.

Friers.

Cortes writeth, that almost all the chiefe mens sonnes in the Citie, after they were fixe or seuen yeeres old, till the time of their marriage, especially the eldest, were thrust into a kind of Religious habit and seruice.

Cortes narra, ad Imp. & Relas. del Temistlan ap. Ram. v. 3.

There might not aboute fiftie liue in that strict penance; they rose at midnight, and sounded the Trumpets, to awake the people. Every one watched by turne, lest the fire before the Altar should die: they gaue the censor, with which the Priest at midnight incensed the Idoll, and also in the morning, at noone, and at night. They were very subiect and obedient to their superiours, and missed not any one point commanded. And at midnight after the Priest had ended his censuring, they rettyred themselues apart into a secret place, where they sacrificed and drew blood from the Calues of their legs with sharp bodkins, therewith rubbing their Temples and vnder their Eares, presently washing themselves in a Poole appointed to that end. These young men did not anoint their heads and bodies with Petum, as the Priests did. This austereitie continued a yeere.

1 Mexican Votaries, no lesse strict in that threefold cord which the Popish Votaries glory of Penitencie, Continencie, Obedience, with other wil worship; yea, for the time, more austere. k Tobacco.

The Priests likewise rose at midnight, and retired themselves into a large place, where were many lights, and there drew blood, as the former, from their legs, then did they set these Bodkins vpon the battlements of the Court, sticks in straw, that the people might see. Neither might they vse one Bodkin in twice. The Priests also vied great fasts of five or ten dayes together, before their great feasts. Some of them, to preferue their chastitie, slit their members in the midst, and did a hundred things to make themselves impotent, lest they should offend their gods. They drunke no Wine, and slept little, for that the greatest part of their exercises were by night.

They did vse also (that the selfe-tyrannizing Catholike should not out-vie Merits) to Discipline themselves with cords full of knots, wherein the people likewise came not behinde in cruell Processions, especially on the Feast of Texcalipuca, lashing themselves with knotted Manguey-cords, ouer the shoulders. The Priest fasted five dayes before that Feast, eating but once a day, and abstaining from their Wiues; the whips supplying those delicacies.

Cemara speaketh of others, besides those young ones before mentioned, which liued in those Cloysters, some being sicke, for their recovery; some in extreme pouerty, to finde relief, some for riches, for long life, for good husbands, for many children and some for vertue: every one abode there as long as they had vowed, and after vsed their libertie. Their offices were to spin Cotton, Wooll, and feathers, and to weaue cloth for their gods, and themselves, to sweepe all thy holy roomes: they might goe on Procession with the Priests, but not sing, nor goe vp the staires of the Temple: their food was boiled flesh and hot bread, receiued of almes, the smoke whereof was offered vnto their gods. They ate and lay all together, but lay in their cloathes. The multitude of Idols and Idol-Temples in New Spaine was such, that a Bishop of Mexico, in his Letters 1532, saith, that the Friers had defaced twenty thousand of the one, and desolated five hundred of the other: and where in Mexico they had vsed yeerely to offer more then twenty thousand Hartes of Boyes and Girles to their Idols, they now (saith he) offer them by good instruction to God. God grant it.

Of their Priests, and the many Rises belonging to

cap. 14.

Touching their Priests in Mexico, there were some high Priests or Popes, even under the same name, called by the Mexicans, Papas, as they should say, Sovereigne Bishops: others, as before you have heard, were of inferiour ranke. The Priests of Xitlapatzli succeeded by linages of certaine quarters of the Citie, deputed for that purpose: and those of other Idols came by election, or by being offered to the Temple in their Infancie. They daily exercise of the Priests was to cast Incense on the Idols, which was done four times in the space of a naturall day: at break of day, at noone, at Sun-set, at midnight. At midnight all the chiefe officers of the Temple did rise, and in stead of Bells they did sound a long time vpon Trumpets, Cornets, and Flutes, very heauily; which being ended, he that did the Office that weeke, step forth attired in a white robe with a Censur in his hand, full of Coles, which he tooke from the harth, burning continually before the Altar, in the other hand he had a purse full of incense, which he cast into the Censur, and entering the place where the Idol was, he incensed it with great reuerence; then tooke he a cloth, with the which he wiped the Altar and the Curtains. This done, they went all into a Chappell, and there did beat themselves and draw blood with Bodkins, as is said: this was alwayes done at midnight. None other but the Priests might intermeddle with their Sacrifices, and every one did employ himselfe according to his dignity and degree. They did likewise preach to the people at some Feasts. They had reuenues and great offerings. They had conuenient houses for their habitation. They ware blacke garments, and cut not nor combed their haire in the time of their ministration.

in 1st. Dec. 1. 5.
These anointings.

The Mexican Priests were thus anointed; they anointed the body from the foot to the head, and all the haire likewise, which hung like tresses or a Horse-maine, for that they applied this vnction wet and moist. Their haire grew so, that in time it hung downe to their hams, insomuch, that the weight made it blut then time: for they neuer cut it vntill they dyed, or were dispensed with for their great age, or were employed in governments, or some honourable charge in the Colonies. When they carried their haire in tresses of fixe fingers breadth, which they dyed blacke with the fume of Sapine, Firre, or Rosine. They were alwayes dyed with this tincture, from the foot vnto the head, so as they were like vnto shining Negros. This was their ordinarie vnction; they had another when they went to sacrifice or incense on the tops of mountaines, or in darke Caves, where there Idols were, vnto also certaine Ceremonies, to take away feare, and adde courage. This vnction was made with diuers venemous beasts, as Spiders, Scorpions, Salamanders, and Vipers, which the Boyes in the Colledges tooke and gathered together: wherein they were so expert, as they were alway furnished when the Priests called for them. They tooke all these together, and burnt them vpon the harth of the Temple which was before the Altar, vntill they were consumed to ashes. Then did they put them in Morters with much Tobacco or Petum, which made them lose their force; mingling likewise with these ashes, Scorpions, Spiders, and Palmers aliue. After this, they put to it a certaine seed being ground, which they called Otolacabqui, whereof the Indians made drinckes to see Visions, for that the vertue of this herbe is to deprive men of sence: they did likewise grind with these ashes black and hairy wormes, whose haire onely is venemous; all which they mingled together with blacke, or the fume of Rosine, putting it in small pots, which they set before their God, saying it was his meat, and therefore called it a diuine meat. By means of this ointment they became Witches, and did see and speake with the Diuell. The Priests being slubbered with this ointment, lost all feare, putting on a Spirit of cruelty. By reason whereof they did very boldly kill men in their sacrifices, went all alone in the night time to the Mountaines, and into obscure Caves, contemned all wilde beasts, beleeuing that Lyons, Tygres, Serpents, and the rest fled from them by vertue hereof.

This Petum did also serue to cure the sick, and for children; all resorted to them as to their Sauours, to apply vnto them this Diuine Physicke, as they called it. They vsed manifold other superstitions to delude the people, in tying small flowers about their necks, and stringing with small bones of Snakes, commanding them to bathe at certaine times, to watch all night at the Diuine harts, to eate no other bread but that which had bene offered to their Gods, that they should (vpon all occasions) repaire to their Wisards, who with certaine graines told Fortunes, and diuined, looking into keelers, and pailles full of water. The Sorcerers and ministers of the diuell vsed much to besmeare themselves. There were infinite number number of these Witches, Diviners, Inchanters, and the like : and still there remaine of them (but secret) not daring publicly to exercise their superstitions.

The Mexicans had amongst them a kinde of baptism, which they did with cutting the eares and members of yong children, having some resemblance of the Jewish circumcision. This Ceremonie was done principally to the sonnes of Kings and Noblemen : presently vpon their birth the Priests did wash them, and did put a little S word in the right hand, in the left a Target. And to the children of the vulgar sort, they put the markes of their calling, and to their daughters instruments to Spinne, Knit, and labour.

The Mexican history afore-mentioned, in the third part thereof, sheweth in pictures their policie and customes. When a child was borne (as is there described) it was laid in a Cradle: foure dayes after, the mid-wife brought it naked, with the instrument of the trade (as is said) in the hand, into the yard; where were prepared Bul-tulhes and a little pan of water, in which she washed the same. Three boyes late by eating roasted Mais, with sodden Frijoles in a little pan, and at the mid-wives appointment named the child with a loud voice. After twenty dayes they went with it into the Temple, and presented the same in presence of the Priest, with an offering: and being of fiftene yeares, committed him to the High Priest of that Temple, to be taught, if they would after haue him a Priest: or if they would haue him a Souldier, they committed him to the Master thereof, with an offering of meat also. In this booke is pictured how they instruct and feed them at three yeeres of age, giuing them halfe a Cake: how at foure with a whole Cake: at five burthening and exercising their bodies, and setting their daughters to spin: how at sixe they exercise them in gathering vp corne spilled on the ground, or the like: at seuen in fishing. There is likewise described their seuer discipline in punishing them with Manguez. The Priests did exercise their Pupils in bodily seruices of the Temple, in going to the Mountains to sacrifice, in Musick, obseruing the time by the starres, and the like. Old men of threescore and ten, might be publicly drunken without controul, which to yong folkes of both sexes was death, as was theft also and adultery.

The Priests also had their office in marriage. The Bridegroom, and the Bride stood together before the Priest, who tooke them by the hands, asking them if they would marry: vnderstanding their will, he took a corner of the vail, wherewith the woman had her head couered, and a corner of the mans gowne, which he tyed together on a knot, and so led them thus tyed to the Bridegroomes house, where there was a harth kindled. Then he caused the wife to goe seven times about the harth, and so the married couple sate downe together, and thus was the marriage contracted. That booke of pictures describes it thus: as Amatez or Broker carried the Bride on her backe at the beginning of the night, foure women attending with Torches of Pine-tree Rosenned. At the Bridegroomes house his parents receiue her, and carry her to him in a Hall, where they are both caused to sit on a Mat, neere a fire, and tyed together with a corner of their apparell, and a perfume of Copale wood is made to their gods. Two old men, and as many old women were present. The married couple eate, and then these old folke, which after this separate them asunder, and giue them good instructions for Oeconomicall duties.

In other parts of New-Spain they vsed other marriage-rites: at Tlaxcallan the Bridegroom and Bride polled their heads, to signifie, that from thenceforth all childish courses should be laid aside. At Michuacan the Bride must looke directly vpon the Bridegroom, or else the marriage was not perfect. In Mixteopan they vsed to carry the Bridegroom vpon their backs, as if he were forced; and then they both ioyned hands, and knit their mantles together with a great knot. The Macatecas did not come together in twenty dayes after marriage, but abode in fasting and prayer all that while, sacrificing their bodies, and anointing the mounds of their Idols with their blood. In Pamuco the Husbands buy the Wives for a Bow, two Arrows, and a Net; and afterwards the Father-in-law speeth not one word to his Sonne-in-law for the space of a yeere. When he hath a child, he lyeth not with his wife in two yeeres after, lest she should be with child againe before the other bee out of danger; some scke twelue yeeres: and for this cause they haue many wives. No woman, while she hath her discale, may touch or dresse any thing.

Adulterie in Mexico, was death: common women were permitted, but extraordinary Stewes. The diuell di. many times talke with their Priest, and with some other Rulers and particular persons. Great gifts were offered vnto him whom the diuell had vouchsafed this conference. He appeared vnto them in many shapen, and was often familiar with them. He to whom he appeared, carried about him painted, the likenesse wherein he shewed himselfe the first time. And they painted his Image on their doores, benches, and eury corner of the house. Likewise, according to his Proican and diuersified apparitions they painted him in many shapen.

Burials-

It belonged also to the office of the Priests and religious in Mexico, to interre the dead, and doe their obsequies. The places where they buried them, were their gardens and courts of their owne houles: others carried them to the places of sacrifices, which were done in the mountaines: others burnt them, and after buried the ashes in the temples, burying with them whatsoever they had, of apparell, stones, and jewels. They did sing the funerall offices like Responses, often lifting vp the deadbody, with many ceremonies. At these Mortuaries they did eat and drinke; and if it were a person of qualitie, they gaue apparell to such as came. When one was dead, his friends came with their presents, & saluted him as if he were liuing. And if he were a King or Lord of some Towne, they offered some slaues to bee put to death with him, to serue him in the other world. They likewise put to death his Priest 10 or Chaplain, (for euery Noble-man had a Priest for his domestical holies) that he might execute his office with the dead. They likewise killed his Cooke, his Butler, Dwarfes, and deformed men, and whosoever had most serued him, though he were his Brother. And to prevent pouertie, they buried with them much wealth, as Gold, Silver, Stones, Curtains, and other rich pieces. And if they burned the dead, they vsed the like with all his seruants and ornaments they gaue him for the other world, and lastly, buried the ashes with great solemnities. The obsequies continued ten dayes with mournfull songs, and the Priests carried away the dead with innumerable ceremonies. To the Noble-men they gaue their honourable Ensignes, Armes, and particular Blazons, which they carried before the body to the place of burning, marching as in a Procession; where the Priests and Officers of the Temple went 20 with diuers furniture, and ornaments, some casting incense, others singing, and some making the Drums and Flutes to sound the mournfullest accents of sorrow. The Priest who did the Office, was decked with the markes of the Idoll which the Noble-men had represented: for all Noble-men did represent Idols, and carrie the name of some One.

The Mexicans honoured the best souldiers with a kinde of Knighthood, of which were three Orders: one wore a red ribband, which was the chiefe; the second was the Lyon or Tyger-knight: the Grey-Knight was the meanest: they had great priuiledges. Their Knighthood had these funerall solemnities. They brought the corps to the place appointed, and enuironing it, and all the baggage with Pine-trees, set fire thereon, maintaining the same with gumme wood, till all were consumed. Then came forth a Priest attired like a great 30 uell, having mouthes vpon euery ioynt of him, and many eyes of Glasse, holding a diest staffe, with which he mingled all the ashes with terrible and fearfull gestures.

When the King of Mexico sickened, they vsed forthwith to put a Visor on the face of Toxcatlipuca, or Uitzilvutali, or some other Idoll, which was not taken away till hee mended or ended. If he died, word was presently sent into all his Dominions for publike lamentations, and Noble-men were summoned to the funerals. The body was laid on a Mat, and watched foure nights, then washed, and a locke of haire cut off for a relike; for therein (said they) remained the remembrance of his soule. After this an Emerald was put in his mouth, and his body throwed in 17. rich mantles, costily and curiously wrought. Vpon the vpper mantle was set the Deuice or Armes of some Idoll, whereunto he had been most deuout in 40 in his life time, and in his Temple should the body be buried. Vpon his face they put a Visor painted with foule and deuillish gestures, beset with jewels: then they killed the slaue, whose office was to light the Lamps, and make fire to the gods of his Palace. This done, they carried the body to the Temple, some carrying Targets, Atrows, Maces, and Ensignes, so hurle into the funerall fire. The High Priest and his crue receiue him at the Temple gate with a sorrowfull Song, and after he hath said certaine words, the body is cast into the fire there prepared for that purpose, together with jewels: also a Dog newly strangled, to guide his way. In the meane while two hundred persons were sacrificed by the Priests, or more, to serue him, as is said. The fourth day after, fiftene slaues were sacrificed for his soule, and vpon the twentieth day, fise; on the sixtieth, three, &c. The ashes with the locke of haire 50 was put in a Chest, painted on the in-side with deuillish shapes, together with another locke of haire, which had been reserued since the time of his birth. On this Chest was set the Image of the King: the kined offered great gifts before the same. The King of Mechuacan obserued the like bloody Rites: many Gentlewomen were by the new King appointed their Offices in their seruice to the deceased, and while his body was burning, were malled with clubs, and buried foure and foure in a graue. Many Women-slaues, and free Maidens were slaine to attend on these Gentlewomen. But I would not bury my Reader in these direfull graues of men cruell in life and death. Let vs seeke some Festiuall argument, if that may be more delightfull.

Their Kalender and Conceits of Time, and some of their Feasts.

He Mexicans^a diuided the yeere into eightene moneths, ascribing to each twentie dayes, so that the five odde dayes were excluded. These five they reckoned apart, and called them the dayes of nothing: during the which, the people did nothing, neither went to their Temples, but spent the time in visiting each other: the Sacrificers likewise ceated their Sacrifices. These five dayes being past, the first moneth began about the twentie sixe of February.

²⁰ Gomara^b sets downe their moneths names in order. The Indians described them by peculiar Pictures, commonly taken of the principall Feast therein. They accounted their weekes by thirteene dayes: they had also a weeke of yeeres which was likewise thirteene. They reckoned by a certaine Wheele, which contayned foure weekes, that is, two and fiftie yeeres.
In the midst of this Wheele was painted the Sunne, from which went foure beames of lines, in a Crosse of distinct colours, Greene, Blue, Red, and Yellow; and so the lines betwixt these;
on which they noted by some Picture, the accident that befell any yeere, as the Spaniards comming, marked by a man clad in Red. The last night when this Wheele was run about, they brake all their vessels and stuffe, put out their fire and all the lights, saying, that the World should end at the finishing of one of these Wheelles, and it might be at that time; and then what should such things need? Vpon this conceit they passed the night in great feare:
but when they saw the day begin to breake, they presently beat many Drums, with much other mirth and Musicke, saying, that God did prolong the time with another Age of two and fiftie yeeres. And then began another Wheele; the first day whereof they tooke new fire, for which they went to the Priest, who fetched it out of a Mountaine, and made a solemne Sacrifice and Thanksgiving. The twenty dayes of each moneth were called by severall names, the first Copalli which signifieth a Spade, and so the rest a House, a Dogge, a Snake, an Eagle, a Temple, and the like. By this Kalender they keepe things in memory aboue nine hundred yeeres since. The Indians of Culhua did beleue that the Gods had made the ⁴⁰ World, they knew not how: and that since the Creation, foure Sunnes were past, and that the fift and last is the Sunne, which now giueth light vnto the World.

The first Sunne (iordsooth) perished by water, and all liuing creatures therewith: the second fell from Heauen, and with the fall slue all liuing creatures, and then were many Giants in the Country: the third Sunne was consumed by fire; and the fourth by Tempest of ayre and wind, and then Mankind perished nor, but was turned into Apes: yet when that fourth Sunne perished, all was turned into darknesse, and so continued five and twenty yeeres: and at the fifteenth yeere, God did forme one man and woman, who brought forth children; and at the end of other ten yeeres appeared this fift Sunne newly borne, which after their rec-knowing is now in this yeere 1612. nine hundred and eightene yeeres since. Three dayes af-⁵⁰ ter this Sunne appeared, they held that all the Gods did die, and that these which since they worship, were borne in proceesse of time.

At the end of euery twenty dayes, the Mexicans celebrated a Feast called Tenalli, which was the last day of euery moneth. The last day of the first moneth was called Tlacaxipala- huatl, on which were slaine an hundred Captiues in Sacrifice and eaten, others putting on the skins (as before is the wed.) Many of them would go to the slaughter with ioyfull countenance, dancing, and demanding Almes, which befell to the Priests. When the greene Corney was a foot aboue the ground, they wled to goe to a certaine Hill, and there sacrificed two Children, a Girl and a Boy, three yeeres old, to the honour of Tlaloc, God of the Water, that they might haue raine: and because these children were free borne, their hearts were not plucked out, but their throats being cut, their bodies were wrapped in a new Man-⁶⁰ tle, and buried in a graue of stone.

bought foure little slaues, betwixt the age of five and seuen, and they were sacrificed also to Tlaloc, for the continuance of raine: and those dead bodies were shut vp in a Caue appointed to that purpose. The beginning of this butchery was, by occasion of a drought, which continued ioure yeeres, and forced them to leaue the Country. When the Maiz was ripe, in the moneth and Feast Hueitzoastli, euery man gathered his handfull of Maiz, and brought it to the Temple for an offering, with a certaine drinke called Atlix, made of the same graine. They brought also Copalli, a sweet Gumme, to incense the Gods which cause the Corne to grow. At the beginning of Summer they celebrated the Feast Tlaxuchimaco, with Roses and all sweet flowres, making Garlands thereof, to set on their Idols heads, and spending all that day in dancing. To celebrate the Feast Tecuilbuitli, all the principall persons of each Province came to the Citie on the Euening of the Feast, and apparelled a woman with the attire of the God of Salt, who danced among a great company of her Neigl' bours, but the next day was sacrificed with much solemnitie, and all that day was spent in deuotion, burning of Incense in the Temple. The Merchants had a Temple by themselves, dedicate to the God of game: they made their Feast vpon the day called Micailbuitli, wherein were sacrificed and eaten many captiues, which they had bought, and all the day spent in dancing.

In the Feast of Uebanizali, they sacrificed a woman, whose skin was put vpon an Indian, which two dayes together danced with the Townsmen, celebrating the same Feast in their best attire.

In the day of Hatamatzli, the Mexicans entred into the Lake with a great number of Canoes, and there drowned a Boy and a Girl, in a little Boat, which they caused to be sunke, in such fort, that neuer after that Boat appeared againe, holding opinion, that those Children were in company with the Gods of the Lake. That day they spent in feasting and anointing their Idols cheekes with a kind of Gumme, called Vll.

When Cortez was gone out of Mexico, to encounter Pamphilo de Narvaez, and had left Aluorado in the Citie, he in the great Temple murdered a great multitude of Gentlemen, which had there assembled, to their accustomed solemnitie, being six hundred, or (as some say) a thousand, richly attired and adorned, where they vsed to sing and dance, in honour of their God, to obtaine Health, Children, Victorie, &c.

IN the moneth of May, the Mexicans made their principall Feast to Vitzilputzli: two dayes before which, the Religious Virgins or Nuns mingled a quantity of Beets with roasted Maiz, and moulded it with Hony, making an Image of that paste, in bignesse like to the Idoll of wood, putting in, in stead of eyes, graines of glasse, Greene, blue, or white, and for teeth, graines of Maiz. Then did all the Nobles bring it a rich garment like vnto that of the Idoll, and being clad, did set it in an azured Chaire, and in a Litter. The morning of the Feast being come, an houre before day, all the Maidens came forth attired in white with new ornaments, which that day were called, the Sisters of Vitzilputzli: they were crowned with Garlands of Maiz, roasted & parched, with chaines of the same about their neckes, passing vnder their left armes. Their cheekes were dyed with Vermilion; their armes from the elbow to the wrist were couered with red Parrots feathers. Thus attired, they tooke the Image on their shoulders, carrying it into the Court, where all the young men were, attired in red Garments, crowned like the women. When the Maidens came forth with this Idoll, the young men drew neere with much reuerence, taking the Litter wherein the Idoll was, vpon their shoulders, carrying it to the staires foot of the Temple: where all the people did humble themselves, laying earth vpon their heads.

After this, all the people went in Procession to a Mountaine called Chapultepec, a league from Mexico, and there made Sacrifices. From thence they went to their second Station, called Atzacayanayot: and from thence againe to a Village, which was a league beyond Cuayacan, and then returned to Mexico. They went in this fort about foure leagues, in so many houres, calling this Procession Spania Vitzilputzli. Being come to the foote of the Temple staires, they set downe the Litter with the Idoll, and with great obleruance drew the same to the top of the Temple, some drawing aboue, and others helping below, the Flutes and Drummes, Cornets, Trumpets, meane while increasing the Solemnitie. The people abode in the Court. Hauing mounted, and placed it in a little lodge of Roses, presently came the

the young men, which strowed flowres of sundry kinds, within and without the Temple. This done, all the Virgins came out of their Convent, bringing pieces of the same paste whereof the Idoll was made, in the fashion of great bones, which they deliuered to the young men, who carried them vp, and laid them at the Idols feet, till the place could receive no more.

They called these morsels of paste, The flesh and bones of Vitzliputzli. Then came all the Priests of the Temple, euery one strictly obseruing his place, with veils of diuers colours and workes, Garlands on their heads, and chaines of flowres about their neckes: after them came the Gods and Goddesses, whom they worshipped of diuers figures, attired in the same livery. Then putting themselves in order about those pieces of paste, they vied certaine Ceremonies, with singing and dancing. By these means they were blessed and consecrated for the flesh and bones of the Idoll: which were then honoured in the same sort as their God. Then came forth the Sacrificers, who began the Sacrifice of Men, whereof they now sacrificed more then at other times: for this was their solemnest Festiuall. The Sacrifices being ended, all the young men and Maydes came out of the Temple attired as before, and being placed in order and ranke, one directly against another, they danced by Drummes, which sounded in praise of the Feast, and of their God. To which Song, all the ancientest and greatest men did answer, dancing about them, making a great Circle, as the manner is, the young men and Maids remaying alwayes in the midst.

All the Citie came to this spectacle, and throughout the whole Land; on this day of Vitzliputzli his Feast, no man might eat any other meate, but this paste with Honey, whereof the Idoll was made, and this should be eaten at the point of day not drinking till the afternoon: the contrary was sacrilegious. After the Ceremonies ended, it was lawfull for them to eat any thing. During the time of this Ceremony, they hid the water from their little Children, admonishing such, as had the vse of reason, to abstaine.

The Ceremonies, Dances, and Sacrifices ended, they went to vnclothe themselves; and the Priests and Ancients of the Temple tooke the Image of paste, and spoyled it of all the Ornaments making many pieces of it, and of the consecrated Rolls, which they ministred in a kind of Communion, beginning with the greater, and continuing vnto the rest, both men, women, and children: who received it with teares, feare, reuerence, and other both affects, and effects of deuotion, saying, That they did ease the flesh and bones of their God. Such as had sicke folkes, demanded thereof for them, and carried it with great reuerence and veneration. All such as did communicate, were bound to giue the tenth part of this Seed, whereof the Idoll was made. The solemnity of the Idoll being ended, an old man of great authority slept vp into an high place, and with a loude voice preached their Law and Ceremonies. This History deserueth the longer Relation, because it is so much resembeth the Popish Chimera, and monstrous Conception of Transubstantiation, and of their Corpus Christi Feast, with other their Rites, to which Scots also the Relater compareth it, blaming the Deuill for usurping the seruice, and imitating the Rites of their Church, whereas their stupendous monsters of opinion, and ridiculous offices of Superstition. But you shall yet see a further resemblance.

Next to this principall Feast of Vitzliputzli, ^b was that of Texcalisqua, of chiefe estimation. This fell on the nineteenth day of May, and was called Tozcoli. It fell euery foure yeeres with the Feast of Penance, where there was giuen ^c full indulgence and remission of sinnes. In this day they did Sacrifice a Captiue, which resembled the Idoll Texcalisqua. Vpon the Euen of this Solemnitie, the Noblemen came to the Temple, bringing a new garment like to that of the Idoll, which the Priest put vpon him, hauing first taken off his other Garments, which they kept with great reuerence. These were in the Coiffers of the Idoll ^d many Ornaments, Jewels, Eare-rings, and other Riches, as Bracelets, and precious Feathers, which serued to no vse, and were worshipped as the God himselfe. Besides that Garment, they put vpon him certaine Ensignes of Feathers, with Fannes, shadowes, and other things. Being thus attired, they drew the Curtayne from before the doore, that all men might see. Then came forth one of the chiefe of the Temple, attired like to the Idoll, carrying Flowre in his hand, and a Flute of Earth, hauing a very sharpe sound, and turning toward the East, hee sounded it, and after that to the West, North, and South, hee did the like.

This done, he put his finger into the Aire, and then gathered vp the Earth, ^e which hee put in his mouth, eating it in signe of adoration. The like did all that were present, weeping, and falling flat to the ground, invoking the darknesse of the night, and the winds, not to forsake them, or else to take away their liues, and free them from the labours they endured therein. Theues, Adulterers, Murderers, and all other Offenders had great feare and heauiness.

uineſſe whiles the Flute ſounded, ſo ſome could not hide nor diſſemble their offences. By this means they all demanded no other thing of their God, but to haue their offences concealed; powring forth many teares, with great repentance and ſorrow, offering great ſtore of Incenſe to appeale their Gods. All the Martialiſts, and reſolute ſpirits, addicted to the Warres, deſired with great deuotion of God the Creator, of the Lord, for whom we liue, of the Sun, and of other their Gods, that they would giue them victory againſt their enemies, and ſtrength to take many Captiues for Sacrifice. This ceremonious ſounding of the Flute by the Priſt, continued ten dayes, from the ninth of May to the nineteenth, with eating of earch, praying euery day with eyes lifted vp to Heauen, ſighes and groanes, as of men grieved for their ſinnes. Yet did not they beleue that there were any puniſhments in the other liſe, but 10 did theſe things to auert temporall puniſhments: they accounted death an aſſured reſt, and therefore voluntarily offered themſelues thereto. The laſt day of the Feaſt, the Priſts drew forth a Litter well furniſhed with Curtaynes, and Pendants of diuers faſhions: this Litter had ſo many armes to hold by, as there were Miniſters to carry it: all which came forth beſmeared with blacke, and long haire, halfe in trefles, with white ſtings, and attired in the Idols liuery. Vpon this Litter they ſet the Image of Texcalipuca, and taking it on their ſhoulders, brought it to the foot of the ſtaires. Then came forth the young men and Maydens of the Temple, carrying a great cord wreathed of chaines of roſted Maiz, with which they enuironed the Litter, and put a chaine of the ſame about the Idols necke, and a Garland thereof on his head.

f Comara writeth otherwiſe as followeth in the end of this Chapter.

g Their bloody Proceſſion

The young men and Mayds weare chaines of roſted Maiz; and the men Garlands, the Maydes Mytres made of Rods couered with the Maiz, their feet couered with Feathers, and their armes and cheekes painted. The Image being placed in the Litter they ſtrewed round about ſtore of the boughes of Manguey, the leaues whereof are pricking. They carried it in Proceſſion (two Priſts going before with Incenſe) in the circuit of the Court: and euery time the Priſt gaue Incenſe, they lifted vp their armes as high as they could to the Idoll and the Sun. All the people in the Court turned round to the place whither the Idoll went, euery one carrying in his hand new cords of the threads of Manguey, a ſadome long, with a knot at the end, wherewith they whipped themſelues on the ſhoulders, euen as they doe heere (ſaith Acosta) on Holy Thursday. The people brought boughes and flowres to beautifie the Court and Temple.

This done, euery one brought their Offerings, Jewels, Incenſe, ſweet Wood, Grapes, Maiz, Quales, and the reſt. Quales were the poore mans Offering which hee deliuered to the Priſts, who pulled off their heads, and caſt them at the foot of the Altar, where they loſt their blood: and ſo they did of all other things which were offered. Euery one offered meate and fruit, according to his power, which was laid at the foot of the Altar, and was carried to the Miniſters Chamber. The offering done, the people went to dinner: the young men and Maydes of the Temple being buſied meanwhile to ſerue the Idoll with all that was appointed for him to eat, which was prepared by other women who had made a vow that day to ſerue the Idoll. Theſe prepared meats in admirable variety, which being ready, the Virgins went out of the Temple in Proceſſion, euery one carrying a little basket of bread in her hand, and in the other a diſh of theſe meates. Before them marched an old man, like to a Steward, attired in a white Surples downe to the ſhalues of his legges, vpon a red ſacke, which had wings inſtead of ſleeues, from which hung broad Ribands, and at the ſame a ſmall Pumpion, ſtucke full of flowres, and hauing many Superſtitious things within it. This old man comming neere to the foot of the ſtaires, made lowly reuerence. Then the Virgins with like reuerence preſented their meats in order: this done, the old man returnes, leading the Virgins into the Conuent. And then the young men and Miniſters of the Temple came forth and gathered vp their meat, which they carried to their Priſts Chambers, who had faſted ſixe dayes, eating but once a day, not ſtirring all that time out of the Temple, where they whipped themſelues, as before it ſhewed. They did eate of theſe Diuine 40 meates (ſo they called it) neither might any other eate thereof. After dinner they aſſembled againe, and then was ſacrificed. One who had all that yeere borne the habit and reſemblance of their Idoll. They went after this, into a holy place appointed for that purpoſe, whither the young men and Virgins of the Temple brought their ornaments, and then they danced and ſung, the chiefe Priſts drumming and ſounding other Inſtruments. The Noblemen in ornaments like to the young men, danced round about them.

They did not vſually kill any man that day, but him that was ſacrificed, yet euery fourth yeere they had others with him, which was the yeere of Iubilee and full pardons. After Sunſet, the Virgins went all to their Conuent, and taking great diſhes of earch full of bread, 60 mixed with Hony, couered with ſmall Pannian, wrought and faſhioned with dead mens heads and bones, carried the ſame to the Idoll, & leſting them downe, retired, their Steward vſhering visiting them as before. Presently came forth all the young men in order, with Canes or Reedes in their hands, who began to runne as fast as they could to the top of the Temple staires; every one striving to come first to the Collation. The chiefe Priests observed who came first, second, third and fourth, neglecting the rest; these they prayed, and gave them ornaments, and from thence forward they were respected as men of marke. The said Collation was all carried away by the young men as great Reliques. This ended, The young men and Maydes were dismissed: and so I thinke would our Reader, who cannot but be glutted with, and almost surfeited of our so long and tedious feasting. Yet let me intreat one service more, it is for the God of gaine, who I am sure will finde Followers and Disciples too attentive.

For the Festivall of this Gaine-god, Quetzalcoatl; the Merchants, his devoted and faithfull Observants, forty dayes before, bought a slave well proportioned to represent that Idoll for that space. First, they walk him twice in a Lake, called the Lake of the Gods, and being purified, they attired him like the Idoll. Two of the Ancients of the Temple came to him nine dayes before the Feast, and humbling themselves before him, said with a loud voice, Sir, nine dayes hence your dancing must end, and you must dye: and hee must answer, (whatsoever hee thinketh) In a good hour. They diligently observed if this advertisement made him sad, or if he continued his dancing according to his wont. If they perceived him sad, they tooke the sacrificing Razors, which they washed and censed from the blood, which thereon had remained, and hercof with another liquor made of Cacao, mixed a drinke, which they said would make him forget what had bene said to him, and returne to his former iollitie. For they tooke this heavinesse in these men to be ominous.

On the Feast Day, after much honouring him, and incensing him, about midnight they sacrificed him, offering his heart to the Moone, and after cast it to the Idoll, letting the body fall downe the staires to the Merchants, who were the chiefe Worshipers. These hearts of their Sacrifices (some say) were burned after the Oblation to this Planet and Idoll. The body they fauced and drested for a Banquet about breake of day, after they had bid the Idoll good morrow with a small dance.

This Temple of Quetzalcoatl had Chappels as the rest, and Chambers, where were Counts of Priests, young men, Maydes, and Children. One Priest alone was resident which was changed weekly. His charge that weeke, after hee had instructed the Children, was to strike vp a Drumme at the Sunne setting, at the sound whereof (which was heard throughout the Citie) every one ended his Merchandize and retired to his house, all the Citie being as silent, as if no bodie had bene there; at day breaking hee did againe give notice by his Drumme: for till that time it was not lawfull to stirre out of the Citie. In this Temple was a Court, wherein they danced, and on this Idols Holy-day, had erected a Theater, thirty foot square, finely decked and trimmed, in which were represented Comedies, Masks, and many other representations, to expresse or cause mirth and ioy.

Of their Schooles, Letters, and other their Opinions.

The Mexicans had their Schooles, and as it were Colledges or Seminaries, where the Ancients taught the Children to say by heart, the Orations, Discourses, Dialogues, and Poems, of their great Orators and chiefe Men, which thus were preserved by Tradition, as perfectly as if they had bene written. And in their Temples, the sonnes of the chiefe Men (as Peter & Martyr reporteth) were shut vp at seven yeeres old, and neuer came forth thence till they were marriageable, and were brought forth to be contracted All which time, they neuer cut their haire, they were clothed in blacke, abstained at certaine times of the yeere from meats engendering much blood, and chastened their bodies with often fasting.

And although they had not Letters, yet they had their Wheele for computation of time, (as it is said before) in which their writings were not as ours, from the left hand to the right, or as of the Eastern Nations, from the right hand to the left, or as the Chinois, from the top to the bottome; but beginning below did mount vpwards: as in that mentioned Wheele, from the Sunne, which was made in the Center, vpwards to the Circumference. Another manner of writing or signing, they had, in Circle-wise. In the Province of Yucatan or Honduras, there were Bookes of the leaves of Trees, folded and squared, which contained the knowledge of the Planets, of Beasts, and other Naturall things, and of their Antiquities, which some blindly-zealous Spaniards, taking for Inchantments, caused to be burned.

The ^e Indians of Tescuco, Talla, and Mexico, shewed vnto a Iesuite their Bookes, Histories, and Kalendars, which in Figures and Hieroglyphicks represented things after their manner. Such as had forme or figure, were represented by their proper Images, other things were represented by Characters; and I haue seene, saith Acosta, the Pater Noster, Aue Maria, and Confession thus written. As, for these things, I a Sinner doe confesse my selfe, they painted an Indian, kneeling on his knees, at a Religious mans feet; To God weit mightie, they painted three faces with their Crownes, according to that painting blasphemy of the Popish Image-mongers, and so they went on in that manner of picturing the words of their Popish Confession; where Images failed, setting Characters; Their ¹⁰ Bookes for this cause were great, which (besides their engravings in Stone, Walles, or Wood) they made of Cotton-wooll wrought into a kind of Paper, and of leaues of Mettall, folded vp like our Broad-clothes, and written on both sides. Likewise they ^e made them of the thinnest inner rinde of a Tree, growing vnder the vpper bark (as did also the Ancient Latines, from whence the names of Codex and Liber for a Booke, are deriued by our Grammarians.) They did bind them also into some forme of Bookes, compacting them with Bummen: their Characters were of Fish-hookes, Starres, Snarres, Files, &c. Thus did they keepe their priuate and publike Records.

There ^p were some in Mexico, that vnderstood each other by whistling, which was ordinarily vsed by Louers and Thecues; a Language admirable euen to our wits, so highly applauded by ourselues, and as deeply delecting these Nations in termes of silliness and simplicity. Yes, in Our Virginia (so I hope and desire) Captaine Smith told mee that there are some, which the spacious diuorce of the wide streame notwithstanding, will by halloes and hoopcs vnderstand each other, and entertaine conference. The numbers of the Mexicans are simple, till you come to six, then they count sixe and one, sixe and two, sixe and three; ten is a number by it selfe, which in the ensuing numbers, is repeated as in other Languages till fiftene, which they reckon in one terme, ten, siue, and one, and so the rest to twentie. Some write ^q that the men in Mexico sate downe, and the women stood, when they made water.

The Mexicans ¹⁰ did beleeue concerning the soule, that it was immortal, and that men receiued either ioy or paine, according to their deserts and liuing in this World. They held for an assured faith, that there were nine places appointed for soules, and the chiefeest place of glory to bee neere vnto the Sunne, where the soules of good men slaine in the Warres, and those which were sacrificed, are placed: that the soules of wicked men abide in the earth, and were diuided after this sort: children which were dead-borne, went to one place: those which dyed of age or other disease, went to another: those which died of wounds or contagion, to a third: those which were executed by order of Iustice, to a fourth; but Parricides which slew their Parents, or which slew their wiues or children, to a fift. Another place was for such as slew their Masters, or Religious persons, Acosta seemeth to deny that the Indians beleeued any punishments after death, and yet setteth downe an Oracion made at Matecumas Election, wherein he is said to haue pierced the nine Vaults of heauen, which seemeth to allude to this of Gomara.

Their burials also were diuers, as is shewed before: and heere may bee added, that hee which died for Adultery, was throwed like vnto their god of Leachery, called Tlacauitlacotl, he that was drowned, like to Tlaloc: he that died of drunkenness, like to the god of wine: Omoteochli; the Souldier, like to Vitziliputzilli. But left you wish me buried in like manner, which trouble as much my English Reader, with New-Spaines tedious Relations, as Old-Spaines fastidious insulting spirits haue sometime done our English Nation, I will aduenture further into the adioyning Prouinces.

VCATAN is a point of Land extending it selfe into the Sea, ouer against the Isle Cuba, and was first discovered by Francis Hernando de Cordova, in the yeere 1517. at which time, one asking an Indian how this Countrey was called, he answered, Telieten, Telietan, that is, I vnderstand you not, which words the Spaniards corrupting, both in the sound and interpretation, called it Iucatan. Lamas Velasques, Gouvernour of Cuba, sent his Cousin, John de

Grijalua the yeere after, who there fought with the Indians at Campotan, and was hurt. The Spaniards went to a Citie on the shore, which for the greatneſſe they called Cayro, of that great Citie in Egypt. Here they found Turreted Houſes, Stately Temples, Wayes paved, and faire Market-places. The houſes were of ſtone or brick, and lyme, very artiſtically compoſed. To the ſquare Courts or fiſt habitations of their houſes they aſcended by ten or twelue ſteps. The rooſe was of Reed, or ſhalkes of Herbs. The Indians gave the Spaniards Jewels of Gold, very faire and cunningly wrought, and were requited with Veſtures of Silke and Wooll, Glaſſe, Beads and little Bels. Their apparel was of Corton in manifold faſhions and colours. They frequented their Temples much, to the which the better ſort paved wayes with ſtone from their houſes. They were great Idolaters, and were circumciſed, but not all. They liued vnder Lawes, and traficked together with great fidelitie, by exchanging commodities without money. The Spaniards ſaw Croſſes amongſt them, and demanding whence they had them, they ſaid that a certaine man of excellent beauty paſſing by that coaſt, left them that notable token to remember him: others ſaid, a certaine man brighter then the Sunne dyed in the working thereof. The Spaniards ſayled thence to Campuchium, a towne or three thouſand houſes. Here they ſaw a ſquare Stage or Pulpit ſoure Cubits high, partly of clammit Bitumen, and partly of ſmall ſtones, whereto the image of a man cut in Marble, was ioyned, two ſoure-footed unknowne beaſts ſuſtaining vpon vpon him, as if they would tear him in pieces. And by the Image ſtood a Serpent all beſmeared with blood, deuouring a Lyon, it was ſeuen and forty foot long, and as bigge as an Oxe. Theſe things I mention as teſtimonies of their Art in theſe barbarous places; and perhaps of their deuotion alſo. Grijalua or Grijalua ſeeing a Tower ſtate off at Sea, by direction thereof, came to an Iſland called Cofumel, agreeing in private and publike manner of life with them of Iucatan: Their Houſes, Temples, apparel, and trade of Marchandize all one: their houſes ſomewhere couered with Reeds, and where Quarries were, with Slate: many houſes had Marble pillars.

They found Ancient Towres there, and the ruines of ſuch as had been broken downe and deſtroyed: there was one whereto they aſcended by eightene ſteps or ſtaires. The Gouvernour whom they ſuppoſed to be a Prielt, conducted them to the Towre: in the top whereof they erected a Spaniſh Banner, and called alſo the Iſland Santa Croce. In the Towre they found chambers, wherein were marble Images, and ſome of Earth in the ſimilitude of Beares. Theſe they inuoked with loude ſinging all in one tune, and ſacrificed vnto them with ſumes and ſweet Ojours, worſhipping them as their Houſhold Gods. There they performed their diuine ceremonies and adoration: they were alſo circumciſed.

Gomar ſaith, That here, and at Xicalanco, the Diuell viſed to appeare viſibly, and chat theſe two were great in eſtimation for holineſſe: every Citie had their Temple, or Altar, where they worſhipped their Idols, amongſt which were many Croſſes of Wood and Braſſe, whereby ſome coniect that ſome Spaniards had recouſe hither when Roderigo was defeated, and Spaine ouer-runne by the Saracens. In both theſe places they ſacrificed men: which Cortes perſwaded them to ceaſe. The Temple in Cofumel or Acufamil was built like a ſquare Towre, broad at the foot, with ſteps round about, and from the middelt vppward were ſtrait: the top was hollow and couered with ſtraw: it had ſoure windowes and Porches. In the hollow place was their Chappell, where ſtood their Idols. In a Temple by the Sea-side was an vncouth Idoll, grear and hollow, faſtened in the wall with limes: it was made of Earth. Behinde this Idoll back was the Veſtry, where the ornaments of the Temple were kept. The Priests had a litle secret doore hard adioyning to the Image, by which they crept into his hollow panch, and thence answered the people that came thither with Prayers and Petitions, making the simple people beleue it was the voyce of the god, which therefore they honoured more then any other, with many perfumes and sweet smells. They offered Bread, Fruit, Quails blood, and of other Birds, Dogs, and sometimes Men. The fame of this Idoll and Oracle brought many Pilgrimes to Acufamil from many places. At the foot of this Temple was a plot like a Church-yard, well walled, and garnished with Pinnacles, in the middelt whereof stood a Crosse of tenne foot long, which they adored for the god of raine. At all times when they wanted raine, they would goe thither on Procession devoutly, and offered to the Crosse Quails sacrificed, no Sacrifice being so acceptable. They burnt sweet Gumme to perfume him with, besprinkling the same with water, and by this meanes they thought to obtaine raine. They could neuer know, saith Gomara, how that the God of the Crosse came amongst them, for in all those parts of India, there is no memory of any preaching of the Gospell that had bene at any time. What others thinke, and what some Indians answered, concerning it, is said before.

Benzo b writeth, That they did not eat the flesh of those men which they sacrificed: and that they were first subdued by Francis Montegius, whose cruelties were such, that Almagro, a Cacique or Indian Lord above an hundred and ten yeeres old, and a Christian, told him That when he was a yong man, there was a sicknesse of wormes, that they thought all would haue dyed: (they were not onely ejected by vomite, but did eate out themselves a passage thorow mens bodies) and not long before the Spaniards arriual, they had two battels with the Mexicans, in which an hundred and fiftie thousand men perished. But all this was light in respect of that Spanisb burthen.

Guatimala, or Saint Iames.

Guatimala c commeth next to our consideration, a Prouince of pleasant Ayre, and fertile soyle, where growth abundance of their Cacao, which is a fruit that serueth the Indians for meat, drinke, and money. The Citie (which beareth the same name) was first at the foot of a Vulcano or Hill which casteth fire, but because in the yeere 1542. * on the sixe and twen tieth day of December, a Lake hidden in the bowels of that Hill, brake forth in many places, and with a terrible violence ruined the most part of the Citie: it was removed two miles thence, together with the Episcopall Sea, and the Kings Council. But in the yeere 1581. there issued from another Vulcan two miles off, or somewhat more, such an eruption of fire as threatened to consume euery thing. The day following, followed such a shoure of Ashes, that it filled the Valley, and almost buried the Citie. And yet were not all the throwes passed of this Hills monstrous trauels, but the yeere after, for the space of foure & twenty houres thence issued a streame of fire, that dranke vp fise streames of water, burned the stones and Rockes, rent the Ayre with thunders, and made it a waing and mouing Sea of fire. Before e that first eruption of waters, some Indians came and told the Bishop, that they had heard an vncredible noyse and murmuring at the foot of the Hill: but he reprocured them, saying, they should not trouble themselves with vaine and superstitious feares; about two of the clocke in the night following, happened that deluge, which carried away many houses, and whatsoever stood in the way, in which 320. Spaniards perished, and scarce any mention of the houses remained.

It is worthy recital which Benzo f and Gomara haue recorded, that Peter Aluarez the Gouernour (who by licence of the Pope had married two sisters, the Ladie Francesca, and the Ladie Beatrice della Culina) hauing perished by a mischance, his wife not onely painted her house with Sorrowes blacke Liuerie, and abstained from meat and sleepe, but in a mad impietie said, God could now doe her no greater euill. Yet for all this her sorrow, she caused the Citizens to be sworne vnto her Government (a new thing in the Indies.) Soone after, this inundation hapned, which first of all assailed the Gouernours house, and caused this important and impatient Ladie, now to bethinke her of a deuotion, and betake her to her Chappell, with eleuen of her Maids, where leaping on the Altar, and clasping about an Image, the force of the water ruined the Chappell; whereas, if she had stayed in her bed-chamber, she had escaped death. They tell of vncouth noyses, and hideous apparitions which then were seene. Benzo obserued by his owne experience, that this Country is much subiect to Earth-quakes. The Guatimalans in manner of life resemble the Mexicans and Nicaraguans.

g Bernal I. 2.
cap. 15.

Fondura, g or Honduras is next to Guatimala, wherein were (saith Benzo) at the Spaniards first coming thither foure hundred thousand Indians, but when I was there, scarcely eight thousand were left: the rest being slaine, or sold, or consumed by the Mines: and those which are left, both heere, and in other places, place their habitation as farre as they can, where the Spaniard shall be no eye-sore vnto them. The Spaniards in this Prouince planted fise Spanisb Colonies, which all scarcely could number an hundred and twentie houses.

§. II.

Of Nicaragua, their Plentie, and exceeding Superstition.

Nicaragua * extendeth it selfe from the Chiulatecan Mines of Fondura, toward the South Sea. This Region is not great, but fertile, and therefore called of the Spaniards Mabness Paradise, for the plentie of all things; yet in the Summer time it is so scorched with heate, that men cannot travell but in the night. Sixe moneths, from May to October, are pestered with continuall showres, which the other six wholly want. The Parrots are here as troublesome as Crows and Rookes with vs, and they are forced to keep their come in like manner from their spoyling. The people are of like condition to the Mexicans they feed on mans flesh. To their dances they flcke two or three hundred in a companie, which are performed with great varietie of gestures, vestures, and passions: Every man in, and, every man out of his humour. Thirtie and five miles from Leon or Lyon, an Episcopall Citie in this Region, is a Vulcano or flaming Hill, the fire whereof may be seene (in the night) about one hundred miles. Some had a conceit, that molten gold was the matter of this fire. And therefore a certaine Dominican caused a Kettle and long chaine of Yron to bee let downe into this fierie concautie, where by the violence of the heat, the Kettle and part of the chaine was molten. He makes a bigger and stronger, but returns with like successe, and this added, that himselfe and his two companions by eruption of fire, had almost bene consumed. Gomara * calls this fire Blasio de Tonila, and the hill, Majaya. It goes downe two hundred and fiftie braces or yards. In this Country they vsed Sodomitie and sacrifices of Men. Of this name Nicaragua, Gilgulesales, (that first of the Spaniards discovered these parts) found a King, with whom he had much conference, whom he perswaded to become a Christian, although his prohibition of warres and dancing did much trouble him. This Nicaragua b demanded them if the Christians had any knowledge of the Flood, which drowned all the Earth with men and beasts (as he had heard his Progenitors say) and whether another were to come; whether the Earth should be overthrown, or the Heaven fall: when, and how the Moone and Starres should lose their light and motion: who moued those heavenly bodies; where the soules should remaine; and what they should doe, being freed from the bodie, whether the Pope dyed, whether the Spaniards came from Heaven, and many other strange questions admittible in an Indian. They worshipped the Sun and other Idols, which Nicaragua suffered Gilgulesales to take out of the great Temple.

In Nicaragua c there were hue linages, and different languages: the Coribici, Ciocotoga, Ciondale, Oretigua, and the Mexican; though this place was a thousand miles from Mexico, yet were they like them in speech, apparell, and religion: they had also the same figures in stead of Letters, which those of Culhua had, and bookes a span broad, and twelue spans long, doubled of many colours. They differ as in Languages, so in Religions. Of their religious rites thus writeth Gomara: their Priests were all married, except their Confessors, which heard Confessions, and appointed Penances, according to the qualitie of the fault: they revealed not the Confession: they appointed the Holy-dayes, which were eighteene. When they sacrificed, they had a Knife of flint, wherewith they opened him that was sacrificed. The Priests appointed the Sacrifices; how many men, whether they were to be women, or slaves taken in battell; that all the people might know how to celebrate the Feasts, what Prayers and what offerings to make. The Priest went three times about the Captive, singing in a dolefull tune, and suddenly opens his breast, anoints his face with the blood, takes out his heart, diuileth his body. The heart is given to the Prelate, the feet and hands to the King, the buttocks to the taker, the rest to the people. The heads of the Sacrifices are set on Trees, planted there for that purpose, every tree hath figured in it the name of the Prouince wherewith they haue wars. Vnder these trees they many times sacrifice men and children of the Country; and of their owne people, being first bought: for it was lawfull for the Father to sell his children. Those which the d Kings bring vp of their owne people, with better fare then ordinary for sacrifice, are made beleue, they shall be some canonized Wrights, or Heauenly Deities, and therefore take it gladly. They did not eate the flesh of these, as they did of the captiues. When they ate their sacrificed captiues, they made great Feasts, and the Priests and Religious men dranke much wine and smoke; their wine is of Prunes: whiles the Priest anoints the cheekes and mouth of the Idoll with the blood, the others sing, and the people make their Prayers with great deuotion and teares, and after goe on Procession (which is not done in all Feasts.) The Religious haue white Cotren-coats, and other ornaments which hang downe from the shoulders to the legs, thereby to put a difference between them & others. The Laymen haue their Banners, with that Idoll which they most esteem, and bags with dust & bodkins; the yong men haue their Bowes, Darts, Arrows, & the guide of all is the Image of the Deuill set vpon a Lance, carried by the most ancient and Honourable Priest. They goe in order, the Religious singing till they come to the place of their Idolatry, where being arrived, they spread coverings on the ground, or strew it with Roses and Flowers, because their Idols should not touch the ground, and the Banner being flucke fast, the singing ceaseth, and the Prelate beginning, all the rest follow, and draw blood, some from their tongues, some from their eares, some from their members, and eury man as his devotion liketh best, and with that blood anoint the Image. In the meane-while, the youths skirmish and dance for the honour of their Feasts: they cure the wounds, with the poulder of heards and eoles. In some of these Processions they hallow Mayz, besprinkling the same with the blood of their Priuities, and eat it.

They may haue many women, but one is their lawfull wife, which they marrie thus; the Priest takes the Bridegroome and the Bride by the little fingers, sets them in a chamber at a fire, and giues them certain instructions, and when the fire is out, they are married. If he takes her for a Virgin, and finds her otherwise, he may diuorce her. Many bring their wives to the Caciques, or Lords to corrupt them, esteeming it an honour. Their Temples were low, darke roomes, which they vied for their Treasure also and Armourie. Before the Temple was an high Altar for the Sacrifices, whereon the Priest played the Preacher first, and then the Butcher.

Adulterers are beaten, but not slaine; the adulterous wife is diuorced, and may not marry againe, and her Parents are dishonoured. Their Husbands suffer them to lyve with others in some Feasts of the year. He that forceth a Virgin, is a slave, or payeth her dowrie: if a Slave doe it with his Masters Daughter, they are both buried quicker. They haue common Brothers. A Thiefe hath his haire cut off, and is made the Slave from whom he hath stolne, vntill he hath made satisfaction; which if he deferre long, he is sacrificed. They had no punishment for him which should kill a Cacique, for (they said) such a thing could not happen.

This Fish somewhat resembleth the Otter, it is five and twenty foot long, twelue thicke, the head and tayle like a Cow, with small eyes, his backe hard and hairy, he hath onely two feet at the shoulders, and those like an Elephants. The females bring forth young, and nourish them with the Vdder, like a Cow. I haue seene and eaten of them (saith Benzo) the taste is like Swines flesh, they eate Grass. There was a King in Hispaniola, which put one of them (being presented him by his Fishermen) into a Lake of standing-waters, where it liued five and twenty yeares: when any of the seruants came to the Lake and called Matto, Matto, he would come and receiue meat at their hands: and if any would bee ferried ouer the Lake, he willingly yeilded her backe, and performed this Office faithfully. yea, she hath carrien ten men at once, singing or playing. A Spaniard had once wronged her, by casting a dart at her; and therefore after that, when she was called, she would plunge downe againe, otherwise to the Indians shee remained officious. Shee would be as full of play as a Monkey, and would wastle with them; especially shee was addicted to one young man, which vied to her. This proceeded, partly from her docible nature, partly, because being taken young, she was kept vp a while at home, in the Kings house, with bread. This Fish lieth both on Land and Water. The Riuer swelling ouer his Banks, into the Lake, this Fish followed the streame, and was seene no more. There was another strange creature in Nicaragua (they call it Caseny) like a blacke Hogge, with small eyes, wide eares, clouen feet, a short trunk or snout like an Elephant, of so lowd a braying, that he would make men deafe. Another there is, with a naturall purse vnder her belly, wherein she putteth her yong: it hath the bodie of a Fox, handed and footed like a Monkey. The Bats in these parts are terrible for biting. The Inhabitants neere the Riuer Sueros are not differing from the rest, but that they eate not mans flesh. Next, is that necke or narrow extent of Land stretching betwene the North and South-Seas, and (as it were) knitting the two great Peninsuls of the North and South America together.

Nombre de Dios signifieth the name of God, occasioned by the words of Didacus Niquefa, who after diualltrous aduentures elsewhere, came hither, and here bade his men goe on thore in the name of God; whereupon the Colony and Plantation there, was so called: It hath a bad situation and small habitation. Baptista Antonio the King of Spaines Surreyour counselled to bring Nombre de Dios to Puerto Bello, It was removed from the former seat, in the year of our Lord 1584. Sir Thomas Baskerville burnt it, and went from thence with his Armie towards Panama, in the year 1595. Darien was called Antigua Darienia, because Ancifus vowed to our Lady at Suill calle: Maria Antigua, if she would helpe him in those Indian Conquests, hee would turne the Caciques house into a Temple: there he planted a Colony.

- 10 It would be tedious to tell of the suites, and ciuill vnciuill brawles betwixt the Spaniards in these parts. Vasques Valboa imprisoned Ancifus, and after recovered his credit by discovery of the South-Sea. For whiles the Spaniards contended about the weight and sharing of their Gold, which a Cacique had given them, this Cacique being present, hurled downe the Gold, not a little maruelling (as he said) that they would so much contend for that, as if they could eate or drinke it: But if they liked it so well, hee would carry them where their Golden-thirst should be satisfied. He was deceived in the nature of that dropie-thirst, which as a fire quenched with oyle, receiues thence greater strength: but hee deceived not them in his promise, bringing them to the South-Sea: where Valboa named one Prouince, Golden Castle. And for that which he spake of their strife, as if they could eate or drinke those Metals, the cruelties of the Spaniards were such, as the Indians, when they got any of them, would bind their hands and feet, and laying them on their backs, would powre Gold into their mouthes, saying, in insultation, Eat Gold Christian. This Valboa was put to death, by Arias his Father-in-law.

- But now we haue mentioned the first Spaniards which planted these parts, it shall not be amisse, to mention some hardships the Spaniards sustained before they could here settle themselves, which may be an answer to those nice and delicate conceits, that in our Virginian Expedition cast off all hope, because of some disasters. How the Spaniards dealt one with another, and how the Indians dealt with them, you haue heard: worse hath not followed from any turbulent emulous spirit of our owne; or hostile, of the Virginian, in this 30 Plantation. And as for famine, Nicusa's men were so pinched, that (not to speake of those which perished, one sold an old leane mangie Dogge to his fellowes for many Castellans of Gold: these slayed the Dogge, and cast his mangie skin, with the bones of the head among the bushes. The day following, one of them finds it full of Maggots, and stinking: but famine had neither eyes nor scent: he brought it home, sod, and ate it, and found many Customers which gaue a Castellan a dish for that mangie Broth. Another found two Toads, and sod them, which a sicke man bought for two fine shirts curiously wrought with Gold. Others found a dead man, rotten, and stinking, which putrified carcase they roasted, and ate. And thus, from seven hundred and seventy men, they were brought so low, that scarce forty (shadowes of men) remained to inhabite Darienia. Much like to this was their 40 successe at the River of Plate, in Florida and other places of the West-Indies.

§. I.

Of the great Rivers in these parts, and of Dariene.

His Peninsula of the New World extending it selfe into the South, is in forme somewhat like to Africa, and both ^a to some huge Pyramis. In this, the Basis or ground is the Northier part, called Terra Firma, from whence it lesseneth it selfe by degrees, as it draweth neerer the Magellan Straits, where the top of this Spire may fitly bee placed. On the East side it is washed with the North Ocean, as it is termed: On the West with that of the South, called also the Peaceable. It is ^b supposed to haue sixteene thousand miles in compasse, foure thousand in length; the breadth is vnequall. The Easterne part thereof, betweene the Rivers Maragnon and Plata, is challenged by the Portugals; the rest by the Spaniard. From the North to the South are ledges of Mountaines, the tops whereof are said to be higher then that Birds will visit; the bottomes yield the greatest Rivers in the World, and which most enrich the Oceans store-house. Orenoque, Maragnon, and Plata seeme to be the Indian Triumvirs, Generals of those River-Armies, and Neptunus great Collector of his watery tributues. Orenoque for ships is nauigable a thousand miles; for lesse Vessels, two thousand in some places twentie miles broad; in some, thirtie.

Ber.

Berco affirmed to Sir Walter Raleigh, That a hundred Rivers fell into it, marching vnder his name and colours, the least as bigge as Rio Grande a one of the greatest Rivers of America. It extendeth two thousand miles East and West, and commandeth eight hundred miles, North and South. Plata, taking vp all the streames, in his way, is so full swolne with his increased store, that he seemeth rather with bigge lookes to bid defiance to the Ocean, then to acknowledge homage, opening his mouth fortie leagues wide, as if he would deuour the fame; and with his vomited abundance maketh the salt waters to recoyle, following fresh in this pursuit, till in salt swetes at last he melteth himselfe in the Conbate. Maragnon is farre greater, whose water hauing furrowed a Channell of fixe thousand miles, in the length of his winding passage, couereth threecore and ten leagues in breadth, and hideth his

Bankes on both sides from him which sayleth in the middelt of his proud Current, making simple eyes beleue, that the Heauens alway descend to kisse and embrace his waues. And sure, our more-straitned world would so far be accessary to his aspiring, as to style him with the royall title of Sea, and not debase his greatnesse with the meane name of a River. Girana somewhat otherwile writeth of these Rivers, that Plata called by the Indians Parana-guazu, as one should say, a River like a Sea, is twenty five leagues in the mouth, (placed by him in thirty three degrees of Southerly latitude) encreasing in the same time and manner as Nilus: Maragnon (hee saith) is in the entrance five leagues, and is not the same with Diogo pag. 2. lib. 3. cap. 4. saith that they were fierce women which followed their Husbands in the warres, and fought with the Enemy: These Orellana to make greater account of his Discoueries, reported to bee *Amazon*s: and tied to the Emperour robe employed in that seruice and conquest of the Land of Amazon, William Daiuis sent lither in the fleet of the Duke of Florence, rebo a small low land called Morla, in this River, inhabited only by women, which goe naked, and vse Bow and Arrowes (as doe the men in the parts adioyning) for the killing of their owne food, their haire long, their breasts hanging loose. Hee saith, he hath seene forty or fifty together going along by the Sea side, & when they espied a fish, to shoote at it, and presently throwing downe their Bowes to lcape into the Sea after their Arrow, bringing the same to Land with the fished prey: in all other things, as lodging, meat-dressing, &c. like the Neighbour Inhabitants. Only they lue sequestred from men, except in one month of the yeare, when the men resort for copulation to them, and carry away the male children they finde. The other they educate. They carrie their children at their backes like Tinkers budgets, and giue them the breast ouer the shoulder. Thus Farrer Daiuis. As for that winamman rie he denieth: if of their wa except against fishes and other food no mention; and thereby their liuing without men, may either be caused by the vnholsonnesse to that sex, as is reported of an Island neere Zocotari, or for some other reason, which I leave to the Readers search or credit.

Of the Townes of Nombre de Dios, seuentene leagues from Panama, the one on the North Sea, the other on the South, and of Dariene, wee last tooke our leaues, as vn certaine whether to make them Mexican or Peruvian, being borderers, and set in the Confinnes, betwix both. The moorish loyle, muddie water, and grosse Ayre, conspire with the heavenly Bodies to make Dariene vnwholesome: the myrie streame runneth (or crepeth rather) very slowly; the water is but sprinkled on the house-floore, engendreth Toades and Wormes.

They haue in this Province of Dariene store of Crocodiles, one of which kinde, Ciaza saith, was found fine and twentie foot long; Swine without tails; Cate with great tails; Beasts cloven-footed like Kine, otherwile resembling Mules, sauing their spacious eares, and a trunk or snout like an Elephant: there are Leopards, Lyons, Tygres. On the right and left hand of Dariene are found twenty Rivers, which yeeld Gold. The Men are of good stature, thinn haired; the Women wear Rings on their eares and noses, with quaint ornaments on their lips. The Lords marry as many Wives as their listeth, other men, one or two. They forsake change, and sell their Wives at pleasure. They haue publike Stewes of women, and of men also in many places without any discredit; yea, this prouidedgeth them from following the warres. The yong Girles hauing conceived, ate certain herbs, to cause abortion. Their Lords and Priests consult of warres, after they haue drunke the smoke of a certaine herbe. The Women follow their husbands to the warres, and know how to vse a Bow. They all paint themselves in the warres. They neede no Head-pieces, for their heads are so hard, that they will breake a Sword, being smitten thereon. Wounds received in warre, are the badges of honour, whereof they glory much, and thereby enioy some Francis.

Their Priests are their Physicians, and Masters of Ceremonies; for which cause, and because they have conference with the Deuill, they are much esteemed. * They have no Temple, nor Houses of deuotion. The Deuill they honour much, which in terrible shapes dole sometimes appeare vnto them; as I (saith Cieza) haue heard some of them say. They beleeue, that there is one God in heauen, to wit, the Sunne, and that the Moone is his wife; and therefore worship these two Planets. They worship the Deuill also, and paint him in such forme as he appeareth to them, which is of diuers sorts. They offer 10 Bread, Smoke, Fruits, and Flowres with great deuotion. Any one may cut off his arme which stealeth Mauis. Enciso, with his Armie of Spaniards seeking to subdue these parts, vfed a Spanish trick, telling the Indians, That hee sought their conuersion to the Faith, and therefore discoursed of One God, Creator of all things, and of Baptisme; and after other things of this nature, lesse to his purpose, he told them; That the Pope is the Vicar of Christ in all the world, with absolute power ouer mens Soules and Religions; and that hee had giuen those Countries to the most mightie King of Spaine, his Master, and hee was now come to take possession, and to demand gold for tribute. The Indians answered, That they liked well what he had spoken of one God, but for their Religion, they would not dispart of it, or leave it: And for the Pope, he should be liberrall of his owne; neither seemed it, that their 20 King was mightie, but poore, that sent thusa begging. But what words could not, their Swords effected, with the destruction of the Indians.

Of Vraba, Carthagena; and the Superstitions of Dabaiba.

He soyle of Vraba is so fatned with a streame therein; that in eight and twentie 30  days the seeds of Cucumbers, Melons, and Gourds, will ripen their Fruits. There is a Tree in those Countries, whose leaues, with the bare touch, cause great blisters: the leaues of the wood is poyson; and cannot be carried without danger of life, except by the helpe of another herbe, which is an Antidote to this venomous Tree. King Ahuilaba had Palace in a Tree, by reason of the moorish situation and often inuasion of his Land. Vasquez could not get him downe, till he began to cut the Tree, and then the poore King came downe, and bought his freedome at the Spaniards price.

m Pet. Martyr, Dabaiba.

Carthagea was so called, for some resemblance in the situation to a Citie in Spaine of that name, Sir Francis Drake tooke it. The Indians thereabouts vsed poisoned Arrowes: the women warr as well as the men. Enciso took one, who with her owne hands had killed eight and twenty Christians. They did eate the Enemies which they killed. They vsed to put in their Sepulchres gold, feathers, and other riches. Betweene Carthagena and Martha runneth a swift Riuer, which maketh the Sea-water to giue place; and they which passe by, may in the Sea take in of this water fresh.

It is called of the Inhabitants Dabaiba (the Spaniards haue named it Pio Grande and the Riuer of Saint John) it passeth with a Northern discouerie, into the Gulfe of Vraba before mentioned. They which dwell on this Riuer, obserue an Idoll of great note, called by the name of the Riuer, Dabaiba: whereto the King at certain times of the yeere sends slaves to be sacrificed, from remote Countries, from whence also is great resort of Pilgrims. They kill the slaves before their God, and after burne them, supposing that odour acceptable to their Idoll, as Taper-lights, and Frankincense (saith Martyr) is to our Saints. Through the displeasure of that angry God, they said that all the Rivers and Fountaines had once failed, and the greatest part of men perished with famine. Their Kings in remembrance hereof, haue their Priests at home, and Chappels which are swept euery day, and kept with a religious neatnesse. When the King thinketh to obtaine of the Idoll, Sunne-shine, or Raine, or the like; he with his Priests gets vp into a Pulpit, standing in the Chappell, purposing not to depart thence till his suit be granted. They vrge their God therefore with vehement prayers, and cruell fasting: the people meane-while macerating themselves also with fasting, in foure dayes space not eating nor drinking, except on the fourth day, onely a little broth. The Spaniards asking what God they worshipped thus, they answered, The Creator of the Heauens, Sunne, Moone, and all inuisible things, from whom all good things proceed. And they say Dabaiba was the Mother of that Creator. They call them to their Deuotions with certaine Trumpets and Bells of gold. The Bells had clappers like in forme to ours, made of the bones of Fishes, and yeelding a pleasing sound, as they reported: which no doubt, was a pleasing sound and musick to the Spaniards covetous hearts, howsoever it agreeth with the nature of that metall to ring in the eares. One of them, say they, weighed fixe hundred o Pensas. Their Priests were enjoyned chastitie, which vow, if they violated, they were either stoned or burned. Other men also in the time of that fast, likewise contained themselves from those carnall pleasures. They have an imagination of the soule (but know not what substance or name to ascribe vnto it) to which yet they beleueed, was assigned future ioyes or woes, according to their demerits, pointing vp to Heauen, and downe to the Center, when they spake thereof. Many of their Wiues (for they might haue many) followed the Sepulchres of their husbands. They allow no marriage with the Sister, of which they haue a ridiculous conceit of the Spot, which they account a Man in the Moone, 10 that for this Incest was thither confined; to the torments of cold and meynure, in that Moone-prison. They leaue trenches on their Sepulchres, in which they yeerely powre Mays, and some of their Wine (to the profit) as they thinke of the Glorio. If a Mother die while she giueth sucke, the poore nursing must not bee Orphan, but bee interred with her, being put there to her brest, and buried aloue. They imagined that the Soules of their great men and their familiars were immortal, but not others: and therefore such of their seruants and friends as would not be buried with them, they thought should lose that pui- uiledge of Immortalitie, and the delights of those pleasant places, where was eating, drink- ing, dancing, and the former delicacies of their former liues. They renew the funerals pompe of these great men yeerely, assembling thither with plentie of Wine and meats, and there watch all night (especially the women) singing dreerie lamentations, with Inu-aiues against 20 his Enemies, if he dyed in the warres, yea, cutting the Image of his Enemy in pieces in re- uenge of their slaine Lord. This done, they fall to drinking of Mays Wine till they be weary, if not drunken. Yet after this, they resume their Songs to his commendation, with many dances and adorations. When day appeareth, they put the Image of the deceased into a great Canoe (a Boat of one Tree, capable of threecore Oares) hulled with drinckes, herbes, and such things as in his life he had loued: which some carrie vpon their shoulders in Procession about the Court, and set it downe there againe, and burne it with all the contents. After which, the women, filled with Wine, and emptied of all modestie, with loose haire, secrets 30 the weapons of the men, and conclude with beastly sleeping on the ground. The young men exercise their dances and songs, piercing the middle of their priue member with the sharpe bone of the Ray-fish, bedewing the pavement with the blood. And their Banis, who are their Physicians, and Priests, heale the same againe in 4. dayes. They haue in those parts Magicians, without whole aduice they attempt nothing and neyther hunt, fish, nor gather gold, except the Tequenigua, or Wicard thinke it fit.

Monstrous Harpyes.

To end this Dabaiban Story, Martyr sayeth (for I will not further engage my credit for the truth) that in Camata, which is at the head of this River, there happened most terrible tempests from the East, which threw downe Trees and Houles; and in the last A.D. of that Tragedie, were brought (not by representation) two foule Monsters of monstrous Fowles, 40 such as the Poets describe the Harpies, with womens faces; one of them so great, that her legs were thicker then a mans thigh; so heauy, that the boughes of the Trees could not beare her; so strong that she would seize on a man, and flye away with him, as a Kite with a Chick- ken: the other was lesse, and supposed to bee the young one of the former. Cervantes, Ossorino, and Spinosa, told Martyr, that they spake with many who saw the greater killed, which was done by a stratageme; for they made the Image of a man, and set it on the ground, attending in the Woods with their Arrows, till shee the next morning seized on this prey, and lost her selfe; the young was neuer scene after, and happily you thinke, not before neither. But they added, that the killers of her were honoured as Gods, and reward- 50 ed with presents.

§. III.

Of Tunia, Saint Martha, Venezuela, and Curiana.

IN the Valley of Tunia, or Tomana, are Mines of Emeralds. The people worship the Sonne for their chiefe God, with such awfull deuotion, that they dare not looke stedfastly vpon it; the Moone also they worship, but in an inferior degree. 60 In their Warres, in stead of Ensignes, they tie the bones of certaine men (who in their liues had bene valiant) vpon long staves, to prouoke others to the like fortitude. They bury bury their Kings with golden neck-laces, set with Emeralds, and with Bread and Wine. The people about Rio Grande are Canibals, also about Saint Martha. The Tunians vse poysoned Arrows : and when they go to the Warres they carry their Idoll Chiappen with them; vnto whom, before they enter into the field, they offer many Sacrifices of liuing men, being the children of Slaues, or of their Enemies, painting all the Image with blood; which done, they eate the flesh. Returning Conquerors, they hold great Feasts, with dancing, leaping, singing drinking themselves drunke, and againe besmeare their Image with blood. If they were overcome, they sought by new Sacrifices to appease Chiappen. They demanded counsell of their Gods for their Marriages, and other affaires. For these consultations they obserued a kind of Lent two moneths, in which they lay not with women, nor ate Salt. They had Monasteries of Boyes and Girles, where they liued certaine yeeres. They corrected p^{er} like faults, as stealing, and killing, by cutting off the eares, and nose; hanging; and it hee were a Nobleman, by cutting off his haire. In gathering Emeralds they first vied certaine Charmes. They vsed to sacrifice Birds, and many other things.

Saint Martha standeth about fifty leagues from Carthagen, at the foot of certaine Hills, alway crowned with Snow. The Indians here are very valourous, and vse poysoned Arrows. They make Bread of Iucca, a root as bigge as a mans arme, or legge, the nyce whereof is poyson in the Islands, and therefore they presse it between two stones : but in the firme Land they drinke it rawe; and both here and there sodden, they vse it for Vineger; and being sodden till it be very thicke, for Honey. This Bread is their Insani, not so good as that of Maiz. I haue seene a Plant of this herbe growing in Master Gerards Garden, the Picture whereof he hath expressed in his Herball. The people are abominable Sodomites, a badge whereof they ware about their neckes; a Chaine, with the resemblance of two men committing this villany. In Gayra the Sodomites were attired like women, others were shauen like Friars. They had women which preferred their Virginitie: these added themselves to hunting, with Bow and Arrows, alone: they might lawfully kill any that sought to corrupt them. These people were Canibals, and eate mans flesh, fresh and powdered: the young Boyes which they tooke they gelded, to make them faster for their Tables, as we doe Capons. They set vp the heads of those they killed, at their Gates for a memoriall, and wore their teeth about their neckes for a brauery. They worship the Sun and Moone, and burne thereto Perfumes of Herbs, and Gold, and Emeralds. They sacrifice slaues.

Venezuela is so called, because it is built vpon a plaine Rocke, in the waters of a Lake. The women of this Country paint their breasts and armes: all the rest of their bodie is naked, except their priuie parts. The Maids are known by their colour, and greatneise of their gurdle. The Men carrie their members in a shell. There are many filthy Sodomites. They pray to Idols, and to the Deuill, whom they paint in such forme as he appeareth to them. They paint their bodies in this sort: Hee that hath killed one Enemy in the Warres, paints one of his armes; the second time, his brest; and when he hath killed a third, hee painteth a line from his eyes to his eares: and this is his Knighthood. Their Priests are their Physicians, who being sent for by a sicke man, aske the Patient, if he beleue that they can helpe him; and then lay their hands vpon the place where they say their paines are: if he recouer not, they put the fault in him or in their Gods. They lament their dead Lords in Songs in the night time, made of their prayes: that done, they roast them at a fire, and beating them to powder, drinke them in Wine, making their bowels their Lords Sepulchres. In Zonpacy they bury their Lords with much Gold, Jewels, and Pearles, and set vpon the Graue foure sticks in a square, within which they hang his weapons, and many Viands to eate.

From the Cape Vela, the space of 2000. miles along the Coast, is the fishing for Pearles, discovered by Christopher Columbus, in the yeere 1498. which layed all along this Coast. In Carriana they receiued the Spaniards with great ioy; and for Pinnes, Needles, Bels, Glasses, and such trifles, gaue them many strings of Pearles: for foure Pinnes they would giue a Pearcocke; for two, a Pheasant; for one, a Turtle Doue. And when they asked, What they should doe with this new Merchandize of Pins and Needles, seeing they were naked? they shewed them the vse to picke their teeth, and to picke out thornes in their feete. These Indians had Rings of Gold, and Jewels made with Pearles, after the formes of Birds, Fishes, and Beasts: They had also the Touchstone for their Metall, and weights to weigh the same, things not else-where found in India. They make their teeth white with an herbe, which all the day they chew in their moutnes.

Their Mat-
riages.

Cumana is a Prouince named of a Riuer, called Cumana; ^b where certayne Franciscans, Anno 1516. built them a Monasterie, and the Spaniards were very diligent in the fishing for Pearles. About ^c that time three Dominicans went fourescore miles West from thence to preach the Gospell, and were eaten of the Indians, which hindered not, but others of the same order founded them a Monasterie in Ciribici, neere Maracabua. Both these Orders tooke paines with the Indians to cosset them, and taught their children to write and read and to answere at Masse, and the Spaniards were so respected, that they might safely walke alone through all the Country: but after two yeeres and a halfe, the Indians, whether for their too much employment in the Pearle-fishing, or for other cause, rebelled, and killed a hundred Spaniards, slue the Friers, one of which was then saying Masse, and as many Indians as they found with them; which the Spaniards of Domingo loone after reuenged.

The losse of Cumana hindered their Trade for Pearles at Cubagua, and therefore the King sent James Caxillon to subdue them by force: which hee did, and began the Plantation of New Caliz, for the Spaniards to inhabit there. Cubagua was called by Columbus, the Finder, the Island of Pearles, situate in twelue degrees and a halfe of Northerly Latitude, and contains twelue miles in circuit. This little Island is exceeding great in commoditie, that accreth with those Pearles, which hath amounted to diuers millions of gold. They fetch their Wood from Margarita, an Island foure miles to the North; and their Water from Cumana, which is two and twentie miles thence: they haue a Spring of medicinall Water there in the Island. The Sea there, at certaine times of the yeere, is very red, which those Pearle-oysters by some naturall purgation are said to cause. There are Fishes, or Sea-monsters, which from the middle vpwards resemble men, with Beards, Haire, and Armes. The people of Cumana goe naked, couering only their shame. At Feasts and Dances they paint themselves, or else anoint themselves with a certaine Gumme, in which they stick Feathers of many colours. They cut their haire about the Eares, and will not suffer it to grow on any places of their bodies, esteeming a bearded man a Beast: They take great paines to make their teeth blacke, and account them women, which haue them white. They blacke them with the powder of the leaues of a certaine Tree called Gay; these leaues they chew, after they are nineteene yeeres old; they mixe that powder with another of a kinde of Wood, and with Chalke of white shels burned, in manner as the Easterne Indians vie their Betele and Arecce, with Chalke of Oysters: and this mixture they beate continually in their mouths still chewing it; that their teeth are as blacke as coales, and so continue to their death. They keepe it in Baskets and Boxes, and sell it in the markets to some, which come farre for it, for Gold, Slaues, Corton, and other Merchandize. This keepeth them from paine and rotting of the teeth. The Maides goe naked, only they bind certain bands hard about their knees to make their hips and thighs seeme thicke, which they esteeme no small beautie. The married Women liue honestly, or else their husbands will diuorce them. The chiefe men haue as many Wiues as they will; and if any stranger come to lodge in one of their houses, they make the fairest his Bed-fellow: These also shut vp their Daughters two yeeres before they marrie them, all which time they goe not forth, nor cut their haire: After which, there is made a great feast, and very many bidden, which bring their varietie of cheere, & alib wood to make the new Spouse a house: A man cuts off the Bridegroomes haire before, and a woman the Brides, and then they eate and drinke, with much excesse, till night. This is the lawfull wife, and the other which they marry afterwards obey This. They giue their Spouses to be deuoured to their Pieces, (so they call their Priests) which theire reuerend Fathers account their Preminence and Prerogatiue; the Husbands, their honour; the Wiues their warrant.

The men and women wear Collars, Bracelets, Pendants, and some Crownes of Gold and Pearles: the Men wear Rings in their Notes, & the Women Brooches on their breast, whereby at first sight the sexe is discerned. The Women Shoot, Runne, Leape, Swim, as well as the Men: their paines of trauell are small: they till the Land, and looke to the house, whiles the the men Hunt and Fift. They are high minded, treacherous, and thirstie of reuenge: Their chiefe weapons are poisoned Arrowes, which they prepare with the blood of Snakes, and other mixtures. All of both sexes, from their infancy, learne to shoot. Their meat is whatsoever hath life, as Horse-leeches, Bats, Grasshoppers, Spiders, Bees, Lice, Wormes, raw, sodden, fried: and yet their Countrey is replenished with good Fruits, Fish, and Fleth. This Diet (or, as some say, their Water) causeth spots in their eyes, which dimme their sight. They haue as strange a Fence or hedge for their Gardens and possessions, namely, a threed of Cotton, or Baxuco, as they call it, as high as a mans Girdle; and it is accounted a great sinne to goe ouer or vnder the same, and he which breakes it (they certainly beleue) shall presently die. So much safer is their threed women with this imagination, then all our stone-walls.

The Cumanois are much addicted to Hunting, wherein they are very expert, and kill Lyons, Tygres, Hogs, and all other four-footed Beasts, with Bowes, Nets, Snares. They take one Beast, which they call Capa, that hath the soles of his feet like a French shoe, narrow behinde, broad and round before. Another, called Aranara, which for the Phynomie and subtiltie seemes to be a kinde of Ape: it hath mouth, hands, and feet, like a man; a goodly countenance, bearded like a Goat. They goe in Heards, they bellow loud, runne vp Trees like Cats, auoid the Huntsmans Arrow, and call it with cleerly delusive againe at himselfe. Another Beast hath a long snout, and feedeth on Ants, putting his tongue into a hollow Tree, or rather place where the Ants are and as many of them as come thereon, hee licks in. The Friers brought vp one, till the stinke thereof caused them to kill it, snouted like a Foxe, rough-haired, which voided in the excrements long and slender Serpents, which presently dyed. This Beast stinking while he liued, and worse now dead, yet was good food to the Indians. They haue one which will counterfeit the voice of a crying child, and so cause some to come forth, and then deuoure them. The like is written of the Hyena, That shee will call the Shepherds by their names, and then destroy them when they come forth.

They haue Parrots as bigge as Ravens, with bills like Hawkes, liuing on the prey, and smelling like Muske: Great Bats, one of which was a Physician, by strange accident, to a seruant of the Friers: which being sicke of a Pleurisie, was giuen ouer for dead, because they could not raise a veine wherein to let him blood; in the night a Bat (after the custome of that Creature) bit and sucked him, whereby so much blood issued, that the sicke man recovered; which the Friers counted for a miracle. They haue three sorts of Bees, one whereof is little and blacke, and makes honey in the Trees, without Waxe. Their Spiders are greater then ours, of diuers colours, and weaue such strong Cobwebs, that they aske good strength to breake them. There are Salamanders as bigge as a mans head: they cackle much like a Pullet; their biting is deadly. I might here hold you too long in viewing their strange Creatures: we will now returne to their three stranger customes.

§. II.

Of their vices and superstitions.

They take great pleasure in two things, Dancing and Drinking, in which they will spend eache dayes together, especially at the Mariages, or Coronation of their Kings. Many Gallants will then meet together, diuerfly drest, some with crownes and Feathers, some with shels about their legges in stead of bels, to make a noyse: some other wise, all painted with twenty colours & figures: he that goes worst, seemes best: taking one another by the hand, they dance in a ring, some backwards, some forwards, with a world of varietie; grinning, singing, crying, counterfetting the Deafe, Lame, Blind, Fishing, Weauing, telling of Stories; and this continueth sixe houres, and then they eate and drinke: before, he which danced most, now he which drinke most, is the most compleate and accomplished Gallant: and now beyond counterfetting, Drunkenesse lets them together in brauing, swaggering, quarrelling: others play the Swine, lpe vp the former, to make way for other liquor: and they adde herunto the fume of an Herbe, which hath the like drunken effect; it seemeth to be Tobacco.

This perhaps will not seeme strange to some, seeing these Savage customes of drinking, dancing, smoking, swaggering, so common with vs in these dayes: It might indeed seeme strange to our forefathers, if their more ciuill, more sacred ghosts, might returne and take view of their degenerating posteritie: but now hee must be a stranger in many companies, that will not estrange himselfe from ciuilitie, from humanitie, from Christianity, from God, to become of a Man, a Beast; of an Englishman, a Sausage Indian; of a Christian, a Fiend, &c. that he hath a body, in the diversified pollutions whereof, he hath advantage, and takes it to out-swagger the Duell. These are the Gull-gallants of our dayes, to whom I could wish, that either their Progenitors had bene some Cumanian Indians, or that they would leave this usurped Gallantry to those true owners, and resume spirits truly English.

Their gods.

The Gods of the Cumanians are the Sun and Moone, which are taken for man and wife, and for the greatest Gods. They have great feare of the Sunne, when it Thunders or Lightens, saying that he is angry with them. They fast when there is any Eclipse, especially the women: for the married women plucke their haire, and scratch their faces with their nails: the Maids thrust sharpe fish-bones into their armes, and draw blood. When the Moone is at full, they thinke it is wounded by the Sunne, for some indignation he hath conceived against her. When any Comet appeareth, they make a great noise with Drums & hallowing, thinking so to scarse it away, or to consume it, beleueing that those Comets portend some evils.

Among their many Idols and figures, which they honour as Gods, they have one like a Saint Andrews Crosse, which they thought preferred them from night-spirits; and they hanged it on their new-borne children.

Their Priests.

They call their Priests Piaces; whose Maiden-head-rite we before mentioned. They are their Physicians and Magicians. They cure with roots and hearbs, raw, sod, and pounded with the fat of Birds, Fishes, and Beasts; with wood and other things vnkowne to the people, with abstruse and darke words which themselves vnderstand not. They sucke and lick the place where the paine is, to draw out the euill humours. And if the paine encreaseth, they say that the Patients are possessed with euill Spirits: and then rub their bodies all ouer with their hands, vning certaine words of Coniuration or Charmes, sucking after that very hard; giuing them to vnderstand, that by that meanes, they call out the euill spirits. Presently they take a piece of wood, the vertue whereof none else knoweth but the Piaces, and there with rub their mouthes and throats, so long till they cast all that is in their bellies, vomiting sometimes blood with the force thereof; the Piaces in the meane time stamping, knocking, calling, and gesturing: after two houres there comes from him a thicke slegme, and in the midst thereof a blacke hard bullet, which those of the house carry and cast into the fields, saying, Let the Duell goe thither. If the sicke man recouer, his goods die and become the Priests; if he die, they say his time was come. The Piaces is their Oracle, with whom they consult, whether they shall haue warre, what shall be the issue thereof, whether the yeere will be plentifull, They forewarne them of Eclipses, and aduersise of Comets. The Spaniards demanded in their necessitie, whether any ships would come shortly? And they answered, that on such a day a Caruell would come with so many men, and such prouision and Merchandise; which accordingly came to passe.

Their Diuinations.

They call vpon the Duell in this manner: the Piaces entereth into a Cave, or secret place, in a darke night, and carries with him certaine courageous youths, that may moue questions without feare. He sits on a bench, and they stand on their feet, he cryeth, calleth, singeth Verses, foundeth shells: and they with a heauy accent say many times Prorouru, Prorouru: if the Duell comes not, all this Black-Sandus is renewed with grievous sighs and much perplexity. When he commeth (which is knowne by the noise) hee sounds lowder, and suddenly falls downe, by visages and varied gesture, shewing that the duell is entred. Then one of those his Associates demandeth what him pleaseth. The Friers went one day with their coniuering and coniuered holies, the Crosse, Stole, Holy-water: and when the Piaces was in that distraction, cast a part of the stole on him, crossing and coniuering in Latine, and he answered them in his native language much to the purpose: at last they demanded whether the soules of the Indians went? He answered to Hell.

These Piaces by their Physick and diuining grow rich: they goe to Feasts, and sit by themselves apart, and drinke themselves drunke, and say, The more they drinke, the better they can Diuine. They learne these Arts when they are children, and are inclosed in the woods two yeares, all that time eating nothing that had blood, see no women, nor their owne parents, come not out of their Caves or Cels: and the Piaces, their Masters, goe to them by night, to teach them. When this time of their solitary discipline is past, they obtaine a testimoniall thereof, and begin to profess in practice of Physick and Diuination. Let vs bury the Cumanians, and then we haue done.

Their Burials.

Being dead, they sing their praises, and bury them in their houses, or dry them at the fire and hang them vp. At the yeeres end (if he were a great man) they renew the lamentation, and after many other ceremonies, burne the bones, and giue to his best beloved wife his skull to keepe for a Relique. They beleue that the Soule is immortall, but that it eateth and drinketh about in the fields where it goeth, and that it is the Echo which answereth when one calleth.

Of Trinidad and Paria.

IN the yeere 1497. (some adde a yeere more) Christopher Columbus seeking new Discoveries, after the suffering of vnusufferable heats and calmes at Sea (wherby the hoopes of his vessels brake, and the fresh-water not able further to endure the hot indignation of that now-beleued Burning-Zone, fled out of those close prisons, into the lap of that Father of waters, the Ocean, for refuge) he came at last to Trinidad. The first Land he encountered, he called by that name; either for deuotion, now that his other hopes were dried vp with the heat, or washed into the Sea by the violent showres above-board, and the lesse (but not lesse dangerous) which flowed from his Caske within: or else for the three Mountaines which he there deseried. Once, this discovery of Land so rauihed his spirit, by the unexpected deliuey from danger, as easily carried his impotent thoughts into a double error, the one in placing earthly Paradise in this Iland, (to which opinion, for the excellency of the Tobacco there found, hee should happily haue the same subscriptions of many Humourists, to whom that fume becomes a fooles Paradise, which with their braines, and all, passeth away in smoke) the other was, that the Earth was not round like a Ball, but like a Peare, the vpper swelling whereof, he esteemed these parts, Hence Columbus sailed to Paria, and found out the Pearle-fishing, of which Petrus Alphonsus a little after made great commodity by trade with the Sauesages. He was assailed with eigheteen Canoes of Canibals, one of which he tooke with one Caniball, and a bound Captiue, who with teares shewed them that they had eaten sixe of his fellowes, and the next day he must haue gone to pot too: to him they gaue power ouer his Laylor, who with his owne club killed him, still laying on when his braines and guts came forth and testified that hee needed not further feare him.

In Haria or Paria, they found plenty of salt, which the Fore-man in Natures shop, and her chiefe worke-man, the Sunne, turned and kernald from water into salt: his worke-houise for this businesse, was a large plaine by the waters-side. Here the Sepulchres of their Kings and great men seemed not lesse remarkable: they laid the body on a kinde of hurdle or gridiron of wood, vnder which they kindled a gentle fire, whereby keeping the skinned whole, they by little and little consumed the flesh. These dried carcases they held in great reuerence, and honoured for their household Gods. In the yeere 1499. Vincent Pinzon discovered Cape Saint Augustine, and sailed along the coast from thence to Paria.

But why stand we here peddling on the coast for Pearles, Salt, and Tobacco? Let vs rouze vp higher spirits, and follow our English guides for Guiana. Onely let me first haue leave to mention concerning the Superstitions of these parts Northward from Guiana, what it pleased Sir Walter Raleigh to impart vnto mee from the Relation of a very understanding man of that Country, whom he vsed for an interpreter. These people worship the Sunne, whom they imagine (as the fabulous Grecians tell of his Chariot and horses, wherewith yong Phaeton sometimes set the World on fire) to be drawne into a Chariot by Tigres, which are the most ferie, and fierce beasts, amongst them. In honour therefore of the Sunne, and for sustenance of his Chariot-beasts, they carefully wath the carcases of their dead, and lay them forth in the night, for repast vnto the Tigres, wearied with their long and late idorney in the day. For so they beleue, that after Sun-set these beasts are to this end dismissed from their labour; and that vicissitude, wherein Dauid obserueth the wisdom of diuine prouidence (that when it is night, the wild beasts goe forth to seek their prey, which when the Sunne ariseth and calleth men forth of their houses to labour, returne to their Deu) is blindly by them applied to this their superstition. They likewise haue a Tradition amongst them, that their Ancestors in times past neglecting thus to prepare the corpses of such as died, for the Tigres diet, or not wathing them so neatly as behoued, the Tigres made hereof a complaint to the Sunne, as not able to doe his worke, if not allowed their wonted cates: whereupon the Sun sent one amongst them, brandishing a terrible ferie sword, and so dreadfully assaulting the places of their habitations, and the foyle couered with long grasse, that all fell on fire, and an hundred thousand of the Inhabitants were destroyed: a terrible warning hereafter to be more diligent in these Tigre-deuotions, which accordingly they performe to this day.

Of Guiana, and the Neighbouring Nations on the Coast and within the Land.

§. I.

Discoverie of Guiana by Sir WALTER RALEIGH.

a Sir Walter
veth of Guiana.

In the yeere 1595. ^a Sir Walter Raleigh having before received Intelligence of this rich and mighty Empire, set forth for the Discoverie, and on the two and twentieth of March anchored at Point Curiapan in Trinidad, and searched that Iland, which he found plentifull. Hee tooke the Citie of Saint Ioseph, and therein Antonie Berreo the Spanish Gouverneur: Leaving his ships, hee went with an hundred men in Boats, and a little Galley, and with some Indian Pylots passed along that admirable confluence of Rivers (as by the Corps du Guard) unto Orenoque, as great a Commander of Rivers, as the Emperour of Guiana of Soldiers. And although wee have before mentioned somewhat thereof, yet this, his peculiar place, requireth some further consideration. This River Orenoque or Baraquan (since, of this Discoverie, called Raleana) runneth from Quito in Peru on the West, it hath nine branches which fall out on the North side of his owne maine mouth, on the South side seven. Thus many Armes hath this Giant-like streame to be his Purveyers, which are alway filling his never-filled mouth (seeming by this their naturall officiousnesse incorporate thereunto, and to be but wider gappings of the same spacious iawes) with many Ilands and broken grounds, as it were for many morfels and crummes in his greedy Chaps, still opening for more, though he cannot, even in Winter, when his throat is glibbest, altogether swallow these: yea these force him, for feare of choking, to yawne his widest, and to vomit out, betweene these cleaving morfels, into the Oceans lap, so many streames, and (so farre is it from the Northerne and Southerne extremes) three hundred miles distant. The Inhabitants on the Northerne branches are the Tinitinas, a goodly and valiant people, which have the most manly speech, and most delicate (saith Sir Walter) that ever I heard, of what Nation so ever. In the Summer they have houses on the ground, as in other places: In the Winter they dwell vpon the trees, ^b where they build very artificiall Townes and Villages: for betwene May and September the River of Orenoque riseth thirtie foot vpright, and then are those Ilands overflowne twenty foot high, except in some few raised grounds in the middle. This waterflood (when the clouds are so prodigall of more then the Rivers store-houise can hold, whereby they become violent intruders and inrochers vpon the Land) and not the violence of cold, giveth this time the Title of Winter. These Tinitinas neuer eate of any thing that is set or sowne; Natures nurrlings, that neither at home nor abroad, will be beholden to the Arte or Labour of Husbandry. They vie the tops of Palmitos for bread, and kill Deere, Fish, and Porke, for the rest of their sustenance. They which dwell vpon the branches of Orenoque, called Capnri and Macureo, are for the most part Carpenters of Canoes, which they sell into Guiana for gold, and into Trinidad for Tobacco, in the excessive taking whereof, they exceed all Nations. When a Commander dieth, they vie great lamentation, and when they thinke the flesh of their bodies is putrified and fallen from the bones, they take vp the carkasse againe, and hang it vp in the house, where he had dwelt, decking his skull with feathers of all colours, and hanging his gold-plates about the bones of his arms, thighs, and legs. The Arumats which dwell on the South of Orenoque, beat the bones of their Lords into powder, which their wives and friends drinke.

As they passed along these Rreames, their eyes were entertained with a Pageant of Shewers, wherein Nature was the onely Actor; here the Deere came downe feeding by the waters side, as if they had desired acquaintance with these new-come guests: there, the Birds in vnspokeable varietie of kinds and colours, rendering their service to the eye and eare: the Lands either in large plaines of many miles, bearing their beautifull bosomes, adorned with Floras embroidery of vnknown Flowres and Plants, and prostrating themselves to the eye, that they might be seene; or else lifting vp their elues in Hills, knitting their furrowed brows, and frowning out their goggle eyes to watch their treasure, which they keepe imprisoned in their stony walls; and now, to see these strangers: the Waters (as the Graces) dancing with mutuall and manifold embracings of diuers streames, attended with plenty of Fowle and Fish; both Land and Water feasting varietie of senses with varietie of objects: onely the the Crocodile (a creature which seemeth Vassill, now to the land, now to the Water, but to make prey on both) well-nigh marred the Play, and turned this Comedie into a Tragedie, euen in their sight, feasting himselfe with a Negro of their company.

One Iuell passed hence to Cumana, an hundred and twenty leagues to the North where-in dwell the Sayma, the Ajwari, the Wikipi and the Arorai, a people as blacke as Negroes, * but with smooth haire. Their poisoned Arrowes, like cruell Executioners, doe not onely kill, but with vncouth torments make death to be, as the last, so the least of their fury; especially if men drinke after they are wounded.

At the Port of Morequito they anchored, and the King being an hundred and ten yeeres old, came afoot fourteene miles to see them, and returned the same day. They brought them store of fruits, and a sort of Paraquitos, no bigger then Wrens, and an ^b Armadilla, which seemeth to be all barred ouer with small plates, somewhat like to a Rhinoceros, with a white horne growing in his hinder-parts, as big as a great hunting horne, which they vse to winde in stead of a Trumpet. They atter ate this beast. Monardus ^c saith, it is in bigneffe and snout like a Pigge, but vnder the earth as a Moule, and is thought to liue on earth.

They passed further, till they came in sight of those strange ouer-falls of Caroli, of which there appeared ten or twelue in sight, euery one as high ouer the other as a Church-Tower. They had sight at Winicapora of a Mountaine of Cristall, which appeared a farre off like a white Church-Tower, of an exceeding height. There falleth ouer it a mighty Riuer, which toucheth no part of the side of the Mountain, but rushing ouer the top, falleth to the ground with so terrible noise, as if a thousand great bells were knocked one against another. No maruell of these roaring out-cries, if we consider that double penalty of Sense and Losse, which this Riuer seemeth to sustaine, the one in that dreadfull downfall, bruising and breaking his vaied streames into drops, and making it foming and senselesse with this falling sicknesse; the other in leauing behinde his Cristall purchase, further enriched with Diamonds and other Jewels, which euen now hee embraced in his waterie armes, but himselfe (such is the course and curse of couetousnesse) will not suffer himselfe to enioy.

Now for the Moniters of Men: there are said to be not seene by our men, but reported by the Sauages and other an Amazonian Nation further South: which Gomara thinkes to bee ^d but the wiues of some Indians (a thing common, as you have euen now read) shooting and following the warres, no lesse then their husbands: Once, about Iucatan, about Plata, about the Riuer, called of this supposition, Amazones: about Monomotapa in Africa; our Age hath told, but no man hath seene this Unimammian Nation. Yet here they speake not of fearing of the breast: and what need they, if there bee such, seeing the women are so good Archers in other places, their breasts notwithstanding? Again, ^e they tell of men with mouthes in their breasts, and eyes in their shoulders, called Choparemoi, and of the Guinians Euiapomous, very strong; and of others headed like Dogges, which liue all the day time in the Sea. These things are strange, yet I dare not esteeme them fabulous: onely (as not too prodigall of faith) I suspend, till some eye-intelligence of some of our parts haue testified the truth.

Relations and discoveries thereof by other Englishmen.

RANCIS SPARRY left in Guiana by Sir W. Raleigh 1595. hath also written of these parts; He relateth of a place called Comalaha, Southwards from Orenouque, where at certain times they sell women as at a faire. He saith, he bought eight, the eldest of which, was not eightene, for a Red-hafted Knife, which in England cost a halfe-peny: he gaue them to the Sauages. Hee was afterwards sent Prisoner into Spaine.

Anno 1604. Captaine Charles Leigh set saile from Woolwich on the one and twentieth of March for Guiana: May 10. he came in water thicke and white, the next day in fresh, and the day after, saw two Ilands in the mouth of Amazonas, accounting themselves fortie Leagues vp the Riuer. May 22. they were in the Riuer of Wiapogo, (which they called Caroleigh) in three degrees and halfe Northward from the Line. The people were ready to giue them entertainment. The Soyes and Capoyes offered them their owne houses, and gardens already planted, two of which he accepted with some gardens, vnder-taking to defend them against the Claribes and their other enemies. They desired him to send into England for some to teach them to pray, and gaue five pledge to be sent thither. He atter (intending for England) dyed aboard his ship of the Flux. They intoxicate the fish with a strong fenced-wood called Ayaw, whereby they easily take them on the top of the water. Their bread is Cassavi, of which chewed they also make drinke. They are much troubled with a Worme like a Flea (the Spaniards call it Niguas) which creeps into the flesh of their toes under the nailes, and multiply there with much multiplication of torment, except they use speedie prevention. One was so pestered with them, that for remedie, they were faine to hold his feet upwarde, and powre thereon melted Wax hot, which being cold they plucked off, and there with seven or eight hundred Niguas. The people are of modest countenance, naked, but would weare clothes if they had them. Humbly returned for England, and left there five and thirtie, which should have bin succoured if Disoord had suffered,

Rob. Harecours Voyage to Guiana.

Anno 1605. a ship was sent for supply: but the Mariners and Land-men quarrelling, these 10 were left on Land at Saint Lucia, an Island in twelve degrees of Northerly Latitude, to the number of threescore and seven, and most of them slaine * by the Islanders. These Indians go naked, have long blacke haire, their bodies painted red, with three strokes alof of red, from the eare to the eye. Eleuen of our men, after much miserie and famishment (which killed some of them in the way) got to Coro: and after good and bad enticement of fortunes with the Spaniards, some returned home. The Spaniards there (as John Nichol one of this companie testified) told them of a Vision of Christ on the Crosse appearing to our King, and reuoking him from his error: at the sight whereof, three of our Bishops fell into a trance, and so continued three dayes, after which they became Catholikes and preached: and the King had sent to the Pope for learned men to perfect this Conuersion. These were the Spanish tricks 20 with faithlesse tales to peruert these men to their faith. The Mariners gaue names to the places which they left according to their conceits of these men, Rogues Bay, Cape Knaue, Riuier of Kalsals. They came as farre as Comana or Cumana, where they eblieted the weather hot till noone, and then a coole breeze and thunder without raine. by windes and current they were detained from Wiapogo, which they sought. A Fleming there told them fabulous rumours of Warres with Spaine.

Another ship of Amsterdam (to disgrace our men) told the Indians of Wiapoco, that they came to inhabit there and to oppresse them, as the Spaniards did. See what gaue can doe without godlinesse. A ship of Middleburgh came thither with Negroes to sell: thither came also a ship of Saint Malas. The Indians of these parts (as Wilson reporteth) choose their Cap- 30 taines at their drunken Feasts in this sort: They let the nominated person in the midst with his hands lifted ouer his head, making Orations to him to bee valiant: after which, they whip him with a whip that fetcheth bloud at euery stroke, for tryall of his courage, he neuer mouing thereat. They haue commerce with the Deuill. For they told vs of three ships in the Riuer of Amazons, and that One two moneths after would visit vs. They call this Deuill b. Peys, with whom the men haue often conference, the women neuer that they could perceiue: they suffer not meane-while a childe in the house. When any bee sicke they thus consult of their recouerie, and if their Oracle answer death, they will giue two or three 40 moneths, or finde them so long viuals at home. The Iays are proud, ingenious, giuen to flouting. The Arwakos of better carriage. The Saspayes craftie. The two former hate the Spaniards as much as the Caribes. Their houses haue doores at each end: the men keepe at one end, the women at the other: they are like Barnes, but longer; some hundred and fiftie paces long, and twentie broad, an hundred of them keepe together in one. No raine cometh in, notwithstanding that store which falleth in April, May, Iune, and most of Iuly. They paint them when they goe to feasts. Against the time of trauell, the women haue as roomes apart, whereto they goe alone, and are deliuered without helpe: which done, these call her husband and deliuer it to him, who presently washeth it in a pot of water, and paints it with sundry colours. I could not heare (saith Wilson) the woman so much as grone all the time of her trauell. When one dyes, they make great moane ten or twelue dayes to- 50 gether, and sometimes longer. Here are store of Deere, Hares, Conies, Hogs, Monkeyes, Leopards, Lyons, Porke-pines, Parrots as big as Hennes, blue and red, very beautiful, &c. He returned with the rest in a ship of Amsterdam, the Indians being loth to part with them. They often inquired of Sir Walter Raleigh, and one came from Orenoque to ake of him, al- ledging his promise of returne.

The like remembrances of him are mentioned by Master Harecours in his late published Voyage to Guiana. This worthy Gentleman, An. 1608. with Gentlemen and others, to the number of 97. set forth for Wiapoco. The ninth of May they fell into the Current of that great and famous Riuer of Amazones, of which they drunke fresh and good, being 30. leagues from Land: the tenth day, the water became muddy, whitish and thicke: the eleventh day they made Land, and their Pinnace being left dry vpon the Ebbe, by the next flood coming on was almost spoyled: Thence they stood along the Coast to Wiapoco, whither they came 60 came, May the seventeenth, and settled themselves at Caripo. Hee tooke possession in his Maiesties name (as Captaine Leigh had also done) of this spacious Country of Guiana, bounded on the North with Orenoque and the Sea, on the East and South, with the River of Amazons, on the West, with the Mountaines of Peru. The Charibes are the Ancient Inhabitants, the Other later Inrochers. There is no settled gouernment amongst them, only they acknowledge a superiority which they will obey as long as they please. They commonly punish Murther & Adulterie by death, which are the only offences punished amongst them: and certaine persons are appointed to execute those punishments. The better sort haue two or three wives or more, the rest but one: they are very ieaalous, and if they take them in Adulterie, cause their braines to be beaten out. Their wives, especially the elders, are as their seruants, and he which hath most, is the greatest man.

Their account of time is by Moones, or dayes: their numbring is to ten, and then say, ten and one, &c. They also keepe accounts, by bundles of sticke, containing so many, as dayes are agreed on, of which they take away, every day one. They haue a certaine obseruance of the Sunne and Moone, supposing them to be aloue: but as farre as he could perceiue, vsed neither Sacrifice nor adoration to any thing. At the death of any great man, they make a solemne Feast, their chiefest provision being their strongest drinke, called m Parrabow, and as long as this drinke lasteth, they continue their Feast, with dancing, singing, and excessive drinking, accounting the greatest Drunkard the bravest man: during which drunken m temeritie, some woman (being nearest of kinne to the dead partie) stands by and cries extremely. Their Priests or Sooth-sayers (he calls them Pecaios) haue conference with the Deuill, whom they terme Mutipa, but feare him much, and say hee is naught: hee will often beate them blacke and blue. They beleue that the good Indians when they die, goe to Campo or Heauen, the bad to Soy, downwards. When a chiefe man dies, if hee haue a Captiue they slay him; if not, then one of his seruants, to attend him the other World.

m It is like
March Beete

The qualitie of the Land is diuers: by the Sea-side low, and would be violently hot, if a fresh Easterly breeze did not coole it with a vehement breath in the heate of the day: the Mountaines are colder, the middle sort most temperate. Profit may here take pleasure, neither need pleasure abandon profit. The particulars are by this and other our Authors related; I hunt after Rarities to present you. Such is the fish Castorina, which hath in each eye two sights, and as it swimmeth, it beares the lower sights within the water, and the other above: the ribs and backe resemble those parts in a man, save that it is little bigger, but much daintier then a Smelt. Besides the Packero, or small Swine with the Naill in the backe, is another called Paingo, as large as ours in England. The Sea-cow or Manatin eats like Beefe, and will take Salt, and serue to victuall ships, it yeelds also an excellent Oyle, and the hide will make Buffe. There are infinite store of them. The Pina for delicacie exceedeth, a fruit tasting like Strawberries, Claret-wine, and Sugar. What commodity Tobacco and Sugars in those parts may yeeld is incredible, especially in this smokie humour of the one sexe, and that daintier of the other. Their Dyes, Gummes, and other commodities I omit. Of Gold and other Metals they haue good testimony.

The Marashawaccas are a Nation of Charibes, vp high within Land, hauing great eares beyond credit: they haue an Idoll of stone which they worship as their God, in a house erected purposely to it, which they keepe verie cleane. It is fashioned like a man sitting vpon his heeles, holding open his knees, and resting his elbowes vpon them, holding vp his hands with the palmes forwards, and gaping with his mouth wide open.

Captaine Michael Harcourt was left Commandet of the Countrey for his Brother, who continued the possession three yeeres, in all which space, of thirtie persons died but sixe, and some of them by casualtie. Amongst the East Indian Plants is mentioned one called Sanida: the like they found here, much like vnto Rose trees, about halfe a yard high; which if they were touched, or a leafe cut from them, would presently shrinke and close vp themselves, and hang as they were dead and withered: within halfe a quarter of an houre by degrees againe opening. Areminta the Cacique of Moreliegoro had a rough skin like to Buffe-leather, of which kind there be many in those parts. They returned by Cape Brea, which is so called of the Pitch there gotten in the Earth, whereof there is such abundance that all places of this our World may be stored thence: it is excellent for trimming of shippes for those hote Countries, not melting in the Sunne.

Relations of these and the adjoining Countries by the Spaniards.

IT were a hard taske to muster all that World of Rivers, and names of Nations in the parts neere Guiana, which they that will, may finde in Sir Walter and Master Keymis, and Master Harcourt their owne Relations. As for Guiana, this Sir Walter hath written. It is directly East from Petu towards the Sea, and lyeth vnder the Equinoctiall: it hath more abundance of Gold then any part of Peru, and as many or moe great Cities. It bath the same Lawes, Government and Religion; and Manoa, the Imperiall Citie of Guiana (which some Spaniards haue seene, and they call it El Dorado) for the greatnesse, riches, and situation, farre exceedeth any of the World, at least so much of it as the Spaniards know. It is founded vpon a Lake of Salt-water, two hundred leagues long, like vnto the Caspian Sea. The Emperour of Guiana is descended from the Inga, the magnificent Princes of Peru. For when Francis Pizarro had conquered Peru, and slaine Atabalpa the King; one of his younger brethren fled from thence, and took with him many thousands of those Souldiers of the Empire, called Oreiones, with whom and other his followers, he vanquished all that tract which is between the great Riuer of Orenoque, and Amazonas.

Diego Orda, who was one of the Captaines of Cortes, in the conquest of Mexico, in the yeere 1531. (thus saith Gomara, and that he perished at Sea; others with more probability, say it was a few yeeres after the conquest of Peru) made search for Guiana, but lost himselfe, being slaine in a mutinie. Before this, his prouision of Powder was fired, and one Iuan Martinez, which had the charge thereof, was therefore condemned to bee executed. But at the Souldiers request, his punishment was altered, and hee let in a Canoe alone without victuall, and forturned loose into the Riuer. Certaine Guianians met him, and hauing neuer seene man of that colour, they carried him into the Land to be wondred at; and so from Towne to Towne, till hee came to the great Citie of Manoa, the seat and residence of Inga the Emperour. Hee no sooner saw him, but he knew him to be a Christian (for the Spaniards not long before had conquered his brother) and caused him to be well entertained in his Palace. Hee liued seuen moneths in Manoa, but was not suffered to wander any whither into the Countrey; he was also brought thither, all the way blind-fold, led by the Indians, vntill hee came at Manoa. He entred the Citie at noone, and trauelled all that day till night, and the next, from the rising till the setting of the Sunne; thorow the Citie, ere hee came to the Palace of Inga. After seuen moneths the Emperour put him to his choise, whether to stay or goe, and he with the Emperours licence departed. He sent with him many Guianians, all laden with as much Gold as they could carrie: but before hee entred Orenoque, the Orenoqueponis robbed him of all, but of two Bottels of Gold beads, which they had thought, had bene his drinke or meate. Thus escaped he to Trinidad, and died after at Saint Iuan de Puerto-rico, where, in his extremes, he vttered these things to his Confessor. He called the Citie Manoa El Dorado, the gilded or golden, because that at their drunken Solemnities (in which vno Nation vnder Heauen excels them) when the Emperour crowseth with any of his Commanders, they that pledge him, are stripped naked, and their bodies anointed with a kinde of white Balsamum, and then certaine seruants of the Emperour, hauing prepared Gold made into fine powder, blow it thorow hollow Canes, vpon their naked bodies, vntill they bee all shining: from the foot to the head; and in this sort they sit drinking, by twentyes and hundreds, and continue in drunkenesse, sometimes fixe or seuen dayes together. Vpon this sight, and for the abundance of Gold he saw in the Citie, the Images, in the Temples, the Plates, Armour, and Shields of Gold vsed in their Warres, he gaue the Citie that name.

Iuan of Castellanos reckoneth twentie severall Expeditions of some, or other Spaniards, for this Guianian Discovery with little effect, saue that diuers lost their liues therein. Anno 1543. Gonzalo Pizarro sent a Captaine named Orillana, from the borders of Peru, who with fifty men, were carried by the violent current of the Riuer, that they could not returne to Pizarro: hee descended not in Orenoque the Guianian Riuer, but in Maragnon, called of him Orillana: which Iosephus Acosta writeth, from the Relation of one of their Societies; who being a Boy, had bin in the Expedition of Pedro de Orsua for this Discovery, and had sailed the Riuer thorow, that in the middelt men can see nothing but the Skie (as before is said) and the Riuer, and that it is seuentie leagues broad, vnder the Equinoctiall. Martin Fernandez maketh it seuen degrees and a halfe to the North of the Line, and fifteen leagues broad, and the Sea of fresh water to be another Riuer of forty leagues breadth: others haue written otherwise, which varying proceedeth from that varietie of Armes or mouths of

- Orenoque or Raleana, and Marannon or Amezones which since haue bene better discouered, as Master Keymis, Master Melham and others employed in this action, haue found by experience. It is riseth in Quito. Orellana sayled in it fixe thousand miles. In all these parts, their greatest treasure is multitude of women and children. Topiawari made a heauie complaint, that whereas they were wont to haue ten or twelue wiues, now they had not above three or foure, by reason of the wars with the Epuremei their Enemies: whereas the Lords of the Epuremei had fifty or a hundred, and their war is more for women, then either for Gold or Dominion. After Orellana Pedro de Orsua was employed with fue hundred Souldiers for the conquest of the Amazons (as they called it) but for a beauenfull woman which he had with him was slaine by conspiracie of Lope de Aguirre which loued her, and Fernando de Guzman, whom they saluted King, &c. Vez. pag. 2. lib. 8. c. 14.
- Barro*, in the search for Guiana, tooke his Iourney from Nuevo Reyno de Granada, where he dwelt, with seuen hundred Horse, but travelling, he lost many of his company and Horse: at Amapaia the soyle is a low Marish, and the water issuing thorow the Bogs, is red and venemous, which poysoned the Horses, and infected the men: at noone the Sunne had made it more whole some for their vse.
- This new Kingdome of Granada is two hundred leagues within Land, Southward from Cartagena. It had that name, because the Capaine that discouered it, was of Granada in Spaine. The plenty of Emerals in these parts, hath made that Gemme of lesse worth.
- The next Prouince to this is called Popayan: in both which the Spaniards haue many Townes. And by the Riuer of Orenoque, both may be inuaded.
- All the parts, from the Golden Castle, and the Gulfe of Yraba to Paria, yeeld Caribes, or Canibals, which eate mans flesh, and geld children, to make them more fat and tender for their diet. And in all Inland parts neere Peru, and in the Hills called Andes, which some call Golden Castle, they little differ. Cleazar saith, That in the Valley of Anzerma, they keepe certaine Tablett amongit the Reeds, wherein they carue the Image of the Deuill in a terrible shape, also the figures of Cats, and other Idols which they worship. To them they pray for raine, or faire weather: they haue commerce with the Deuill, and obserue such Superstitions as he enioyneth them. They are great man-eaters. At the doores of their houses, they haue small Courts, wherein are their graues in deepe Vaults, opening to the East: in which they bury their great men with all their wealth. The Caribes are not far from them; they haue no Temple, nor Idoll. They haue conference with the Deuill. They marry with their Nieces and Sisters, and are man-eaters. They call the Deuill Xaxatama. They esteeme Virginittie little worth. In the Prouince of Arma, the Deuill doth often appeare to the Indians: in honour of whom, they sacrifice their Captiues taken in Warre, hanging them vp by the shoulders, and pulling out the hearts of some of them. In Paucora, they haue like Deuillish Deuotions, and their Priests are their Oracles.
- Before the house of the chiefe Lord was an Idoll as bigge as a man, with his face to the East, and his armes open. They sacrificed two Indians euery Tuesday, in this Prouince to the Deuill. In the Prouince of Pozo, in the houses of their Lords, they had many Idols in such resemblance, as the Deuill had assumed in his Apparitions. And in those Idols, he would also speake, and giue answers. In Cariapa they are extreme Drunkards: when any is sicke, they offer Sacrifices to the Deuill for his recovery. In Quimbaya is a Hill which casteth forth smoke: but a more Hellish smoke is their conference and commerce with the Deuill, like the former. In the Prouince of Cali they likewise conferre with the Deuill: they haue no Temples or Houses of Religion. They make deepe pits for Sepulchres of their great men, where their Armour, Wealth, and food is set about them. Their lust subiecteth the Neece and Sister to their Marriages. In Popayan they are man-eaters, as also in the forenamed Prouinces. They obserue the same Caninall and Deuillish Rites with the former, framing their Superstitions to the Deuils direction, in their mutuall Colloquies. They bury with their Lords some of his Wiues and Prouision. Some of them are great Wizards and Sorcerers. In Paito they talke also with the Deuill: a thing common to all these parts of the Indies. But let vs leaue these steepe and cold Hills, these men of the Deuill (whom they worship) and Deuils to men (whom they deuoure) and see if in the lower Countreys wee can find higher and nobler Spirits.

Of Brasil.

§. I.

The Discoverie and Relations thereof by MAFREYS. &c.

Si Guiana is bounded with those mighty Rivers of Orenoque and Maragnon, so Brasil extendeth it selfe North and South, betwene Maragnon and the River of Plata, or Silver, which there we have already shewed to be the greatest Rivers in the World. The Westerne borders are not so well discovered. The Easterne washed by the Sea. Mossam hath largely described the same, whose words Bartius, Maginus, and Gasper Eius have transcribed: the summe whereof Jarric and Boterus have inserted into their French and Italian Relations.

Petrus Alvarius Caprales, being sent by Emanuel, King of Portugal, in the yeere 1500, vnto the East-Indies, to avoid the calmes on the Guinneie shore, fetched a further compass West, and so discovered the Continent, which now, of that Red Wood there plentifully growing, is called Brasil, but by him was named, the Land of the Holy Crosse, because hee had there erected a Crosse with much ceremony; since vually named Brasil, of the store of Brasil-Wood there growing. This Brasil was soone after, by Americus Vesputius, at the charges of the said King, further discovered. The Region is pleasant and wholesome, the Hills and Valleys equally agreeing, in their vnequalnesse, the soyle fat and fertile; there are plenty of Sugar-Canes; a kind of Balme expressed out of the Herbe Copaiba, the Zabucals which yeild a kind of Nuts, growing in great hard cups, of taste like a Chestnut; the Amanas excellent in scent and taste; the Pacouete, a tree so tender, that it may bee cut with a knife a fadome high, the leaues two foot broad, seuen foot long, the fruit a foot long, like a Cucumber, called Pacous, thirtie or fortie together in clusters, neuer bearing fruit but once: the like is in the East-Indies, as Theuet our Authour affirmeth; and many other fruits which the Countrey naturally produceth; besides those, which our Europe hath communicated. Many sorts there are of Beasts, as a kind of Swine b which lue in both Elements; their fore-seet being short in proportion to the hinder, make them slow in running, and therefore being hunted, commit themselves quickly to the water. Anta, resembling a Mole, but somewhat lesse; slender-shoewed, the nether chap very long, like a Trumpet, with round eares and short tailes, hiding themselves in the day-time, and feeding in the night, the flesh tasteth like Beefe: there is also the Armadillo; the Tygre, which being hungry, is very hurtfull; being full, will flee from a Dogge: There is a deformed beast, of such slow pace, that in fiftene dayes it will scarce goe a stones cast. It liueth on the leaues of trees, on which it is two dayes in climbing, and as many in descending, neither thouts nor blowes forcing her to amend her pace. The Tamendous are as big as a Ramme, with long and sharpe snows, a tayle like a Squirrel, (twice as long as the body and hairy) where-under they hide themselves, will put out their tongue two foute (out of the mouth, as round as an Oyle-cruze) to gather plenty of Ants into their moutles, hauing scraped vp the places where they keep with their pawes. The Portugals haue there raised plenty of Horses and Sheepe.

The men worship no God at all, but are giuen to South-sayings. The men and women goe altogether naked, are flat-nosed, make themselves blacke with the fruit Genipap, wear their haire hanging from the hinder part of the head; not suffering it else-where to grow; in their nether lips wear long stones for a gallantry (which being remoued, they seeme deformed manner to haue a double mouth) they goe together by companies, with great silence the Wife going before her Husband, which (some say) is done for ielousie. They entertain and welcome Strangers at first with weeping and deepe sighes, pittying their tedious journey, and presently drie their eyes, hauing teares at command.

Women in trauell are deliuered without great difficultie, and presently goe about their household businesse, the Husband in her stead keepeth his bed, is visited of the neighbours, hath his broths made him, and iunkets sent to comfort him. They are ignorant of numbering and Letters: some Tradition they are said to haue touching Noe and the Flood. Vnder the same Roole (which is like a Boat with the Keele vpwards (lue many Families, they lye in Nets, or beds hanging about the ground (which is vsuall in a great part of the Indies) to avoid hurtfull creatures: they minde the day, and are not carefull for the morrow; easily communicate what they haue; are very patient of labour and hunger, fasting if they haue where- with with, from morning till night, and fasting other-whiles, when they want, three dayes together. In swimming they are miraculously skilfull, and will diue whole houres to search any thing vnder the water. They beleue not any reward or punishment after this life ended, but thinke that as men die, so they goe to the other World, maimed, wounded, sicke or whole: and therefore bury the bodies with a Net to lye in, and food for some dayes, thinking that they both sleepe and eate. They are excellent Archers, and what enemies they take in their warres, they feed well many dayes, and then kill and eate them for great Dainties. They dwell in Houses scattered and separated from each other; their Language is almost generally the same; they haue no Lawes nor Magistrates; the women call certaine things by one name, and the Men by another. They haue no vse of three Letters * in the Alphabet; L, F, R; a reason whereof some haue wittily giuen, because they haue no Law, Faith, nor Ruler. They are vnmindfull of good turnes, and too mindfull of iniuries: impotent of Lust and Rage, and in summe, more like beasts then men. Thus saie Maffius.

In the yeere 1503. Giuanni da Empoli, a Florentine, sayled thither with the Portugals, who reporteth the like of their nakednesse, irreligion, and of their man-eating, saying that they dry it in the smoke as we doe Bacon. The same doth Albericus Vesputius, report that he had seene amongst them, and that he had heard one of them boast that hee had in his time eaten three hundred men. He weighed the long stones, (which they vse to weare in 20 their faces, seuen in number) about sixteene ounces. He saith they liue an hundred and fiftie yeeres; and that their Women are out of measure luxurious; that they alway haue an Easterly wind, which tempereth their Aire.

Let vs in the next place heere such as haue liued in the Countrey; of which Lerius and Theuet, two Frenchmen, and Ioannes Stadium a Germane, haue written severall Treatises. But none hath more fully described them, then a Portugall Frier, & an Antonie Knijet our Countreiman.

More full Relations by STADIUS, LERIUS, and PETER CAARDEN.

In Ioannes Stadium in the yeere 1554. was Prisoner to the Toppin Imbas, and because he serued the Portugals, should haue bene slaine and deuoured. But by Gods mercy he escaped. He was the Gunner in the Fort of Saint Vincent, and going into the Wood to prouide somewhat where with to entertaine some friends then come to him, became himselfe a prey to those Men-hunters. When they had taken him, they contended which of them had bene the first taker, and that contouersie ended, hee was 40 stripped naked, and led away. Hee was giuen to one of their Kings, and this victory by them was ascribed to their Tamaraka, or Idols, which, they said, had by Oracle prophesied thereof, but their Kings were no other then the chiefe in euery Cottage, which consisted of one Kindred, and these Tamaraka weare certaine Rattles, as shall after appeare. The manner is, that it gets them a great name, to exhibit this Feast of aaine Captiue, and therefore some that haue taken, will credit some other friend with the gift of a Captiue, to this lolemne butcherie, on condition to repay him the next Captiue hee taketh. This was Stadium his case, who was thus tolled by exchange, from one to another, till at last hee escaped altogether.

But when hee had bene newly taken, the Women came about him, and one while 50 buffeted him, one saying, This is for such a friend of mine, that the Peros or Portugals had slaine; another fixing on his flesh the memoriall of another friend of hers, and then led him with a Rope about his necke, almost strangling him, making him also to dance in the midst of them, with Rattles tied to his legges; but hee after grew in some credit and respect amongst them, and saw diuers others eaten, while himselfe could not bee free from feare of the like destinie.

The Sauges, that they take, put on a great shew of resolution, and little regard (in seeming) that their Tragedie, supported with this comfort, that their friends will reuenge it. In time of sicknesse or sudden dangers they would resort to him to pray to his God for deliuerance; and this conceit of his God, which they obserued in his Devotions, was the 60 principall meanes of deferring his execution. Such as are mortally wounded in their fights, they would spend presently, or at least kill and dresse them, for a Feast neere at hand; and one man that had liued long amongst them, and was desperately sicke, left Death should

They take great pride in these their cruelties, and when Kanjan Bebe their King, hauing a basket full of pieces of Mans flesh, on which hee was feeding, offered Stadius a piece, who told him that it was more then beastly: hee answered, I am a Tygre, and I delight in these delicacies. This Stadius after escaped in a French Shippe.

Nikolus Durandus, a Knight of Malta, surnamed Villagagnon, in the yeere 1555. (malecontent with his estate at home) sayled into Francis Antarctica, or the Southerne parts of Brasil, vnder the Tropike of Capricorne, and pretended there to worship God according to the puritie of the Gospell; and to fortifie, both for the habitation of his owne, and for a Sanctuary vnto such as at home were persecuted for the Truth. He fortified, and sent thence to Geneua, for assistance in this his holy intent: whereupon Rotherius and Chatterius, two Ministers (with diuers others, among whom was Iohn Lerijs) were sent, and labored there in the yeere 1557. Lerijs hath written his Obseruations of these parts, as Thomet also, another of Villagagnons Company, but (as Lerijs testifieth) in many things falsly. The first Sauages that Lerijs and his fellows saw, were the Margaites, which hold friendship with the Portugals, and are enemies to the French, and to the Tonou Pinambulsi or Tuppi Imba, Confederates of the French, and as deadly enemies to the former. In the meane way they passed by the Tapimry, Paraba, Onetacates; all which, howsoeuer they exercise hostilities, and mutuall diagreements, yet agree in like barbarous and rightlesse Rites. With the Tonou Pinambulsi he conuersed familiarly about a yeere. They are in habit of bodie like the Europeans, but stronger, and lesse subiect to sickness, not subiect to our bodily distempers, by like intemperance, or vexation of mind, by turbulent and distracting passions of Couetousnesse, Enuie, ambition.

They are all naked, except sometimes: the Old men rather to hide their diseases in those parts, then their shame, cover their priuities. They weare in their nether lip a Pyramidall stone, which brauerie weigheth downe their lip, and subiecteth the face to great deformitie. Some also not content with this, adde two others in their cheekes to like purpose. They presse downe the noses of their Infants to make them flat. They anoynt themselves with a kind of Gumme, which they couer with the downe of Feathers sticking thereto. They weare also Frontlets of Feathers: in their eares they weare bones, which they will excell the rest in gallantry, and would seeme to haue slaine and eaten the most enemies, slay and cut their flesh, and put therein a blacke powder, which neuer will bee done away. They vie Rattles of the shell of a certaine fruit, in which they put stones or graines, and call them Atuacs, of which they haue some superstitious conceit. The Women differ from the Men in nourishing their haire, which the Men shauo off before, and make not those holes in their lips; but in their eares weare Eare-rings of the forme and bignesse of a meane Candle. They paint also their faces with diuers colours, and weare Bracelets of little bones, of which the men weare Chaines or Collars. They would not weare clothes, pretending their custome of nakednesse, and often washing (sometimes ten times in a day) whereto clothes would bee a hinderance; and our captiue women, further then the Whip forced them, would not accustome themselves to the apparell we gaue them. The women make two kinds of Meale of certaine Roots, which they vse in stead of Bread, which they doe not put, but lurre into their mouthes without losse. Their office is also to make their drinke of Rootes sliced, and chewed in their mouthes, and thus prepared, boyled, and stirred in a great pot ouer the fire: the like drinke they make of chewed Maiz, which they call Auat: the men would account it a disgrace to do these things, and that they would not taste so well. They call this drinke Cauim; it is thick, and tastes like Milke: I haue seene them continue (saith Lerijs) drinking this liquor three dayes and nights together: they hold it a disparagement not to be able to hold out at this Bacchanall exercise, which they celebrate with dancing and singing, especially at their beastly Man-feasts: The women dance apart from the men. One of them reported to our Author, that they had taken a ship of the Peris, or Portugals, and eaten the men they found therein great vessels, which they could not tell what it was, but drank so much thereof, that they slept three dayes after: it was likely that it was Spanish Wine. They ate Serpents and Toads (which with them are not venomous) and Lizards. Our Author saw one Lizard as big as a man, with scales on her backe like Oylers. They vse a kind of Monkey called Sagoun, of the bignesse of a Squirrel, the fore-halfe in shape resembling a Lion: they haue another strange beast, called Cuaty, as high as a Mare, with a little head, sharpe eares, and a snout or beake about a foot long, the mouth so little, that one can scarcely put in his little finger; it feedeth on Ants. They take Potum (he is not Tobacco) not in Pipes, but put foure or fve leaues in another greater, and firing it, sucke in the smoke, and therewith in time of warre, will sustaine themselves three dayes together, without other sustinance. They weare this herbe about their neckes.

Wha

When Sir Francis Drake made his famous and fortunate Voyage about the World, in the South-Sea he lost the rest of his company, the Elizabeth wherein M. Winter was (which returned into England) and a Pinnetke, wherein were seven men, besides Peter Carder, the relater of this History. This Pinnetke being alone returned backe the Straits, and on the Northside of the River of Plate, sixe went on shore into the wood to seeke food, where three of them and ten Tapines shot at them, and wounded all, where of two dyed soone after; foure were taken, their Pinnetts also being broken, onely Peter Carder and William Pucher remained, which lived in an Island two moneths, on a fruit somewhat like Orenge, & Crabs, without any fresh-water: the want whereof forced them to drinke their owne Urine, saved in herds for that purpose till the next morning. Weary of this life (which began to grow weary of them) they with a plank, and certaine boords, made thurt in three dayes, to set themselves over into the maine, three leagues distant, where meeting with fresh-water, this Pucher was broken, and dyed within halfe an houre of ouer eager drinking; Carder encountered certaine Sauges called Tappanbasse, which led him away dancing, rattling, tabering. They slept on beds of white Cotton netting, tyed two foot from the ground, and a fire on each side, to prevent cold and wild beastes: the next day they marched twenty miles to their Towne, which was foure-square, with foure houses, every house being two bow-shoot in length, made with small trees like Arbours, thatched to the ground with Palme-tree leaues, hauing no windowes, but thirty or forty doores on each side the square. Their chiefe Lord was named Caion, about forty yeeres old; he had nine wives, the rest but one, except the most valiant, which were permitted two, one for the house, another to goe with him to the warres. In this Towne were nere foure thousand persons. Hee found among them good entertainment for certaine moneths.

They vied to goe to the Warres three or foure hundred in a company, with bowes and arrows, and hauing ouercome, would bring home their captiues tyed by the arme to so many of their mens armes, and soone after would tye them to a post, and with a club (after dancing and drinking) slit their heads. Their drinke is made of a root, chewed by women, and put into a trough, where it standst two or three dayes, and hath a yest on it like Ale, and then is tunned into earthen jices, wherewith they drinke themselves drunke. After halfe a yeere, hauing learned the Language, he was requested to their Warres against the Tapines, and much bettered their martiall skill, teaching them to make an hundred Targets of tree-burke, and two hundred clubs, marking their owne company with red Balsam (of this they haue red, white, blacke, very odoriferous) and so marched seven hundred together three dayes, to another foure-square Towne like (but lesse then) their owne. They knocked downe two hundred; tooke twenty; they broyled their carcaffes, and after also the prisoners. How many men they kill, so many holes they make in their visage, beginning at the nether lippe, and so proceeding to the cheek, eye-browes, and eares. Some Portugals came to search for him, two of which, and some Negroes, were taken and eaten. Hee obtained leave to goe to the Coast, hauing foure to provide him victuals for nine or ten weekes, and so came to Babia de todos los Santos, where he yielded himselfe to Michael Iouat, a Portugall, and arrived in England in November 1586. nine yeeres after his setting forth.

§. III.

Most ample Relations of the Brazilian Nations, and Customs by Master ANTHONY KNIVET.

After Anthony Knivet hath written a Treatise of what he had scene and suffered in Brasil: He was one of Master Candlishes company in his vnfortunate voyage, 1591. who after much misery sustained in the Magellan Straits, in their returne was set on shore at S^t Sebastians, where many of his company died with eating a kinde of blacke venomous Peafe. Hee saw there a great beast come out of the Riuer, hauing on the backe great scales, vgly clawes, and a long tayle, which thrust out a tongue, c like a harping iron, but returned without harme. Hee found a dead Whale, which with long lying was covered with Mousse, on which hee yet liued a fortnight. His company were knocked on the head with firebrands, and he like to be eaten of the Sauges, but escaped this and many other miseries; and was saved by the Iesuites from being hanged by the Portugals. Where his calamities compelled him, with another Indian in like predicament of slauerie, to escape by flying, swimming two miles ouer the Sea: and so they trauelled seven and thirty dayes thorow a desert, meeting by the way (as he saith) Lyons, Leopards, huge Serpents,

but concesso is

Some Indians they saw with feathers of diuers colours, fixed on their bodies and heads with oyle of Balsam, seeming as if they had bin so borne, not leauing a spot bare, but on their legs. The Sauiages sell their children to the Portugals for toys. Some of them were so haunted with a Spirit which they called Croopio (like that which Lerius his Sauiages called Agnan) that some of them dyed therewith in much amazement. Many complained that they were possessed with spirits, which they called Anafaly, and commanded themselves to bee bound hand and foot with bow-strings, desiring their friends to beat them with cords, wherewith they hang their beds; but most died notwithstanding. They haue wormes which creep into their fundaments which consume their guts: for remedie whereof they take slices of Limons and Greene pepper, and put therein with salt water.

He in diuers expeditions for war and Merchandize with the Portugals, and escapes from them, trauelled thorow more of those Sauiage nations, then perhaps any other before or since. Out of whose obseruations bought at so deare a rate, I haue heere mustered these many wild people before thee, with such rarities as hee found amongst them.

Petinares.

The Petinares are not so barbarous as many other: they inhabit from Baya to Rio Grande, their bodies are carued with fine workes: in their lips is a hole made with a Roe-Bucks horne, which at mans estate they cut bigger with a Cane, and wear therein a Greene stone; otherwise they esteeme a man no Gallant, but a Pesant. They haue no Religion: vs Polygamie: but the women are tied to one husband, except hee giue her publike leave. When they goe to warre, the wies carrie all the prouision. That wiew whom hee giueth his hunted prey, is his bed-fellow that night: and she goeth to the water, and walseth her selfe: after which she lyeth downe in the net, and commandeth all the rest to attend on her for that day. When they are in trauell, they goe to the doore, and being deliuered, the father lyeth downe and is visited, as before is said. No Indian will kill any female creature whiles his wife is with childe, thinking that would be the death of his childe. They trauell with great store of Tobacco, and haue continually a leafe thereof along the mouth betweene the lip and teeth, the rheume running out at the lip-hole. They war against the Portugals, and all others, eating all, and take so many new names, as prisoners. They thinke mans flesh makes them valiant. Their houses are two hundred yards long without partition: they hang their nets on beames: wash euery morning both men, women, and children: they part their grounds. They haue Serpents amongst them with bodies like trees, which strike two fins out of their fore-quarters, that kill whatsoever: they call them Laboya. They haue foure legs and a taile (like an Aligator or Crocodile) which they hide when they lye in the woods for their prey. They haue Monks as big as a water-dog, faced like a man, with long broad beards, which goe twentie together on a tree, and one of them will alway walke vp and downe with his hand on his beard, making a great noyse, the rest harkening still, an houres space.

Maraquites.

The Maraquites are betweene Fernambuc and Baya: other Indians call them Tapoyes, that is, wilde men, which name, all but these, and the Vaanaflies, which are like them, account a disgrace. The men are of good stature, the women very proper, and fight with their bowes as well as the men. They haue no dwelling, Religion, nor friendship with any Nation; yet he left them in peace with the Portugals. They haue holes in their lips, but carue not their bodies: vs Polygamie; are swift; neuer come into the field to fight, but keepe in the Mountaines: they cate mans flesh without ceremonies.

Topimambares.

The Topimambares inhabit from R. de S. Frane, to Baya de todos Santos; they are, and speake like the Petinares, but the women are of better complexion. The men let their beards grow long.

Waymoores.

From Baya to Eleoos are the Waymoores, men of great stature, and swift as a Horse: five or sixe of them will set on a Sugar-houise with an hundred therein, I haue seene one (saith our Author) take a man aliuie, and defend himselfe with this his prisoner, as it were with a Target. They haue long haire; are without Townes or Houses, and care not where they come, presuming of their swiftnesse. They are greedie Man-eaters, and are alwaies foule with durc and dust, by lying on the ground and ashes. Larrie writes that they are without Governours euery one doing what seemes good in his owne eyes; only he is accounted most Noble, that hath slaine most enemies, with whom for any of them to speake, is punished with death. They roue vp and downe in vncertaine dwellings, and therefore cannot by warre be conquered. This wandering is common to many of these Brasilian Sauiages.

Tomemymenos.

The Tomemymenos dwell at Spirito Santo: haue fortified Townes, with great stones set about like piles, of a good height, and within walls of clay and stone: they make the sides of their houses with loope-holles to shoot out at. They deck their bodies with feathers, and paint themselves blacke and red. One of these tooke the Portugall Captaine, Marin de Sa, and in spite of all his company, carried him a stones cast, and threw him into a Riuer, but hee

Then did they make them prouision of great Canes, three yards and a halfe broad, and fixe long, and killing good store of Tamandoes, roasted them : and thus prouided went into the vault, which made such a noise with the water, that it seemed to them an enchantment. They went in on a Munday morning, & came out againe on a morning, they knew not whether one or two dayes after.

Tamoys.

The next Sauiages they encountered were a kinde of Tamoys, which are as proper men as any in Europe, most of them faire, their heads set with feathers; the women tall, proper, slender in the waite, faire, fine-handed, comely faced, and breasts carued. They esteeme of gold and gems, as we of stones in the streets. Here he liued eightene moneths : but his twelue companions they slue and deuoured. Him they spared, because hee professed himselfe a Frenchman, with whom they sometimes had commerce.

Tocomans.

The Tocomans dwell betwene the River of Plate and Saint Vincent. They are sandie, small, but not so little as they say of the Pigmees, and dwell in Caues.

Carigoghs.

The Carigoghs for two or three Glasses and a Combe, with some Kniues, would glue the worth of foure or fve thousand crownes in gold or stones. Their women are comely & faire, the men die their bodies blacke. These Carigij (so Rodericus calls them) dwell in handsome thatched houses, sixty foot long : euery houle they call a Village. They haue no superiour ; dwell in a barren soyle; are very fond of euery trife and toy, and will trauell laden with their wares for such trade thirty leagues to the Portugals, and sometimes sell themselves slaves.

J. Hieron.
Rodericus.

If they take an enemy aliue, they commit him to the Boyes, of ten yeres old to bee flaine; fve or fixe of which smite out his braines with clubs. And this is a kind of Knight-hood or Gentility vnto them; in signe whereof they cut the skinn from the Ankle to the Necke, and fast many dayes, and obserue a set Diet. They obserue charmes and sooth-sayings. If any dye without children, all his substance is buried with him.

e They had so done before, yet else could not
the French.

The Tamoys his last hosts, by his instructions (who was desirous to try if the Sea might yeeld him any succour) left their habitations, and 3000. of them aduentured themselves to seeke new. They came into the countrey of the Amazones, which the Indians call Mam-discassauri, but durst not warre against them : they tooke a towne of the Carijos, and ate three hundred of them; the rest fled to the River of Plate, and obtained Portugall succour, who tooke these Tamoys captiues, slue ten thousand, and shared 20000. amongst them for slaves. And thus came he againe into his Portugall slavery, from which hee had made an escape once before, and trauelled nine moneths in the wilderness : fve or fixe yeres he serued the Portugals, and liued a yere and eleuen moneths with the Canibals.

He made another escape into Angola, and serued as a drudge in Mafangana, the sickliest Countrey vnder the Sunne, where the Portugals die like Chickens, gaspe for aire like the Camelions, liue close, take Physicke, euery weeke let blood, obserue certaine diet and houres when to goe abroad. But his houre to goe abroad at liberty was not yett come. Backe he was sent to Brasile : and long it was before his longing could be satisfied to reuiue his Country and friends : some compassion of his passions, I think this tedious following him in this epitomised discourse of his disasters hath bried in you : wherein (as in the following also) are many things strange, some seeming doubtfull, which if any reiect, let them not blame me, who had rather beleue more then this, then to aduenture the search amongst those cruel Barbarians.

§. II. III.

Of the strange Creatures in Brasile.

Friers Treatise
of Brasil.

NO man hath written so absolute a discourse of Brasile, as was that taken from a Portugall Frier, and by Francis Cooke sold to Master Hakins. Out of him I could recite the names of other Brasilian Nations; Araucap, Apigapigaua, Uinaw, which he saith were by a Magician Priest of Portugall conueyed to Fernambuc : Tappya is a generall name, of which hereconeth threecore and sixtyn seuerall Nations, most of them of sundry languages.

Guaymares or Waymores, as K. and as Stad.
Wayganna.

The Guaymares haue hard skins, and beat their children with thistles to harden them. They are swift and cruell, cut off the captiues flesh with Reeds, leauing nothing but the bones and guts, and disbowell women with childe, to eat the child roasted. The Camucura haue paps reaching almost to the knees, which when they runne, they binde to their waite. The Cirupetie care not men, but carry the heads for shew.

Beasts of Brasil.

The Winter begins in Brasile in March, and ends in August. The beasts of Brasil he reckoned Deere; Elkes like vnto Kine or Mules, which diue and goe (but swimme not) vnder the

the water; Bores of twoforts, Conies, Pigs, Ounces, Foxes with bags to carry their yong vnder the belly. The Tatu or Armadilla, which digs as much as many men with Mattocks: the Conuacu or Porcupine of three sorts: the Hirara like Ciuet Cats, which eat honey: the Aquiquin bearded Apes blacke, and sometimes one yellow, which they say is their King, hauing an Antifurment from his gullet as bigge as a Duck-egge, wherewith he maketh a loud sound; so acute, that they sometimes are said to catch an arrow with the hand, and redart it at the flooter; and so curming, that they seeke a leafe, chew it, and put the same into their wounds. There are of them many kindes. The Cuati are like Badgers, they climbe trees; no snake, egge, or bird escapes him. There are others greater, as great Dogs, with Tusks, which deuoure men and beasts. There are wilde Cats, which yeeld good Furrey; and are very fierce: the Iaguaruty are Dogs of Brasile; the Tapati also bark like Dogs. The Iagucinia is a kind of Foxe which feedeth on Sea-crabs and Sugar-canes. The Birataca, a kinde of Ferret of such stinking fauour, that some Indians haue died thereof: yea Dogges, which come neere; escape not: the sent endureth fiftene or twenty dayes in thole things which he hath come neere to: and causeth some towne sometimes to bee disinhabited. This commeth of a ventolitic, which it voideth and couereth in the earth, or casteth it out, being in danger to be taken: it feedeth on birds Eggs, and Amber. Ten or twelue kind of Rats, all good meat. Other beasts are before mentioned.

- Of Snakes without venome, hee numb'reth the Giboya, some of which are twenty foot long, and wil swallow a Deere whole, crushing it with the winding of his taile, and bruising it with licking to that purpose. The Guaranapiquana eateth egges, goeth faster on the trees, then any man can runne on the ground, with a motion like swimming. The Camoima is all greene, and liueth on like food. The Boytiapua eat Frogs; the Indians strike this Serpent on womens hips as remedy to barrenness. The Gatiapia smelleth so, that none can abide it: such is also the Boyuma: the Bam (so termed of his crie) is great and barmelike; the Baicuepanga hath venomous prickles on his backe, Snaker.

- There are other venomous Snakes, as the Iaraca, of which are foure kindes, of musky sent, one ten spannes long, with great tuskes, which they hide and stretch out at pleasure. The Curucucu fiftene spannes long, which lyeth on a tree to hunt his prey. The Boycimiaga which hath a bell in his tayle, so swift, that they call it the flying Snake; there are two kindes thereof. The Ibaruca causeth by his biting, the blood to issue thorow all parts of the body, eyes, mouth, nose, eares, &c. The Ibiboca is the fairest, but of foulest venome amongst them all. The fields, woods, houses, beds, bootes, are subiect to the plenty of Snakes, which without helpe kill in foure and twenty houres. There are also many Scorpions, which ordinarily kill not, but cause extreme paine for foure and twenty houres space. Lizards couer the wals of houses, and holes are full of them. Their fundament-worms are very dangerous, which Sir Richard Hawkins saith he saw like a long Magot, greene, with a red head, creeping in, and glewing himselfe to the gut, where it groweth so great, that it stoppeth the passage, and killeth, with cruell Colicke torments.

Master Kniue.

- Master Kniue speakes of one Serpent which he killed, thirteene spans long, with foure and twenty teeth, great shels about the necke, blacke and russet, like a collar, lisse on her bodie, and darke greene vnder her belly, all speckled with blacke and white, with foure sharpe feet, no longer then a mans finger, and a tongue like a harping iron. Her tayle like a trait bull-horne, blacke and white litted. If they finde fire, they beat themselves in it, till either the fire or themselves be extinguished. They vse from a tree to fall on their prey passing by, thrusting their tayle into the fundament. The Indians will not goe (vnder hue or fixe) to set vpon one of them; this yet he killed with the helue of an axe.

Fruits, Trees, of Birds.

- Of Birds, there are Parrots innumerable, more then Starlings or Sparrows in Spaine: the Guaminig like Bees, which sleepe fixe moneths; the Tangara which haue the falling-sicknesse, the rest dancing about that which is fallen, with a noise, from which they will not bee skarred till they haue done, &c.

Fruits, Trees, and Herbs.

- Of Fruits, hee reckons the Iacupucaya, like a pot, as bigge as a great bowle, two fingers thicke, with a couer in it, within full of Chelnuts: being much eaten greene, it causeth all haire to fall off: Balsam trees pricked, excellent for cure and sent: Oyle-trees many; one as a Well or Riuer, growing in dry places where no water is: it hath holes in the branches as long as ones arme, full of water Winter and Summer, neuer running ouer, but alwayes at like stay: fise hundred persons may come to the foot of it and drinke and wash their fill without want: the water is sauioury and cleere. There are herbs which seeme to sleepe all night, and others which make shew of sence, as woe haue before obserued from Master Harcourt in Guiana.

- Of strange fishes in Brasil, he nameth the Oxe-fish, with eyes and eye-lids, two armes a cubit long, with two hands, fise fingers and nayles, as in a man; and vnder the armes the female male had two paps inward like an Oxe: it cannot bee long vnder water: it hath no fins but the tayle, which is round and close, two stones neere the braine of great esteeme; the inward of an Oxe, and taste like Porke.

Master T. Turner (who lived in Brasilia, and was acquainted with Mr. Ximenes) saith the Indians told him she like,

The Cucurijaba is a fresh-water Snake, five and twenty or thirty foot long (the Mamma is a greater kinde) toothed like a dogge, with a chaine striped along the backe very faire: It catcheth a Man, Cow, Stag, or any other prey, winding it with the tayle, and so swalloweth it whole: after which the lyes and rots, the Ravens and Crows eating her all but the bones, to which after growth new-flesh, by life derived from the head, which is hidden all this while in the mire (which therefore they that finde, seeke and kill,) They will sleepe so being full, that they may cut off pieces (he tells an instance) from the tayle, and they not awoken. They found one which was fifty spans or twelve yards and a halfe long, having two wilde Bores in the belly. Thus much of the creatures in Brasilia. Let vs now take better view of their Warres, Religion, and other their Rites.

CHAP. V.

Of the Customes and Rites of the Brasilians.

§. I.

Of their warres and man-eating, and of the Diuel, torturing them.

Zeus Naig.

He Brasilians, for the most part as you haue seene, exercise irreconcilable hostility, not to enlarge their dominions, but only to be reuenged for the death of their friends and Ancestors, slaine by their enemies. The Elder men, as they sit or lye in their hanging beds, will make an Oration of the vertue of their Predecessors, and of their sustained wrongs, and so excite the yonger to take armes: These Orations last sometimes fixe houres. Their armes are clubs; or wooden swords, five or sixe foot long, and a foot broad, a finger thicke, and very sharpe. One of these men being thoroughly moued, would trouble two of our Fencers. Their bowes are as long as ours, the string made of the heibe Tocou, little, yet able to endure the strength of an horse: their arrowes an ell long, which they will shoot twice as fast, as our men; they haue leather shields; their elder men lead the ranks (it may be so called, which haue none to marshall or order them) and with great shouts, and shewing the enemies the bones of their slaine friends, they enter into a herce battell. Their captiues they conuey in the middelt of their armie home to their Territories, vnto whom the men will not sticke to giue their Sisters or Daughters, to performe all the duties of a Wife, and feed them with the best, till they redemand the same out of their flesh; the men are employed (if it be long before the slaughter) in hunting, fowling, fishing; the women in gardening, or gathering Oysters. When that dismall day approacheth, knowledge is giuen, and the men, women, and children assemble to the place appointed, and there passe the morning in drinking; and the captiue (although he knoweth the dreadfull issue) lanceth, drinketh, and frolicke it with the best. After fixe or seuen houres thus spent, two or three of the strongest fasten a rope about his middle, leauing his armes at liberty, and so lead him vp and down the Village in triumph. Neither doth he for all this hang down his head, as men here going to be hanged, but with incredible courage embazoneth his own worthinesse. Thus, thus, saith he, haue I sometimes bound your kindred, and thy father, saith he to one, haue I deuoured, and thy brether (to another) haue I deuoured and eaten: and what innumerable numbers of you Touan Pinmbauhy haue these hands taken, this throat swallowed? Neither will the Marguates suffer this my death vnreunged. Then they bring him stones, and bid him reuenge his death. He hurleth them at those which stand about him, whereof there are some foure thousand, and hurteth diuers: I saw one (saith our Author) whose legge I had thought had bene broken by the violence of one of those blowes. After this comes one, which all this while had bin hidden, with the fatal club; and, Art thou not one of the Marguates? saith he: and hast thou not deuoured our kindred? the other answereth, O how lustily I haue done it, how prompt haue I been in taking them, how greedy in eating? And therefore, replyeth the other, shalt thou be killed and roasted on the Boucau. What then? saith he, my death shall not bee vnreunged. The club ends their Dialogue, with one blow striking him dead.

a This club they call tuara Touan, which is consecrated to this mischief by certain ceremonies of singing and painting.
b This confidence is as well in the women as in the men.

His

His wife (if he had any, as they sometimes use to bestow on their Captives) comes to the carcasse, and spends a little time and passion in mourning, but her Crocodiles teares are soone dried, and the humour falls into her teeth, which water for the first morsell. The other women, especially the elder (which are most cruell and greedie) bring hot water and wash the body, and rub it till it looke like the skin of a Pigge: then comes the Master of the Feast, which owed the Captive, and cuts it out as readily, as any Butcher with vs can doe a Weather. They daube the children with the blood: foure women carrie about the armes and legs for a shew, with shouts and cries: The trunk is divided into two parts, the vpper part being cut and separated from the lower: the inwards are left to the women, which feede and make the broth of them called Mangan, which they sup vp, with their children: they eate also the flesh about the head, The braine, tongue, and that which within the head may serue for meate, is the childrens share. The Author of the Feast hath a new name added to the former (for they haue so many names as they haue slaine Captives, the chiefe of the Cottage branding him on the arme, with an honourable marke for the memory thereof) and all that day he must spend in quiet. The Mayan are a kind of Brasilians, which hold confederacie with no other Nation, but kill all which come to their hands, and that so cruely, that they will cut off their armes and legges while they are alive. These live in the Mountaines. They cut them with stones, and those which haue trade with the Christians, use Knives.

30 Their Boucan is a Grediron of foure cratches, set in the ground, a yard high, and as much asunder, with billets laid thereon, and other sticke on them grate-wise. On this they rost the flesh, putting fire vnder, all the people standing about the same, and every one gets a little piece of him. But me thinks I see horror exprest in the countenance of him that reade this, and every one wearie of viewing this Tragedie, loathing this inhumane feasting with humane flesh.

I will therefore leaue their stambles, and (which better becomes a Pilgrime) will visite their holies and holy places. But alas, where or what are they? Mossam hath already told vs, that they obserue no God: and Lerius confirms the same, yet sheweth that they acknowledge a Deuill, whom they call Aygnan: not that they worship him, but are tormented by him. Euen in speaking of him, they tremble, and the remembrance breeds a compassionate amazement in the hearer, an amazed passion in the speaker, while he applauds our happinesse free from such tyrannie, and deplores his owne miserie. Hee sometimes in the forme of a beast, sometimes in forme of a Bird, and otherwhiles deformed in some monstrous shape, doth grievously torment them. Euen whiles the Christians were in conference with them, they would pitiously cry out, Hei, Hei, helpe, Aygnan vexeth me. Nor could this be counterfeited in the iudgement of any that conuerst with them. They beleue the immortalitye of the soule, and that the soules of the vertuous, that is (in their sense) of such as haue killed and eaten many enemies, shall live beyond the highest Mountaines, and be gathered to the soules of their Progenitors, and there live in pleasant Gardens, and perpetuall dancings and delicacies. The cowardly Ghosts shall be carried vnto torment, by Aygnan, without end. 40 They haue no name, whereby to signifie God vnto them, but wondered to heare what the Frenchmen told of the Creator of Heauen and Earth. And because they are afraid of Thunder, which they call Toupan, they told them that God was Author thereof: the foolish Indian reply, that he was then naught which would make them afraid. But the feare of Aygnan made them sometimes flexible to embrace the Christian Religion, hearing that this Deuill was inferior to the Christians God. So that euen in these (the most degenerate of all, which I haue obserued in this long and tedious Pilgrimage) there is some sparke left of Religion, euen in the acknowledgement of a Deuill, and of eternall rewards and punishments.

The text tells of the use of Toupan, as after follows.

p. II.

Of their Priests or Magicians.

35 His is further confirmed by that which is written of certaine Magicians or Priests amongst them: which perwade the people that they haue dealings with Spirits, that by their meanes they haue their Roots and sustinance, and may by them haue fortitude. I (saith Lerius) was present at one of their Assemblies, where sixe hundred were gathered together, which diuided themselves into three parts: the men went into one house, the women into a second, the children into a third. The Cariac forbade the women and children to depart their houses, but to attend diligently to singing; and we (saith he) were commanded to abide with the women. Anon the men in one house fell to singing, He, He, He,

He, answered by the women in the other with the same. They howled it out for a quarter of an hour, shaking their breasts, and foming at the mouth, and (as if they had had the falling sicknesse) some falling downe in a swoone, the Devill in seeming entering into them. The children also followed in the same harsh deuotions. After this, the men sung pleasantly, which caused me to goe thither, where I found them singing and dancing in three severall Rings, in the middell of each, three or foure Carabes, adorned with Hats and Garments of Feathers euery one hauing a Maraca, or Rattle, in both his hands. These Rattles are made of a fruit bigger then an Oltriches Egge, out of which they said, that the Spirit would speake, and they continually shooke them, for the due consecration. These Carabes danced to and fro, and blowed the smoke of Petum on the standers by, saying, Receiue yee all the Spirit of Fortitude, whereby yee may overcome your Enemies. This they did often: the solemnitie continued two houres, the men ignorant of Musicke, and yet rauishing my spirit with the delight I conceived in their Song. Their words sounded this, that they were grieved for the losse of their Progenitors, but were comforted in the hope, that they should one day visit them beyond the Hills; and then threatned the Ouetacates (which dwell not far from them, and are at enmitie with all their Neighbours, as swift as Harts, wearing their haire to the buttookes, eating raw flesh, and differing from all others in Rites and Language) and now prophesied their destruction at hand. Somewhat also they added in their Song of the flood, that once had drowned all the World, but their Ancestors, which escaped by climbing high trees. That day they feasted with great cheere.

This solemnitie is celebrated euery third yeere; and then the Carabes appoint in euery Family three or foure Maraca, to be adorned with the best Feathers, and flicked in the ground, with meate and drinke set before them; and the people beleue they care it. They minister vnto their Maraca fifteene dayes; after which, in a superstitious conceit, they think that a Spirit speaks to them while they rattle their Maraca. They were exceedingly offended, if any tooke away any of this Prouision, as the French sometimes did; for which, and denying other the Carabes lyes, those Priests hated them exceedingly. Yet doe they not adore their Maraca, or any thing else. Peter Carder saith, he could obserue no Religion amongst them, but the worship of the Moone; specially the New Moone, whereto they reioyced, leaping, singing, and clapping of hands.

Stadius tells (as you heard) that they ascribed his taking to the prediotion of Maraca. Hee tells of their consecration, that the x Paygi (so hee calls them) enioyne that euery one should carry their Tamaraka to the house, where they should receiue the faculty of speech. Euery ones Rattle is pitched in the ground by the Steele or stake, and all of them offer to the Wizard which hath the chiefe place, Arrows, Feathers, and Eare-rings; he that breathes Petum on euery Rattle, puts it to his mouth, shakes it, and saith, Nee Kora, that is, Speake if thou be within: anon followeth a squeaking voyce, which I, saith Stadius, thought the Wizard did, but the people ascribed it to the Tamaraka. Then those Wizards perswade them to make warres, saying, that those spirits long to feed on the flesh of Captiues. This done, euery one takes his Rattle, and builds vp a Roome for it, to keepe it in, where he sets vnto it, requireth and asketh all necessities thereof, as we doe of God: and these, as Stadius affirmeth, are their Gods. These Paygi doe initiate Women vnto Witchcraft by such Ceremonies of smoke, dancing, &c. till shee fall as in the falling sicknesse, and then hee saith, hee will reuiue her, and make her able to foretell things to come: and therefore when they goe to the Warre, they will consult with these Women, which pretend conference with Spirits.

Andrew Theuet (which was in this Antartike France with Villagagnon) agreeth in many of the former Reports: he addeth, that for feare of Aiguan they will not goe out, but they will carry fire with them, which they thinke forcible against him.

He writes that they acknowledged a Prophet called Toupan, which they say makes it thunder and raine, but they assigne no time nor place to his worship. They tell of a Prophet, which taught them to plant their Heitch or Root which they cut in pieces and plant in the Earth, and is their chiefe food; of which they haue two kinds. The first Discouersers they much honoured as Carabes or Prophets, and as much haue distasted the Christians since, calling them Mabira, the name of an ancient Prophet, detested by them. But Toupan (they say) goeth about, and reuealeth secrets to their Carabes. Theuet addes, that they obserue Dreames; and their Paygers, or Carabes professe the interpretation of them; which are also esteemed as Witches, which conferre with Spirits, and vnto hurt others with the payson called Abouay, a kind of Nut. They doe a kind of worship to these Paygers, and will pray them that they may not bee sicke; and will kill them, if they promise falsly. In their consultations, they will provide a new lodging for the Wizard, with a cleane white bed, and store of Caboun (which is their ordinary drinke, made by a Virgin of ten or twelve yeeres old) old) and of their Root-food: into the which they conuey him, being before washed, & hauing abtained nine dayes from his Wife. Then doth he lye on that Bed, and inuocate, none being with him in the Houle, and rayseth his Spirit, called Hauionfira; which sometimes, as some Christians affirmed to our Authour, appeareth so, as all the people may heare, though they see him not. And then they question him of their successe in their enterprizes. They beleue the soules Immortality, which they call Cherepiconare, with rewards to the valiant Manners, in goodly Paradises, and Agnans punishments to others. But his boldnesse makes him the lesse bold in following him in these and other things; which I know not with what authoritie hee auereth against the former witnesses, whereas Thener, sometimes taken in lying, defendeth lesse credit in the rest. When there is any tempest in the water, hee saith he y attribute it to the soules of their Progenitors, and cast something into the water to appease it.

They haue a Tradition, That one, in habite like to the Christians, had long since told their Progenitors of Diuine matters, but with so little effect, as he forooke them; and euer since had those bloody Warres continued amongst them. How little the Iesuites can preuaile, in bringing the Brasilians to Christianitie, Maffei hath written somewhat, and Pierre du Larric, a Iesuite, very largely; which is not so pertinent to our present purpose.

Maister Knies (to whose Relations our former Chapter is so much indebted) telleth of a 20 Rocke in Brasil called Etooca, with an entrance like a doore, where the Indians say (it is like they borrowed it of some fabulous Frier) that Saint Thomas preached. It is within like a great Hall: hard by it is a stone as bigge as foure Canoes, supported by foure stones like sticke, little bigger then a mans finger. The Indians say it had bene wood, and by Miracles was thus altered. They shew vpon great Rockes many foot-prints of one bignesse; and tell that the Saint called the fishes of the Sea, and they heard him preach. This smel of a Franciscan Cowle.

The Portugall Friers Treatise mentioned in the former Chapter deliuereth many things worthy our obseruation. They haue some Tradition of the flood, in which they say all were drowned, one only escapin on a Ianiapata with a Sister of his, which was with childe, from 30 whom they had their beginning. They haue no knowledge of the Creator, nor of paine and glory after this life, and therefore vie no Ceremonies of worship. Yet doe they acknowledge that they haue soules which die not, but are conuerted into Deuils, and goe into certaine fields where grow many Figge-trees alongt the bankes of a goodly River, and there dance. They are greatly afraid of the Deuill (whom they call Curnpira, Taguain, Piglauga, Matichera, Auchauga) in so much that often they haue dyed with the imagination of him. Yet doe not they worship it, nor any other creature or Idoll; onely some old men say, that in some wayes they haue certaine posts, where they offer him some things for feare, and because they would not dye. Sometimes (but seldome) the Deuill appeares to them, and some few among them are possessed. There are Witches which vie Witchcrafts, rather for 40 health then deuotion. Some Witches are called Carajha, or holinells, but (like his holinells of Rome) are of bad life: these would seeme to do strange things, rayling some to life which had faired themselves dead: they are their Oracles for their husbandry and other affaires: sometimes causing them to dye for hunger, whiles they promise to make the Mattockes worke alone.

§. III.

Of other their Rites, and a new Mungrell Sett amongst them.

30 They haue no proper name for God, but say Tupan is the Thunder and Lightning, which gaue them Mattockes and food. Their Mariages are diuorced vpon any quarrell. In times past (they tell) no young man married before he slue an Enemy, nor the woman before she had her termes, which time was therefore festiuall. At Mariages also they vied great Drinkings, and the Feast ended, they were laid in a cleane Net, after which the Father tooke a wedge of stone, and did cut vpon a stake or post, which (they say) was to cut the tiales from the grand children; who were for this cause borne without them. After 60 they were married they began to drinke; for till then their Fathers brought them vp in sobriety of dyet and modesty of speech) and then with a vessell the old men gaue him the first wine, holding his head with their hands for feare of vomiting, which, if it happened, was a signe which spoke to him and told him this was contrary to his couenant thus to torment them (which death vially followed) & if he so continued; they would all goe the White men and become Christians. Whereupon the Deuill left that body presently, and he recovered.

a signe he would not be valiant. They eate at all times in the night and day, and keepe no meate long, being no niggards of their store (this name were the greatest disgrace you could offer them) and count it an honour to be liberrall. They are patient of hunger and thirst: will eate Snakes, Toads, Rats, and all fruits which are not poyson: drinke not ordinarily whiles they eate, but after meate will drinke drunke. They haue some particular Festiuals, in which two or three dayes together they eate not, but drinke, and goe about singing, calling all to the like fellowship: sleepe not, haue their Musickes, and sometimes fall to quarrells. They wash not before meate; they eate sitting, or lying in their beds, or on the ground. They goe to bed betimes, and rise not early. In the morning one chiefe man makes an Oration to them lying in his Net, which continueth the space of an houre, about labouring as their forefathers did, with the substance and circumstances thereof. When he is vp, hee continueth his preaching, running through the Towne. This custome they borrowed of a bird, which singeth every morning, by them called the King and Lord of birds. When a man speakes with a woman, he turnes his backe to her. They shawe their haire with a halfe Moone before, which they say they learned of Saint Thomas. Being angry, they let their haire grow: women, when they mourne, or when their Husbands goe a farre journey, cut their haire. They go naked: and when any weare apparell, it is for fashion rather then honesty, as on the head, or no further then the nauell. Some houses haue fiftie, threescore, or threescore and tenne Roomes, and some are without partition: ordinarily in one Houle they are of a Kindred, and one is principall.

Child-birth.

In Child-birth, the Father or some other (whom they take for their Gossip) takes it vp, and cuts the Nauell-string with teeth, or two stones, and saits till it falls off, and then makes drinkings. The women presently after travell wash themselves in their Rivers: giue sucke a yeere and halfe, without any other thing to eate; carrying the child on her backe in a Net to the place of her labour: they rocke them on the palmes of their hands. They neuer sinke their wives except in times of drinking, and sometimes will be willing to take this opportunity. Their children play without scumilitie or quarrells imitating the voyces of Birds and the like. They will spare a Captiue that is a good Singer.

Funerals.

When one dyeth, they of that Kindred cast themselves vpon him in the Net, sometimes choking him before he be dead: and those which cannot cast themselves on the bed, fall on the ground, with such knockes, that it seemeth strange, they dye not also for company: and sometimes they proue so feeble that they dye likewise, if the party dye in the Evening, they weep all night with a high voyce, calling their Neighbours and Kindred to societie of their grieue. If it be one of the principall, all the Towne meets to mourne together, and they curse with plagues those which lament not, prophesying that they shall not bee mourned for. They wash and paint the dead curiously, and then couer him ouer with Cotton yaree, and put him in a great vessell vnder the Earth, that no Earth may come to him, and couering this vessell with the Earth, make him a Houle, where every day they carry him meate. For when he is wearied with dancing, say they, hee comes thither to eate. Thus for a certaine time they goe to bewaile him every day. With him they bury all his Iewels; if any had giuen him a Sword or other thing, now he challengeth his gift againe. The Mourner eat not but by night. This mourning lasteth a Moone, after which they make Drinkings: but many after this will forbear them.

They rule themselves by the Sunne, and goe two or three hundred leagues thorow the Woods: no Horie will hold out with them: they feare no Sea, being able to continue a night and a day swimming. When they returne from victorie, their women receive them with flowers, and buffetting themselves on the mouth. The Keeper appointed to the Captiue, is one giuen him to be as his Wife for bed and boord. Some of these are so resolute, that they will not be ransomed, saying, it is a wretched thing to dye and to stinke & be eaten of Wormes. Sometimes their Keeper will run away with them.

Genilities.

When they kill a Captiue at their Feasts, if hee fall on his backe, it is an ominous signe that the killer shall dye, which presages they obserue in other circumstances. The taker hath a new name, as a title of dignitie added to him, and must be content to fill his fancie with this new Gentility, for nothing is left him to fill his belly, every one taking from him that which he liath. He stands all that day on certaine logges of the Tree Pilan, with strange silence: he is presented with the head of the dead, the eyes pulled out, his pulles annoiued with the strings and sinewes, and cutting off the mouth whole, they put it in manner of a Bracelet about his arme. Thus lyeth he downe in his Net, fearing if all Rites be not accomplished, that the soule of the dead will kill him. Within few dayes after they giue him the habit, razing his skin with the tooth of a Cutia, in forme of some worke, putting thereon Cole and iuyce of Broome-rape, he lying still certaine dayes in silence, hauing water, meale, and fruits set neere him. After this, they make a great Feast, and then may hee lay aside his mourning.

mourning, and cut his haire; and thence forwards may kill any without any painfull ceremony. Abaster, Marnixaba, Morasara, are names of Gentilitie amongst them.

The Fryers haue obtained some good liking with the Brasilians, for teaching their children to write; reade, and cipher: the Iesuits will be of esteeme euery where: yet two and fifty of them sayling from Lisbon to Brail, Anno 1570. by Frenchmen at Sea were taken and slaine.

In c Marriages they abstaine (sayth Lerius) onely from Mother, Sister, and Daughter: they obserue no Marriage-ceremonies, but vpon consent of her friends and her owne, take her home. It is a credit to haue many wiues, amongst whom is no Leab to enuie Rachels; greater portion of loue: the Husband may kill the Adulteresse; but for their vnmarried Maydens they are not scrupulous. Our Author hearing a woman cry in the night, thought shee had beene in some danger of deuouring by a wild beast, but found her Husband playing the homely Midwife to her in her trauell, bying the navel-string, and pressing downe the nose. The Father washeth and painteth him. They vse to put to their male- infants little Bowes and Arrows into one end of the bed, and herbs at the other, which are the Enemies his Son must be supposed to kill, and eat; chatting out their hope of the childes valour, in being avenge when he shall be a man, vpon his Enemies. They name their children at aduenture, by the name of a Beast, Bird, or otherwise, as this Child was called Orapacus, that is, Bow and Arrows. The men are modest, in accompanying with their Wiues secretly. The women haue not the ordinary feminine sickness. Lerius thinks, that humour was duerted in their youth, seeing the Mothers cut their Daughters side downe to the thigh, at twelue yeeres of age. But twice while he was there, did he see any in private brawling, or contention: if such happens, as they began, so they are suffered to end it: if any hurt or kill other, he sustayneth the like in his owne person, inflicted by the Kindred of the party wronged. They haue their proper pieces of ground, which they husband with their Rootes and Maies. When they enterayne a Stranger, the Massacat, or Good-man, seemes to neglect him a while, and the guest sits him downe silent on the bed, the women sit by on the ground, and hold their hands before their eyes, weeping, with many prayes, that hee is a good man, a valiant man, that (if he be a Christian) he hath brought them fine Wares. The Stranger must endeavour, in some measure, to imitate the like weeping gesture. The Massacat is all this while whistling his Arrow, not seeming to see his new Guest, till anon he comes. And are you come, sayth hee? How doe you? with many termes of his best Rhetorick: and then asks, if he be hungry; and if he be, sets his cheere before him on the ground: which kindnesse is repayed with Glasses, Combes, or the like. They are very kind, both to their owne, and to such Strangers as they are enleagued with. They would carry burthen, or man, for the space of some miles, when they needed: their loue and hatred are in like extremes: the one to their owne, the other to their Enemies. They haue Physicians called Pages. They vse much mourning at the death of any, and making a round pit, bury him vpright therein, fixe houres after his death, with that wealth they had. In their Villages liue some six hundred persons: they remoue their Villages often, which yet carry the same name. Stradius sayth, there are few Villages of aboue seven Houses, but those Houses are a hundred and fifty foot long, and two fathoms high, without diuision into plurality of Roomes; and therein liue many Families, all of one Kindred.

What our Countreimen haue done on this Coast, I referre the Reader to Master Hakluyts Discoueries. The Iesuits first came into these parts, Anno 1549. which whiles they sought to reduce the Brasilians from their Man-eating Feasts, had like to haue kindled a dangerous contention betwixt them and the Portugals: whereupon the Iesuits sought to bee permitted to speake with them whom they kept for the Boucan, instructing & baptizing them; but then also they complained, the flesh was distastfull (they said) vnto them; so that the Iesuits were forbidden that, by stealth with a wet cloth, following them to execution, would performe a kind of Baptisme: and that also being clyped was prohibited. Since which, by schooling their children, teaching them to reade and write, they haue most (though not much) preuayled with these Barbarians.

Somewhat (as themselves write) they haue beene hindred in their Brasilian Conuersions, by the peruersenesse of some couetous Portugals, who sometimes vnder colour of peace, would betray these silly soules, and seize on them to cruell slavery; sometimes would counterfeite Iesuiticall habits, and vnder pretence of Religion, perswading them to goe with them, haue betrayed Religion and Them together; sometimes would vnder-hand, and closely threaten seruitude to all such as beleaued the Iesuits, with all promises of kindnesse to such as would follow them, which in effect proued, to the Mynes, or other offices of slauidrudgery; and sometimes by hostile violence haue seized on such as the Iesuits haue conuerted, and made slaues of them. Most strange is that which they write of certaine Brasilians within the Land, which eyther having seene the Religious Rites of the Portugals, or instructed therein by some Euytunes or Apollata's, had set vp a new Sect of Christian Ethnieisme, or Mungrell-Christianny. This was about Anno 1583. They chuse one Supreme in their vnholy Holtes, whom altho they call Pope; other inferiour Prelates they call Bishops: These ordayne their Priests, which obserue in an Apish imitation their Confession, Absolution; Beads to number their Prayers, great Gourds or Rattles in stead of Bels, to assemble them together; Free-schools for instruction of youth; Bookes of Barke, bound in wood, and strange Characters therein written; a kinde of Baptisme also, but wanting the essentiall words and forme; all the Men they name Iesus, the Women, Maria: the Crosse they haue, but without veneration; their Priests vow Continence. They conceiue a state of perfection in drinking the j-yce of the herbe Petina, till they fall downe distracted, as in the Falling-sicknesse, quaking, and stretching out their limbes with terrible gestures, the Deuill speaking from within them, their mouthes not open, nor their lips moued: after they haue thus continued a while, they returne to themselves, and are washed all ouer their bodies; he is iudged the most sanctified Wight, that hath expressed most extaticall gestures. The most transcendent degree of perfection they ascribe to the muttering of certayne words ouer them by an Inchanter. They say, that their Ancestors, long since dead, will returne by shipping, and deliuer them from the Portugals, which all shall be slaine by them; and if any shall escape, they shall be turned into fishes or beasts. Those of this faith shall inherit Heauen, and all the wickedners shall be deuoured of Birds or Beasts. In the yeere 1602, a Iesuite was sent amongst these Sectaries; where their Great Father, or Pope, came to meeete him, attended with many weaponed men, and Archers. He began a Song which the other Brasiliaps vnderstood not; and when he had sung one Verse, the rest (as with vs in the Chaire) answered. Then did this Holy Father Catechize, or instruct them, with many idle words, often mixing and repeating Sancta Maria Tupama Remiro; that is, Saint Mary the Wife of God, &c. Kneeling, he lifted vp his eyes and hands to Heauen, after the fashion of the Priests at Masse. Hee and the Iesuite imbraced each other; and then hee told the Iesuite that hee liued in the Woods, as one that would not bee seene of Men. The next night hee caused a youth to bee hanged that had beene familiar with the Iesuite. A conference was appointed betwixt him and the Iesuite, where after much boasting of his talencie, the Iesuite interrupted him, and told him, he came to teach him the way to Heauen, but the other soone after conueyed himselfe away, and came no more.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Countreys from the River of Plate to the Magellane Straits.

§. I.

His River we haue already mentioned; the Indians call it Parana: and Iohn Dias di Solis discovering the same in the yeere 1512, for some shew it seemed to haue of that Metall, called it the River of Plate, or Silver. It is forty leagues wide in the entrance, and prevaileth so farre against the Oceanus Atlanticke, that the taste of the fresh water sooner discernes his waters, then the eye can see his banks. It cutteth the Countrey; as Nilus in Egypt, and Orenouque, Marannon, with the other great Rivers in America. It clebeth and sheweth a hundred miles vt the streame. Dias, whom some call the first Discoverer, was, with fifty of his companions, there slaine and eaten. But hee which hath most fully discovered the Nations that dwell neere this River, is Huldericus Schmidel, who sayled thither in the yeere 1534, and continued in those parts almost twenty yeeres. He sayled thither with Peter Menduca, who carried with him five and twenty hundred men, to discover, conquer, and inhabit those Regions.

They built the Citie Buenas Aeres, so called of the wholesome Aire, neere to an Indian Towne, named Caendies of three thousand Inhabitants; it that may bee called a Towne, whole Inhabitants stay not long in one place. They will drinke the blood of the beasts they they kill, for thirst. The Spaniards destroyed them, whose parts famine seemed to take against that cruel people, which with insupportable Darts pierced their entrails, that vile and venomous creatures were applied to the curing of their wounded stomachs: and when such Medicines failed, three of them stole a horse, intending to flee from famine on that dead beast but were thereto hotled on a Gibbet, where three others, that by this example were terrified from Horse-flesh, adventured upon these carcasses, cutting thence large gobbets, to pay that cruellest Tyrant, and greediest Exactor, Hunger, his Tribute. Another, whose Brother dyed, buried him in his owne body: halfe their company were consumed with this plague.

f These horses so multiplied in these parts, that now they are dispersed in wild troops, and they will hunt and kill them for the Hides, & which is a great commodity in Angola for the taylor.

- 10 The Indians of Carenjes, Barennis, Zaeclutuas, and Tiembus, taking this advantage, assailed their Towne of Good Aires, turning it into good fires, by shooting Arrows, fired at the end, whereinto. They after passed up the River, and came to Tiembus, where the men are tall and great, their women alway deformed, with scratched and blowy faces. The Tiembus could make five thousand men. Of the Spaniards were not left five hundred in a small time; and Mendoza dyeth, returning homewards. The Curenda, the next people, are like the Tiembus. The Macnerendus live only on fish, and a little flesh. There they killed a Serpent five and twenty foot long, and as bigge as a man. The Saluafico goe stark naked, and live only on fish, flesh, and honey. The Curemigas are of huge stature: the men bore a hole in their nose, in which they wear a Parrots feather. The women paint their faces with indeleble lines. The Carios Countrey is large, neere to the Brasilians in Rites and Site. They goe naked: they will sell; the father, his daughter; the husband, his wife; the brother his sister. The price of a woman is a Hatchet, Koife, or such like. They eat such as they take in their warres, and then devour them with great solemnities. The Lampere made neere unto their Towne, Pits, with sharpe flakes set vp in them, covered with sticks and earth: these they made for the Spaniards, but in a confused flight fell therein themselves. Here the Spaniards built the Towne of Assumption, which Horera saith, hath four hundred Spanish households, and three thousand Mestizos. The King of the Scherues, attended with twelve thousand men, met the Spaniards, and gaue them friendly entertainment, with dancing, musick, and feasting. The women goe naked, and paint themselves as artificially as any of our Painters could doe: they wear Carpets of Cotton, with the figures of Indian beasts.

- 30 The King asked the Spaniards, What they sought who answered, Silver and Gold. He then gaue them a silver Crowne, which hee said he had taken in the warres, which hee had waged with the Amazones, that dwelt two moneths journey thence. Of these Amazones the Indians told the same things that Orellana told of, neere that River, which hath received name of this supposition.

- The Spaniards with some of the Scherues for their Guides, set forth for this Amazonian Discouery, but were encountred by the way with hote waters, in which they waded vp to the waste, and so continued diuers dayes, till they came to a Nation called Orbisense, who were then infected with a Pestilence, caused by famine; which famine the Grashoppers had effected, two yeeres together, eating vp all the fruits which nature or husbandry had provided for their sustenance.

- Thus these Martiall and Venerean warres of the Spaniards, wanted food to hold out further toward the Amazons, if there were any such people, and that they were not, as before I said, the warre-like Wives, or haply some gallant Viragoes, that by themselves would let the World see what women could doe; but yet I cannot subscribe to the rest of their storie.

- But I am wearie of leading you any further in this Discouerie of this great River and the neere Inhabitants, seeing little is observed in our Author of their Religions. Some of these barbarous Nations, he saith, hanged vp the haire skin of theiraine Enemies in their Temples or Houses of devotion: this people is called Separi. To give you a Catalogue of the names of the Indian Nations that inhabited these parts, would be but tedious. These Journeys of the Spaniards were to see what Gold, and not what Gods, the Indians had. They passed vp through the Land into Peru.

- Betweene Peru & these more Easterly parts, are the Hills Andis or Audes, which lift vp their snowie tops vnto the cloudes, and reach vnto the Magellane Straits. In them inhabit many ferce Nations, bordering vpon the Nations of Brail and Plata. The Ciraguans, the Viracans, the Toui, the Varai. These last exercise their children vnto Armes betimes, vnto them they commit their Captiues, for trial of their bloody forwardnesse; and he which as one blow can kill a Captiue, is of the greatest hopes, and rewarded for his encouragement. To this end they name their children Tigre, Lion, that their names might reach them the like beastly fure. At the new & full Moone they wound themselves with sharpe bones, to inure themselves to things of war. They weepe in the entertainment of a friend, as the Brasilians doe. In seenteene degrees stands the Spanish Citie of Holy Crosse of the Mountaine.

The River Vapai in thole Vall. yes rifeeth and falleth as Nilus doth. There is a Brooke at Holy Croffe of a wonderfull nature: it is but little about two yards broad, and shallow withall, noe running aboue a league, but is drunke vp of the thirfte lands. Yet doth this Brooke prouide the Citie water, and three sorts of good fish, and that in great plenty from the end of February to the end of May. At other times there are few. They vse diuers meanes of shewing their heads, which, they say, they learned of one Paucum. In the womens lying in, the man keeps his bed, as is said of the Brasilians.

guzes.

More towards the East dwell the Itatini people, which call themselves Garay, that is, Warriors; and others, Tapuis or Slaues. The language of the Varrai is common to all these Nations with the Brasilians, that as in the other World, Latine, Sclauon, and Arabike, so in that New World the Varay, Cuscan, and Mexican Language, will generally serue a mans turne.

The Kingdome of Tucuma stretcheth two hundred leagues betwene Chili, Brasill, Holy Croffe, and Paraguay. The Spaniards haue therein five Colonies. It is a plaine Country. The Paraguay inhabit along the River so called, whereof they take name. From Plata Southwards is the great Region of Chica, washed on the South, East, and West by the Sea. The Inhabitants are called Patagones.

The Spaniards^b which with Magellane first discovered the Straits, saw Giants on this Coast, of which he carried away one with him to Sea, where after, for want of sufficient food, he died. Edward ¹ Cliffe, that wrote Master Winters Voyage, (who first of all others, returned out of the Straits by the same way homewards) because he saw on this Coast men of common stature, excepted against that report of Giants, as a Giant-like report, exceeding the stature and measure of Truth. But (besides that some of our owne^k at another time measured the print of mens feete eighteene inches in the Sands) Oliuer ¹ Nort in his World compassing Voyage, had three of his men slain by men of admirable stature, with long haire, not farre from Port Desire, about feuen and forty degrees of Southerly latitude, and after, in the Magellane Straits discomfited a band of Sauiages, which neither would yeeld, nor flee from their wiues and children, which were in a Cause iust by, till every man was slain. Foure Boyes the Hollanders carried away: one of which, learning their Language, told them of three Families, or Tribes, in those parts of ordinary stature, and of a fourth, which were Giants, ten or eleuen foote high, which warred vpon the former.

Sebalt de Weert being detayned five moneths in the Straits by foule weather, sent his men to fish for their provision (which exceedingly failed them) who there were suddenly assailed by feuen Canoas of Giants, which they guessed to be so high, as is mentioned: who being put to flight by their Peeces, fled to land, and plucked vp Trees, in their rude manner barricadoing and fortifying themselves against the further pursuit of the Hollanders, who were no lesse glad that they were rid of such company.

These men, both Giants and others, went either wholly naked, or so clothed, as they seemed not to dread the cold, which is yet there so violent, that besides the Mountaintops, alway covered with Snow; their very Summer, in the middlest thereof, freeth them not from Ice, Yea, at that time of the yeere those Hollanders encountered an Island of Ice in the Sea, which the cold Aire had there mounted and maintained in despite of Neptunes rage, or the Sunnes volley of hot, in his neereft approach. The Trees in these parts, and the men (it seemeth) are naturally fortified against those Colds; the one (as is said) alwayes in manner naked: the other alwayes clothed, out-brauing the Winters violence in their Summer-like Greene Linery, seeming to sloop vnder the burthen of continuall Frosts and Snowes, and in a naturall wisdom clothe themselves, and hold their leaves the furer.

m Th. Candish.
M. A. Kniuet.

Thole Giantly men^m about Port Desire, when they die, are brought to the Cliffes, and there buried, with their Bowes, Arrows, Darts, and all their (almost no) substance. Master Kniuet writeth, that he saw footings at Port Desire as bigge as fuire of ours: and two men newly buried, one of which was foueteen spans long. He also saw one in Brasill, taken by Aluase ¹ Diaz, a Spaniard, being by foule weather driuen out of Saint Iulians, which was a young man, and yet about thirteene spans high. They goe naked, and are faire and well proportioned. At Port Famine in the Straits, He saith, they saw some dwarfish Sauiages, not about fiue or six spans high, which were thicke and strong, with wide mouthes (almost to the eares)

e sres) they ate their meat a little scorched, besmearing their faces and breasts with the blood running out of their mouths : they lay young feathers to this blood , which glues them to their bodies. Foure or five thousand traded with them at the Poles end. The cold is so extreme, that Henry Barwell became bald therewith, so continuing a yeere or two. One Harrie a Goldsmith, blowing his frozen nose , cast it with his fingers into the fire : and our Author himselfe going on shore, and returning wet on his feet, the next morning pulled off his toes, together with his stockings, from his benumbed feete , which were as blacke as sootes, without feeling, and were after cured with words or charmes. Every day some died of cold: They saw there a kind of beast bigger then a Horse, with eares about a span long; and a taile like a Cow, called Tapetywelson : he saw the like in Manicongo. The Sauages about the Straits feed (as both the same Author, and the Hollanders report) on raw flesh , and other filthy food, and are Man-eaters.

§. III.

Of the Magellan Straits.

20 IT is no small credit to our Nation and Navigation, that these Straits haue more enlarged themselves, and giuen oftner and freer passage to vs, then to any other. Drake n swamme thorow; Winter both passed and returned; and so did Carter in the Pinnasse, as before is said; Candish passed, but returned (as Drake had done) about the World in his circuit. The Delight of Brissoll entred them, and with small delight spent sixe weekes in them : and Captaine Davies, companion of Master Candish in his last Voyage, three times entred the South Sea , which three times forced him backe into the embracing armes of the vntrustie Straits. Some others haue attempted , but not attained them, as Fenton and Ward, and the Voyage set forth in the yeere of our Lord 1586, by the Earle of Cumberland. The Land on Larbord side (saith Sir Richard Hawkins) is without doubt llands, low, sandy, broken : on Starbord is very mountaynous, the lower Mountaynes whereof, although they be for their height wonderfull, yet (as we haue said of the differing staturs of the men) they haue more Giantly ouer-lookers, with Snowie lockes, and Cloudy lookes; betweene them may be numbred three Regions of Clouds. These Straits are fourescore and ten leagues thorow, of vnequall breadth, in the narrowest place a league over. The mouth is in two and fifty degrees and an halfe, or as Sir Richard Hawkins obserued in 52. degrees, 50. minutes. His company killed a thousand Penguins a day : this is a Fowle like a Goose hauing no feathers on their bodies but downe : it cannot flye, but will runne as fast as most men, feeds on fish and grasse, and harbours in Berries. Seales are many in these parts, which will fall dead with a blow on the snout (some ascribe the same of the Crocodile) otherwise not easily pierced with a Sword, or fearing a Musket-shot. He saith they are like Lions, that they sleepe on Land, and haue euer one to watch : which is also reported of the Moris. Hee addeth of the Canoes of the Sauages there, that they are made artificially of the rindes of Trees, lowed together with the finnes of Whales, sharpe at both ends, and turning vp.

When these Straits were first discovered, they named them the Straie of Valleria, because the ship called the Valleria first descried them; a name sily ascribed both to the Straits and Ship; the one first obtaining the Marine victory, & encompassing the compasse of the earth; the other still remainyng the onely knowne passage, whereby that Sea-victory can be attained. But the name loone passed from the Ship to the Generall, of whom still it is called the Straie of Magellan, or Magellan.

30 The Voyage of Sir Francis Drake so vexed the Spaniard, that hee sent Pedro Sarmiento to inhabit there, that he might prohibit other Nations to passe that way : but Tempest and Famine hating the Spanish insolence (whose ambitious designs alway aimed at a Plus ultra) brought them to a Plus ultra indeed, further then euer they had designed; diuers of the ships (which at first were three and twentie, with three thousand and five hundred men) perishing in the deuouring iawes of the Ocean, and others in their selfe deuouring mawes of Hunger, which eate them vp with not eating. The Name of Iesui, and Philips Citie, were their two newly erected Colonies, peopled with foure hundred men and thirty women, which by famine were brought to three and twenty persons, when Master Candish tooke Hernando one of that company, in his prosperous Voyage; another, who had maintained himselfe by his Peere, and liued in a house alone a long time, was taken by the Delight of Brissoll, two yeeres after. The English gaue a name fitting to this distressed Citie, calling it Port Famine.

The last Voyage of Master Candish proved unfortunate, both in the losse of himselfe, and many men: the blacke Pinnasse was lost in the South Sea: the Desire returned, but lost divers of her men, surpris'd (as was thought) and deuoured by the Sauages, nere to Port Desire. The Sauages heere presented themselves, throwing dust in the Aire, leaping, &c. and either had Vizards on their faces, like Dogges faces, or else their faces were Doggestated.

I haue seene a Copie of a Discourse written by Master Candish himselfe to Sir Tristram Gorges, whom he made sole Executor of his last Will: where he thus affirmeth: The running away of the Villaine Davis, was the death of me, and decay of the whole action, and but onely treasure in running from me, the utter ruine of all. Hee complains also of mutinies; and that by South-west, and West South-west winds, he was driven from thore foure hundred leagues, and from fifty to forty degrees; that he was taken with Winter and stormes in the Straits, and such Frosts and Snowes in May, as he neuer saw the like, so that in leuen or eight dayes forty dyed, and seuentie sickened. Dauies in the Desire, and his Pinnasse, left him in forty leuen. The Ro-bucke kept with him to thirtie fixe. Captaine Barker transgressing his directions, was slaine, with hue and twenty men, on Land, and the Boat lost; and soone after 25 others followed the like fortunes: ten others, by the cowardise of the Master of the Ro-bucke, forsaken at Spirito Sancto, which stole away with fixe monethes victuals for an hundred and twenty persons, they being but forty fixe. A Sebastians happened another mutinie by treacherie of an Irish man (here Master Komet and other sicke persons were set on thore.) Intending againe for the Straits, he beate, and was beaten vp and downe the frowning Seas, and came within two leagues of Saint Helena, but could not attaine it; and professeth he had rather haue put himselfe on an Island, if hee could not attaine it; and professeth hee had rather haue put himselfe on an Island, if he could haue found one which the Charis place in eight degrees, then returne: and now was scarce able to hold a Pen when he wrote this. Hee dyed homewards. Since that, Sir Richard Hakluyt passed the Straits into the South Sea, of which his Voyage I haue read a long Discourse written by himselfe. Hee fell into the hands of the Spaniards, which tooke him in the South Sea.

Let me adde this touching these Straits, that possession thereof was formally taken by tursie and twigs after the English manner, in the first Voyage, Captaine Drake deliuering the said lesin to Captaine Winter, in the name of Queene Elizabeth and her Successors. This did Captaine Winter himselfe relate to me at Batby in the presence of many (desiring to haue it published) this last September 1618. forty yeres after the performance, with many other particulars of that his Voyage.

CHAP. VII.

Of Terra Australis and Chili.

3 Noter.

S for the Land on the Southerne side of the Straits, it is called the Land of Fire, either because the Discouersers saw fire thereabouts, or because that cold Climate so much needeth fire. More Easterly against the Cape of Good Hope, is the Land Terra di Fila. This Land about the Straits is not perfectly discouered, whether it be Continew, or Ilands. Some take it for Continew, and extend it more in their imagination then any mans experience, towards thoe Ilands of Salomon, and New Guinee, esteeming (of which there is great probability) that Terra Australis, or the Southerne Continent, may, for the largenesse thereof, take vp a fitt place in order, and the first in greatnesse, in the diuision and parting of the whole World.

Enquiries of Lang. and Re-
fig. 4. 14.

Master Bremerwood our Learned Countreiman (as is before obserued) perswadeth himselfe that it is as large as the Easterne Continent, which containeth Europe, Africa, and Asia altogether. His reasons are, that touching latitude, it is knowne to approach nere (if not on this side) the Equator; and touching Longitude, to runne along in a continuall circuit about the Earth, fronting both the other Continents. Another reason, which hee deemeth of more certaine importance, is this; that the Land to the North side of the Line in the other Continents of the Old and New World, is at least foure times as large as that part of them which lyeth to the South. Now for as much as the face of the Sea is leuell (so hee argueth) being therefore called Æquor & Æquus, and secondly, the Earth being equally pyced on both sides of her owne Centre; and thirdly, this Centre being but one to the Water, and the Earth, euen poother then the Centre of the World; it followeth thereupon, that the Earth should, in answerable measure and proportion, liue it selfe, and appaere about the face of the Sea, on the

the South side of the Line, as it doth on the North. And consequently, that what is wanting in the South parts of the other Continents towards the counterailing of the North parts (which is about three five parts of both the other Continents layed together) must of necessity be supplied in this Contient of the South.

Lopez Xao writeth, That the Gouvernours which the King of Spaine sendeth for Peru and New Spaine, haue a custome to discover new Countries. The Licentiate Castro being Gouvernour of Peru, sent forth a Fleet from Lima, which sayling 800. leagues Westward, found certain Lands in 11. degrees to the South of the Equinoctiall, with a kind of people of yellowish complexion, and all naked. Here they found Hogs, Dogges, Hens, Clowes, Ginger, Cinamon, and some Gold. The first Land they named Isabella, the greatest Gondalcanal, on the Coast whereof they sayled 150. leagues, where they took a Towne, and some gaines of Gold hangd vp in the Houses. They burnt their Towne, because they had in a sudden surprize killed fourteene of their men. They spent fourteene moneths in this Discouery, and named them the Islands of Salomon, that by that name men might bee further induc'd to discover and inhabit them, imagining that Salomon had his Gold from thence.

None of Guinea was discovered by Villalobos, sent from New Spaine in the yeere 1543. going to discover the Moluccas. Herrera saith, it was discovered by Aluaro de Saucedo, Anno 1527. and the Islands of Salomon in the yeere 1567. by Lope Garcia de Castro, which are many and great, but eighteene principall; some of them 300. leagues in compasse, 1200. others of 100. and of fifty, and lesse: the Inhabitants, some blacke, some white, some browne: the greatest, named Saint Isabel, 150. leagues in length, and eighteene in breadth: Saint Nicholas 150. leagues in compasse. The Inhabitants are blacke of hue and wittie. The Spaniards haue coasted it 700. leagues, and yet cannot tell whether it bee an Ile or Continent.

Hesilius Gerardus hath largely set forth the Petition or Memoriall of Peter Ferdinandez de Quir, vnto the King of Spaine, about his discouery of those Southerne vnknowne Islands, for the Plantation of the same. I haue since seen this his Supplication to the King in Spanish, with other memorials ⁴ thereof, wherein he saith that hee was sent with two ships to discover the Islands of Salomon, and taking his course about the height of the Magellan Straits, discovered a mayne Land, and sayled eight hundred Leagues on the Coast, till hee came in fiftene degree Southward from the Line, where he found a fruitfull Countrey. He discovered a Bay, into which fall two great Rivers, where they purpose to settle a Plantation. Order was taken that he should presently be sent from Peru, with commission to take vp 1200. men, with shipping and other necessities, and as many the yeere after out of New Spaine. He found out three and twenty Islands, 230. leagues from Mexico; Taumaco, Chicayma (where are great Oysters with Pearles) Guaytopo (the people whereof are as white as the Spaniards) Tucopio, Ponofono, &c. They pray to the Deuill, which hath conference with an Indian vsense, from a piece of wood; and to him and all the rest many times by night, he toucheth the face and breast with cold touches, but they could neuer learne what he was, He foretold of the Spaniards coming.

This Pedro Fernandez de Quir, fourteene yeeres busied himselfe to no small endamage-ment of his state and person about this Discouerie. The length thereof he equallith vnto all Europe, and as much of Asia, as thence extendeth to the Caspian Sea: and for the wealth and riches, he calls it a Terrestriall Paradise. The Inhabitants, hee affirmeth, are innumerable, some white, some like the Mulator, and some other wise, in colour and habit of body diversified. They neither haue King nor Lawes, nor Arts. They are diuided, and waite one vpon another, with Bowes, Arrows, and other weapons, all of wood. They haue their Oratories and places of Buriall. Their Bread is made of three sorts of Roots. They haue varietie of Fruits, Cocos, Almonds of foure sorts, Pome-citrons, Apples, Dates: there are also Swine, Goats, Hens, Partridges, and other Fowles; and as the Indians report, Kine and Buffals. He saw amongst them Silver and Pearles, others added Gold: and the Coast Counties seemed to promise great wealth within Land: Many Rivers, Sugar Canes, Bayes, Hauens, and other commodities of Lands and Seas, making shew of another China, the ayre very wholesome and temperate.

He tooke possession thereof, in the name of the King, and set vp a Crosse and a Chappell, in the name of the Lady of Loretto. These Regions then euen as high as the Equinoctiall. When this Discouery was made he mentioneth not; onely hee saith to the King for employment therein. It is rightly called Terra Australia Incognita, and therefore I will not take vpon me to be your Guide: in another sense one of our Countymen hath wittily and learnedly (according to his woorde) described this Countrey, and paralleled therewith the Countreys of Europe, and hath let vs see that wee are acquainted in those Coasts too much, and need a Pilot or Guide to conduct vs out of them.

But let vs come backe to our Straits of Magellan, that we may coast from thence, and visit the Countries of Chili and Peru: for of the Westerne borders of Chica, girt in betwene the salt waues, and cold Hills, little can be said fitting our purpose.

Of Chili.

Hauiug sailed out of the Straits, we haue a wide Sea before vs, and on our right hand the Country is so barren and cold, that I would not hold the Reader in any cold or tedious Narration thereof. Iohn Ellis, which was with Sir Richard Hawkins in his South-sea Voyage, reporteth, That being past the Straits, they sayled North-west, and by North, forty leagues into the Sea, and then due North, till they came at Mocha in 3^d degrees 30. minutes, and thence held their course Northerly to Saint Maries in thirtie fixe, and so to Val Paraiso in thirtie three: Where they made good purchase and prize, if they could haue kept it. From hence they came as farre as Arecca in two and twentie, and so passed the Line to Tacame, where they were taken. But our trauell must bee by Land (as was theirs after, against their will) where wee first encounter with Chili. This name ^f some extend euen to the Straits, where we haue placed Chica, and the Patagones & others straiten it in shorter bound's; betwene Chica on the South; Chirchas and Callao on the North; Plata on the East; and the Sea on the West: it is called Chili of the chilling cold, for so the word is said to signifie. The Hills with their high lookes, cold blasts, and couetous encrochings, drue it almost into the Sea: only a narrow Valley vpon lowly submission to her swelling Aduersaries, obtayneth roome ^h for five and twentie leagues of breadth, where it is most, to extend her spacious length of two hundred leagues on that shore: and to withstand the Oceans furie, she payes a large tribute of many streames, which yet in the Night-time shee can hardly performe; the miserable Hills in their French charitie, not imparting that naturall bountie and durie, till that great Arbitrer the Sunne ariseth, and sendeth Day with his Light-horse-troupe of Sunbeames, to breake vp those Icie Dungeons, and Snowie Turrets, wherein Night, the Mountaynes Goler, had locked the innocent Waters. Once, the poore Valley is so hampered betwixt the tyrannicall Meteors and Elements, as that the often ⁱ quaketh with feare, and in these chill Feuers shaketh off, and loseth her best Ornaments.

Araucana, one of her fairest Townes, by such disaster in the yeere 1582. fell to the ground. And sometimes the Neighbour Hills are infected with this Pestilent Feuer, and tumble downe dead in the Plaine, thereby fo amzing the seafarrell Rivers, that they runne quite out of their Channels to seek new; or else stand still with wonder, and the motus heate failing, fall into an vncouth Tympanie, their bellies swelling into spacious and standing Lakes: the tydes seeing this, hold backe their course, and dare not approach their sometime beloued streames, by diuers miles distance; so that betwixt these two stooles the ships come to ground indeed. The sickle Earth thus hauing her mouth stopped, and her stomacke ouerlaid, forceth new moutes, whence the vomitech streames of oppressing waters.

I speake not of the Beasts and Men, which in these Ciuill warres of Nature must needs be subiect to deuouring miserie. These are the strange effects of cold and Earthquakes, not strange in Chili, where we are now arriued. The people are fierce and cruell, and some (as is reported) Giants. Almagro, one of the first Conquerours of Peru, in hope of Gold, passed from thence hither: but was deceived by the Indians which led him the wrong way. In passing the Deserts of Chili, the Aire is so piercing (as before is obserued) that men fall downe dead, or else lose their members suddenly, in manner without feeling. Lorenzo Cordoba the General, one of Acostas Acquaintance, had lost three or foure toes, which fell off without any paine: many of his Armie dyed, whose bodies at his returne he found lying there without stinke or corruption; and one Boy remained aliue, which had maintayned himselfe by eating Horse-flesh. The Horses also were found whole, as Apollonius writeth, and the men sitting on them, as if they had beene aliue, with the Bridles in their hand.

In six and thirty degrees is that famous Valley of Arauco, which defend their persons and freedom, maugre all the force and furie of the Spaniards. These killed two of Sir Francis Drake men, and wounded himselfe: they destroyed also three and twenty Hollanders, of the company of Cordes; both which they did in detestation of the Spaniards, of whom they esteemed the English and Dutch, because of their Apparell. They haue destroyed many of the Spaniards: they tooke the City Baldiaua in the yeere 1599. and slue the Spaniards. Twice before, if not oftner, they had burnt and spoyled it. Yea, Baldiaua himselfe, the first Conquerour of Chili (for Almagro stayed not) and of whom that Citie receiued name, was taken by these Indians, his Horse being slaine vnder him. They bid him feare nothing, hee should haue Gold enough: and making a great Banquet for him, brought in the last seruice, which was a Cup full of molten Gold, which they forced him to drinke, saying: Now glut thy selfe with Gold. This Baldiaua had entred Chili with foure hundred Horse, and easily conquered that part which had beene subiect to the Kings of Peru: but the other, which was the richer part, held out. The Spaniards sent them word, they were the Sonnes of God, and came came to teach them the Word of God : and if they would not yeeld to them , they would shoote fire among them. The Indians would try this argument in the field, and there the great Ordinance so well pleaded the cause, that they beleued and subiected themselves. The Spaniards employed them in the Mines, whence they gathered such plenty of Gold, that others had twenty thousand, but Baldina himselfe had three hundred thousand Pieces by the yeere.

The Indians after, perceiving the Spaniards to be but mortall men, rebelled ; and whereas they had vsed to carry grasse into the Fort for the Spaniards Horses, they conveyed in the same, Weapons, by which means being assisted by their fellows without, they wonne the Fort; and when Baldina would haue recovered it, he lost himselfe, as you haue heard.

Ever since, this hostility hath continued, and the Araucans are the Lifts and Barres to the Spanish Conquests. Their Countrey (to consider Arauco by it selfe) is but small, about twenty leagues in length : neither could the Ingas or Kings of Peru conquer it : their manner of Warre is much like the Christians, in pitched Battels placing their Bowmen among their ranks of Pikemen. To speake of other Townes which the Spaniards haue built in this Coast, is not our purpose. When they sacked Baldina, Anno 1599. they scalded the Spaniards with the like golden Cups powred hot downe their throats : they cut off the Images heads, triumphing over the Spaniards Gods as they termed them. They were then at the siege of Imperiall, another Spanish Citie, hauing before taken Baldina. They plucke out the hearts of the Spaniards which they kill, and drinke in their skuls.

Lately the Hollanders haue not only taken the Bay and Towne of All Saints, on the Easterne shore of Brasil, but are also reported to haue done much harme to the Spaniards in Peru, the particulars whereof partly I haue expressed in the second part of my Pilgrimes after the Relation of the Amboyne Tragedy, partly haue left to more full discouery by Time the Mother of Truth.

Likewise since the last Edition of this Worke, that Expedition of Mayre and Schouten round about the Globe hath bene published (and in the second Booke of my Pilgrimes is extant) in which the Coasts of Terra Australis are best notified. But let mee giue the Reader warning that Sir Francis Drake had discovered those Straits in 57. being forced by tempest out of the South Sea thorow them : and named that Elizabeth Island in Anno 1578. which these Hollanders called Barnesder, as in an old Map in his Maiesties priuy Gallery, dedicated to Queene Elizabeth is yet to be seene.

Of the Conquest of Peru by the Spaniards, and of their Ingas or Emperours.

§. I.

Of Pizarro, his Discouery, and taking the King of Peru.

P*rancisco Pizarro* was the Bastard sonne of Gonzales, a Captaine in the Kingdom of Nauarre : he was borne at Trufiglio, and exposed at the Church doore ; and none being found that would giue him the brest, he was nourished by sucking a Sow for certaine dayes : at last his Father acknowledged him, and when hee was growne, let him to keepe his Swine ; which being one day strayed and lost, hee durst not returne home for feare, and therefore went to Siuill, and thence passed to the Indies. In this Swinish education hee had not so much as learned to reade. Hee went to Vraua with Alonso de Hoieda ; with Palmea, to the Discouery of the South Sea ; and with Pedrarus de Anila, Gouverneur of Golden Castile, to Panama. In this Citie were diuers which afffected Golden Discoueries. Pedrarus intended Nicaragua ; but Diego di Almagro, Hernando Lucht, or Luques, a rich Priest, and this Pizarro, now growne rich, agreed to ioyne their Purfes and best industry to search Southwards, where they had heard was store of wealth. They provided a Naue, and two hundred and twenty Souldiers, and Almagro with Pizarro, in the yeere 1525. or (as Bonzo hath it) 1526. set forward.

Almagro and he parting company, Pizarro, offering to land his men, was wounded and forced to retire to Panama: Almagro in another place had better success, the Indians vying him kindly, and giving him three thousand Ducats of Gold. But seeking to land in that place of Pizarro's misfortune, hee was set upon by the Indians, and lost in fight one of his eyes. They meet at Panama, and having cured their wounds, repaire their forces, and with two hundred men, and many slaues, set saile, and land in another place, but are repelled to their ships by the Inhabitants, and goe to Gorgon, a little Island, fixe miles from the Continent, where Pizarro stayed, whiles Almagro went backe for better supply. At his returne Pizarro and his company were almost starved, but being refreshed, and all of them now together attempting the Indian shore, were repelled with losse to the Ile, which they called to Galli. Almagro is againe sent backe for new aide; the Souldiers would haue passed with him, and cused this Land and their Couetousnesse. Pizarro and his Company agree to search further, and having sayled five hundred miles, came to Chira, a Prouince of Peru, and taking some of the Inhabitants to learne them the Spanish Tongue, returned to Tumbez.

Having learned of the Indians the great wealth of those parts, he set one Peter a Candian, on shore, who was kindly entertayned of the Gouernour, that shewed him a Temple dedicated to the Sunne, wherein were vnpeakable riches; which when he related to Pizarro at his returne, the Spaniards goe backe with these newes to Panama. His two fellowes, Almagro, and the Priest (called after the Poole, because he had spent his estate on this businesse, and at last was excluded by his companions) agreed with Pizarro to goe to Spaine to get licence for this Conquest; and borrowed one thousand and five hundred Ducats, to fee him forth. Pizarro seeks and obtaynes this Facultie only for himselfe, neuer mentioning his Partners, and with Letters Patents retueroeth to Panama with his foure Brethren, Hernandez, Gonzalez, Iohn, and Martin de Alcantara his Brother by the Mothers side. His two Partners were not a little grieved, when they heard how things passed; but after much strife, Almagro and Pizarro became friends, and agreed to communicate Peres and Titles. Pizarro goes before with a hundred and fiftie Souldiers (taking order that Almagro should follow with all the strength he could make) and Lands in Peru, a River so called, which gave name to those mighty and rich Prouinces, because the Spaniards by this way discovered them. They went by land, enduring much misery by the way to Coachi; where they were well refreshed. But a disease worse then the French Poxe there warred vpon them, called Pari. Yet did Pizarro hold on his resolution; he passed ouer to Puna, where the Gouernour interceded the Spaniards well, till the abusing of their Wiues caused the Indians to take Armes, and so made their riches become a prey to the preuayling Spaniards.

There had Pizarro the first intelligence of Atabaliba. The Gouernour of this land, so fastidious his ialousie, cut off the Noses, the Members, and the Armes of his Eunuches, or Keepers of his women. Pizarro sent to Tumbez six hundred Prisoners, which the Gouernour of this Land had taken of the party of Atabaliba, who at that time mayntained Warre against his Brother Guscar about the Souerainty, and this Gouernour had taken Guscar's part. This ciuill discord was much to the Spaniards aduantage.

Pizarro sent three Messengers to Tumbez to demand peace and safe entrance, but they (not withstanding the freedom of their Captiues) deliuered them to the Priests to bee sacrificed to their Idoll of the Sunne. Hee taketh Tumbez and sacketh the Temple and Citie.

From thence he proceeded in his way to Caximalea: and Guscar sent some vnto him with great promises to demand his aide against his Brother Atabaliba: soone after Atabaliba sent one to him, to charge him to returne to his ships. Pizarro answereth, That hee came not to hurt any, but for their good, as his Emperour had giuen him in charge; nor could hee now, (being the Embassadour of the Pope and Emperour, Lords of the World) retorne without great dishonour, before he had seene his Royall person, and communicated to him such instructions as might be good for his body and soule.

As he passed the Prouince of Chira, the Lords thereof prouoked him against Atabaliba, who had lately conquered their Countries. And on the Riuer of Chira hee founded the Colonie of Saint Michael, for the safe keeping of his spoyle, and for his ships. Hee marcheth on to Caximalea, and sendeth Messengers on horse-back, to giue him notice of his coming. This strange Beast made the Indians afraid, but Atabaliba was nothing moued therewith more moued to see those bearded men giue him so little reuerence.

Atabaliba sent Pizarro a paire of shoes, cut and gilded, that (as hee pretended) he might know him: others thought, that hee might bee knowne and designed to imprisonment or slaughter.

The next day the King was carried, as in solemne triumph, vpon mens shoulders, guarded with five and twentie thousand Indians in rich pompe and magnificence.

The huge Treasures taken by the Spaniards.

a *Lop. The gold & silver which Atabaliba paid came to 4605670. *Duc.*f Blas Valera saith 4. Cusco, & saith he promised 4. times as much h He kept Cusco with 30000. Indians.

i They after burne him.

He next day the Spaniards scowred about for spoyle, and found five thousand Women of the Kings with much treasure. Atabaliba was much grieved with his imprisonment, especially in regard of the chaine which they put vpon him. And when they had spent much reasoning about his rancome, a Souldier named Soto (of whom you have heard in our History of Florida) said vnto him, Wilt thou giue vs this house full of Gold and Silver thus high b? lifting vp his Sword, and making a stroke vpon the wall. Atabaliba answered, that if they would giue him liberty to send into his Kingdome, he would fulfill their demand. Whereat the Spaniards much maruelling, gaue him three monethes time; but he had filled the house in two moneths and a halfe: a matter scarce credible, yet most true: For I (saith Lopez Vaz) know about twenty men that were there at that time, who all affirme, that it was about ten Millions of Gold and Silver. That Spanishe Captain in Romahu relateth, that he promised to giue them so much Gold as should reach vp to that marke, a span higher then a tall man could reach, the Roome being five and twenty foote long, and fifteene wide: and the Governour asking how much Silver he would giue; he answered, he would fill vp an inclosure which should be made there, with Vessels of Plate, for his rancome, which was promised him. This Captain was appointed Guardian of that Golden roome, and saw it melted, and reckoneth vp the parcels and particulars that were brought in Vessels and Plates of Gold and Silver. And the Governour sent to the Emperor his fifth part, & parted the rest: to euery 4 Footman 4800. pieces of Gold (which make 7208. Ducates) to euery Horseman twice as much, besides the advantages that belonged to any: To Almagros company (which were 150. that came after the victory) hee gaue 25000. Pezos, and gaue 2000. to the Inhabitants of Saint Michel. Many other gifts hee gaue to Merchants and others: and yet after the Governour was gone, there was brought more Gold then that had beene shared. This also is affirmed by Xerez, that ten or twelue dayes after Pizarro was gone, the Spaniards which had beene sent to Cusco, brought as much Gold (which was taken from the wals of a House, and Roofe of a Temple in Cusco, being Plates of ten or twelue pound weight apiece, and other like) as amounted to two Millions and a halfe, and being molten, proued on Million 326539. Pezos of fine Gold and 51610. Markes of Silver. He addeth that Atabaliba was by sound of Trumpet freed from his promise; but was kept still vnder guard for the Spaniards securitie.

Howbeit they killed him notwithstanding, and in a night strangled him. But God the righteous Iudge, seeing this villanous act, suffered none of those Spaniards to die by the course of Nature, but brought them to euill and shamefull ends.

During the time of Atabaliba's imprisonment, his Captaines had taken his Brother Guascar, s who spake with Captain Soto, and promised, that if they would restore him to his liberty, and to his Kingdome, he would fill vp the roome at Caximalla to the Roofe, which was thrice as much as Atabaliba had promised: and added that his Father Guaynacapa on his death-bed had commanded him to be friend to the white and bearded men, which should come and rule in those parts. Atabaliba hearing of these things, faimed himselfe forrowfull for the death of Guascar, whom he had heard that Quisquiz, his Captaine had slaine: this hee did, to try how the Spaniards would take his death; which when he saw they little respected, hee sent and caused him to bee slaine indeed. This was done in the yeere of our Lord God 1533. He had before slaine another of his Brethren and drunke in his Skul, as hee had sworn to deale with Atabaliba.

The Indians hereupon hid the Treasures of Gold, Silver, and Gemmes, that were in Cusco and other places, and had belonged to Guaynacapa, which were far more then euer came to the Spaniards hands. Chilicuchima, one of Atabaliba's chiefe Captaines, which visited him in his imprisonment with great reuerence (for hee and the chiefe of his company laid burdens on their shoulders, and fo entered into his presence, lifting vp both his hands to the Sunne, with thanks to him for this sight of his Lord, and then with much crouching, kissed his hands and feet) told the Spaniards, that Quisquiz, another chiefe Captaine had conveyed away those Treasures of Guaynacapa, or Cusco, the elder, as hee calls him: and being forced by torments of fire put to him, confessed where Atabaliba had a Tent full of Plate and Treasure. The Spanishe Captaine which reports this, saith, that he saw a great house full of Vessels of Gold, and other pieces (as a Shepherd and his Sheepe all of Gold as great as the liuing) which were not shared amongst them: and he saw 10080. Pezos of the Emperours fifth part, ouer and above that which Pizarro sent by his Brother; so that both Cesar and Souldier were deceiued. He heard Atabaliba say, that in an Iland in a Riuer of Collas was a very great House all covered with Gold, and the beames with all whatsoeuer in the house, was covered with plates of Gold, yea, and the pavement also. But in such a diuided State, where were so many Indian Captaines of the Two Brethren Inguas, the Spaniards being but a handfull, and ielous of each other, the Countrey being so wide and rich, that they could not so much as see and take view of the same in short space: there was ealie opportunity offered to conuey away the greatest part of their Treasures: especially Religion adding a helping hand both to conuey and to concale from them which thus spoiled their Temples, Idols, and Altars. The Spaniards so abounded with Gold, that they would giue ^k 1300. (one gaue 1500.) Castilians or Pecos for a Horse 60. for a small Runlet of Wine; forty for a paire of shoes; likewise a Sword, and other things after the same rate: and Debtors sought out their Creditors, with Indians laden with Gold, from house to house to pay them: They carried into Spaine one Vessell of Gold, another of Silver, each sufficient wherein to boyle a Cow, besides a huge Eagle, and other like Images, as an Idoll of Gold as bigge as a Child of foure yeeres old: Drums of Gold: and at the conquest of Cusco, Xeres tels of many Images of women of Gold, and as great, which they worshipped, and diuers like of Silver; Sheepe also in like pourtrature, of fine Gold; all well wrought.

The Kings of Peru, their originall proceedings and treasures.

He quarrell betwene the two Brethren, grew about their Inheritances: Cuscar succeeding his Father in the rest; and Quito being assigned to Atabaliba, who seizing on Tumbamba, a rich Prouince, prouoked his Brothers forces against him, which tooke him prisoner. But he escaping to Quito, made the people believe that the Sun had turned him into a Serpent, and so he escaped thorow a hole in the Prison: and on conceit of this miracle drew them into armes against Cuscar, with which hee made such slaughter of his Enemies, that to this day there are great heapes of bones of the slaine: he slue 60000. of the Canari, destroyed Tumbamba, and conquered as farre as Tumbes and Caximalca: hee sent a great Army with Quisquiz and Calicucima, two valiant Captaines, with such success as you haue heard, against Cuscar, whom they tooke, and by his direction slue.

Gomara attributeth the death of Atabaliba to Philippus the Spanish Interpreter, who to enioy one of his Wiues, accused him of conspiracie against the Spaniards; but Benzel with more likelihood affirmeth, that Pizarro from his first taking had intended it. For hee might haue sent him into Spaine as Atabaliba requested, if he had feared such secret practices: but his request and purgation were rejected, and foure Negro's which hee vsed for that purpose, strangled him at his command. He had many Wiues, whereof the chiefe was his Sister, named Pagba. He seeing the glasses of Europe, marvelled much (as before is said) that they haueing so faire a thing, would go so farre for Gold. His Murthers dyed the like bloudie ends: Almagro was executed by Pizarro; and he slaine by young Almagro; and him, Vasco de Castra did likewise put to death. John Pizarro was slaine of the Indians. Martin another of the Brethren was slaine with Francis. Ferdinandus was imprisoned in Spaine, and his end vnknowne; Gonzales was done to death by Gasca. Soto dyed of thought in Florida; and Ciuitl Warres ate vp the rest in Peru.

Before the times of the Inguas, their Gouernment ^m in these parts was (as still it is in Arauco, and the Prouinces of Chili) by Cominalties, or the aduice of many. The Gouernment of the Inguas continued betwene three and foure hundred yeeres, although for a long time their Signiorie was not aboue fise or sixe leagues compasse about the Citie of Cusco, where the originall of their conquests began, and extended from Pasto to Chili, almost 1000 leagues in length, betwene the Andes and the South Sea.

The Canaries were their mortall Enemies, and fauoured the Spaniards, and at this day if they fall to comparisons, whether the Inguas or Canari were the more valiant, they will kill one another by thousands, as hath hapned in Cusco. The practice which they vsed to make themselves Lords, was a fiction, that since the generall Deluge (whereof all the Indians haue knowledge) the World had bene peopled, peopled and restored by them: and that seuen of them came out of the Caue of Pacricambo, and that they also were the Authors of the true Religion. The first of these Inguas was Mangocapa, which came out of the Caue of Tambo, six leagues from Cusco. Of him came two Families, the Hananucoes, of whom came these Lords; and the Princuscos: Ingaraca the first Lord was no great Lord, but was serued in Vessels of Gold and Silver. And dying, he appointed that all his treasure should be employed for the seruice of his bodie, and for the feeding of his Family. His Successor did the like:

Thus was Amara or Philip brought forth on a Mule, his hands fastned (the Cryer proclaiming him a Tyrant and Traytor) with a halter about his necke, 300000. were gathered together in the streets and wayes to this sad spectacle with much teares and cries, the Priests desired him to enioyne them Silence, whereupon hee lifted up his hand, and laying it on his eare, and thence by degrees to his thigh, there followed such Silence as if there had not beene a man in the Citie. And thus with protestation of his innocencie hee sullayned their crueltye with great magnanimitie: the last of that race, which had continued as Blas Valera reckons almost 600. yeeres in that Soueraintie. After his death followed that dissension before related of his children and kindred, The Victory returned with 100000. Peros gotten in his governments, which was arrethred, and him selfe discomfited by the King, who told him that hee was sent into Peru to free the Kings, not to kill Inga; wherewith grieued hee dyed in few dayes. Garcia Loyala which took Amara, married his Neeces the Daughter of Son Tupac, and was apointed Governor of Chili: who one night was slaine with all his Company by the Araucos. Hee left only one Daughter which was married to Don Juan Enriquez de Barria in Spain, whom the King entituled Marquesse of Crespo a Towne founded by Toldein Peru.

In the time of Ingaroca, the Indians had Images of Gold, Tuaguaruaguo succeeded Virococa, the next successor was very rich. Gonzale Pizarro with cruell toiments forced the Indians to confesse where his body was, for the report of the treasures buried with him: the body hee burnt, and the Indians referred and worshipped the ashes. They took it ill that this Inga called himselfe Virococa, which is the name of their God; but hee too to satisfy them, said, that Virococa appeared to him in a Dreame, and commanded him to take his name.

Pachacuti Inga Tupac succeeded him, who was a great Conquerour, Politician, and Author of their Ceremonies; hee reigned 70. yeeres, and fained himselfe sent of Virococa, to establish his Religion and Empire.

After him followed Guaynacapa the Father of Guascar and Atabalipa, which brought this Empire to the greatest height. The Indians opened him after his decease, leaving his heart and entrails in Quito, the body was carried to Cusco, and placed in the Temple of the Sunne. He was worshipped of his Subiects for a God, being yet alive, which was not done to any of his Predecessors. When hee dyed, they slue a thousand persons of his household, to serve him in the other life, all which dyed willingly for his service, in somuch that many offered themselves to death, besides such as were appointed. His treasure was admirable. Hee used alwayes to haue with him many Oregins, which were his men of Warre, and wore shoes and feathers, and other signes of Nobilitie: he was served of the eldest Sonnes and Heires of all his chiefe Subiects, every one clothed after his owne Countrey Rite; he had many Counsellours and Courtiers in differing degrees of honour. Every one at his entrance into the Palace put off his shoes, and might not looke him in the face when they spake to him.

All the Vessels of his Houfe, Table and Kitchen, were of Gold and Silver, and the meaneft of Silver and Copper for strength and hardnesse of Metall. He had in his Wardrobe hollow Statues, which seemed Gyants, and were of Gold: and the figures in proportion and bignesse of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, and Herbs, in his Kingdome, and of the Fishes likewise. He had Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, and Chests, of Gold and Silver: heapes of Billets of Gold, that seemed Wood cut out for the fire. There was nothing in his Kingdome, but hee had the counterfeite in Gold. Yea they say, That the Inga's had a Garden of pleasure in an Iland neer Puna, which had all kind of Garden herbs, flowers, and trees of Gold and Silver. Hee had also an infinite quantitie of Silver and Gold wrought in Cusco, which was lost by the death of Guascar, which the Indians concealed (as is said) from the Spaniards. Xerxes saith, hee had three houses full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver: and a 100000. Plates or Tiles of Gold, every of which weighed fifty Castlins. What honors were done to him after his death, appears by that his golden Temple or Chappell where he was buried, where hee had continuall attendance of Dancers and Musicians, and such as stood with Fans to keepe away the Flies. When any came to see the Cacique, they came first to performe their Ceremonies to this Image. Hee had 200. children by diuers women. Acosta o sayth, That hee had (descended from his owne loynes) about 300. children and grand children.

When his Sonnes Guascar and Atabalipa were dead, another of his Sonnes called Mamabamba, where he kept in the Mountaynes, and there the Inga's reigned untill Amara was taken and executed in Cusco. Some remnants of them haue since bin christened. The other

The present Inga they presently sentenced to lose his head: who desired to be sent into Spain, proving his innocencie; & that if his Father could doing nothing against 200. Spaniards in Cusco with 100000. Indians, what could they feare of him so poore? He appealed to the King and to Pachacamac: was by possed sild by the name of Philip his Inga as he called him: moved pite in the Spaniards, who would have be caught for him to be sent into Spain, there to remaine called, but might not be suffered in paine of death to speake to the Victory. Thus was Amara or Philip brought forth on a Mule, his hands fastned (the Cryer proclaiming him a Tyrant and Traytor) with a halter about his necke, 300000. were gathered together in the streets and wayes to this sad spectacle with much teares and cries, the Priests desired him to enioyne them Silence, whereupon hee lifted up his hand, and laying it on his eare, and thence by degrees to his thigh, there followed such Silence as if there had not beene a man in the Citie. And thus with protestation of his innocencie hee sullayned their crueltye with great magnanimitie: the last of that race, which had continued as Blas Valera reckons almost 600. yeeres in that Soueraintie. After his death followed that dissension before related of his children and kindred, The Victory returned with 100000. Peros gotten in his governments, which was arrethred, and him selfe discomfited by the King, who told him that hee was sent into Peru to free the Kings, not to kill Inga; wherewith grieued hee dyed in few dayes. Garcia Loyala which took Amara, married his Neeces the Daughter of Son Tupac, and was apointed Governor of Chili: who one night was slaine with all his Company by the Araucos. Hee left only one Daughter which was married to Don Juan Enriquez de Barria in Spain, whom the King entituled Marquesse of Crespo a Towne founded by Toldein Peru.

Family of the Inga's, which descended of the first Mangocapa called Vimencus, had their successions also and Government; which here to discourse of, were to my propoſed ſcope impertinent. Leaving therefore the Conquerours and Conqueſt of Peru, let vs conſider the Countrey it ſelfe, with ſuch obſervations as we ſhall there find touching their Religions.

THe Kingdom of Peru extendeth ^b ſeven hundred leagues in length, in breadth a hundred in ſome places, in ſome threeſcore, in others ſortie: more or leſſe, according vnto the difference of places. Quito and Plata are the vtmoſt Cities thereof, the one bordering on Popayan, the other vpon Chili. It is not heere meant of that ſpaciouſ Kingdome of the Inga's, for that reached twelue hundred leagues, whereof this of Peru was but a part. ^c Acosta

The ſecond, that this winde (in other places vnhealthfull) is here to agreeable, that otherwiſe it could not be habitable. 30 from the Coaſt, it Snowes and Raines terribly. Firſtly, there are two Ridges and Mountaynes, which both runne in one altitude; and the one in view of the other, almoſt equally, about a 1000 leagues; & yet on the one part are great Forreſts, and it Raines the greateſt part of the yeere, being very hot; the other is all naked, & bare, and very cold. So that Peru is diuided into three parts, which they call Llanos Sieras, and Andes: the firſt runne alongſt the Sea Coaſt; the Sieras be Hills with ſome Valleyes; and the Andes bee ſteepe and craggie Mountaynes. The Llanos or Plaines on the Sea Coaſt haue ten leagues in breadth, in ſome parts leſſe, and in ſome a little more. The Sierra containeth with equality in qualitie twentie leagues; and the Andes as much, ſometimes more, and ſometimes leſſe. They run in length from North to South, and in breadth from Eaſt to Weſt: and in this ſo ſmall a diſtance it

The Sieras in the miſt are more moderate, in which a Raine from September to April, as in Spain, but in the other halie yeere, when the Sunne is further off, it is more cleere. The Sieras yeild infinite number of Vicagues, which are like wild Goats; and Pacos, a kinde of ſheepes, profitable for fleece and burthen: the Andes yeild Parrots, Apes, and Monkeyes. Some ^d report that monſtrous birthes doe ſometimes proceed (as by Natures vnwilling hand) from the copulation of theſe Barbarians and theſe Monkeyes. iſhed with the dew: and becauſe the Maize will not grow, except it firſt die, they ſet one or two Pilchards heads (which fiſh they take with their nets very plentifully in the Sea) therewith, and thus it groweth abundantly. The water which they drinke, they draw out of deep pits. ^e Comming from the Mountaines to the Valleyes, they do vſually ſee (as it were) two Heauens, one cleere and bright, the other obſcure, and (as it were) a gray veile ſpread vnder-neath, which couers all the Coaſt; and although it raines not, yet this miſt is wonderfull profitable to bring forth graſſe, and to rayſe vp and nourish the Seed: and where they haue plenty of water, which they draw from the Pooles and Lakes, yet if this moiſture faileth, 60 there followeth great defect of grain. And (which is more worthy of admiration) the dry and barren ſands in ſome places, as in the ſandy Mountaine neere the City de los Reyes, are by this dew beautified with graſſe & flowres. In ſome places they water their fields out of the riuers.

Lake.

c. 16. p. 1. c. 103.

Beyond the Citie of Cusco the two ridges of Mountaynes separate themselves, and in the middlest leane a plaine and large Champaine, which they call the Prouince of Callao, where there are many Riues and great store of fertile pastures. There is also the great Lake of Titicaqa, which containeth fourecore leagues in compasse, and robbeth ten or twelue great Riues of their waters, which they were carrying to the Sea, but here are drunke vp (by the way) of this Lake. They sayle in it with Shippes and Barques. The water is not altogether fower nor fale, as that of the Sea, but is so thicke, that it cannot be drunke. Vpon the Bankes of this Lake are habitations as good as any in Peru. The great Lake passeth by a Riuer into a lesse Lake, called Aulagas, from whence it hath no manner of passage, except there be any vnder the Earth. There are many other Lakes in the Mountaines, which seeme to arise rather from Springs then from Raines or Snowes, and some of them yeeld Riues. At the end of the Valley of Tarayaya neere to Potozi, there is a round Lake, whose water is very hot, and yet the Countrey is very cold: they bathe themselves neere the bankes, for further in it is intolerable. In the middlest is a boyling aboute twentie foote square: it neuer encrease nor decreaseth, although they haue drawne from it a great streame for Metall Mills.

No raine: the cause.

But to returne from this plenty of water in Lakes, to that want thereof in the Plaines of Peru. The naturall reason which some yeeld of this want of Raine, is, partly their sandie and dry qualitie, which of themselves can yeeld no further exhalations, then to produce those mists or dewes: partly the height of the Hills, which shadow the Plaines, and suffer no wind to blow from the Land vpon them, but intercept them wholly with their vapours and Cloudes; so that their winde is onely from the Sea, which finding no opposit, doth not presse nor thraine forth the vapours whichle to engender Raine. This seemeth the rather to be probable, for that it raines vpon some small Hills along the Coast which are least shadowed. In the same Coast also, where the Easterly or Northerly winde is ordinary, it raineth as in Guay-quill. The South winde in other places is accounted a cause of Raine, which here reigneth without rayning.

As strange is the difference of seasons, after the Indians account. For in the i Sierras their Summer beginneth in April, and endeth with September: October beginneth their Winter, which not theabence, but the presence of the Sunne doth cause. Contrariwise in the Plaines, just by in site, they haue their Summer from October to April, the rest their Winter. (The like is noted in the East Indies at the Hills of Balegate, where that Ridge parteth Winter and Summer in the same neerelie to the Sunne, at the same time, and a few miles distant.)

The Raines in the Hills are cause why they call it Winter, and the dewes or mists in the Plaines, so that when the Raines fall most in the Hills, it is cleere weather in the Plaines, and when the dew falleth in the Plaines, it is cleere on the Hills: and thus it sometime to passe, that a man may trauell from Winter to Summer in one day, hauing Winter to wash him in the morning, and ere night a cleere and dry Summer to scorch him. Yea in some places (sayth Alexandro Desfine) within fixe miles space both heate and cold are intolerable, and enough to kill any man. From Saint Helen to Copiapo it neuer raineth, which Coast extends forty miles, in some places fiftie, in breadth, and twelue hundred leagues in length.

Of the first Inhabitants, their Quippes, Arts, Marriages.

About the point of Saint Helena in Peru, they tell that sometimes there liued Giants of huge stature, which came thither in Boates, the con passe of their knee was as much as of another mans middle: they were hated of the people, because that vying their women they killed them, and did the same to the men for other causes. These Giants were addicted to Sodomie, and therefore as the Indians report, were destroyed with fire from Heauen. Whether this be true or no, in those parts are found huge and Giantlike bones. Cieza writes that John de Holmes at Porto Vieco digged and found teeth three fingers broad, and foure long. Contrariwise, in the Valley of Chincha they haue a Tradition that the Progenitors of the present Inhabitants destroyed the native people, which were not about two Cubits high, and possessed their rooms: in testimony whereof they alledge also that bone-argument.

Concerning the Indians conceits of their own originall: we haue mentioned their opinion of

of a flood, and the peopling of the World by them, which came out of a Cave. They have another Legend, that all men being drowned, there came out of the great Lake Titicaca, one Urococha, which stayed in Tuguanico, where at this day is to be seen the ruines of very ancient and strange buildings, and from thence came to Cuzco, and so begane Mankind to multiply. They shew in the same Lake a small Iland, where they saie that the Sunne hid himselfe, and so was preserved: and for this reason they made great Sacrifices vnto him in this place, both of Sheepe and Men. They held this place sacred, and the Incas built there a Temple to the Sunne, and placed there Women and Prieests with great treasures.

- 10 Some learned men are of opinion, that all which the Indians make mention of is not about foure hundred yeeres; which may bee imputed to their want of writing. In stead of writing they vsed these Quippos. These Quippos are Memorials or Registers made of cords, in which there are diuers knots and colours, signifying diuers things: these were their Bookes of Histories, of Lawes, Ceremonies, and accounts of their affaires. There were officers appointed to keepe them, called Quipocamayes; which were bound to giue account of things as Notaries and Registers. They had according to the diuersitie of buisnesse, sundry cords and branches, in cue y of which were so many knots litle and great, and strings tyed to them, some red, some Greene, and in such variety, that euen as wee deuise an infinite number of words from the Letters of the Alphabet, so doe they from these kinds and colours.
- 20 And at this day they will keepe account exactly with them. I did see (sayth Nesla) a handfull of these strings, wherein an Indian woman did carrie (as it were) written a generall confession of all her life, and thereby confessed herselfe, as well as I could haue done in written paper, with strings for the circumstances of the finnes. They haue also certaine wheelles of small stones, by meanes whereof they learne all they deure by heart. Thus you shall see them learne the Pater-noster, Credo, and the rest: and for this purpose they haue many of these wheelles in their Church-yards. They haue another kinde of Quippos, with grains of My, with which they wil cast hard accounts, which might trouble a good Arithmetician with his Pen in the Diuisions. They were no lesse witte, if not more, in things whereto they apply themselues, then the men of these parts. They taught their young children
- 30 dren all Arts necessary to the life of men, euery one learning what was needfull for his person and family, and not appropriating himselfe to one profession; as with vs, one is a Tayler, another a Weauer, or of other Trade. Euery man was his owne Weauer, Carpenter, Husbandman, and the like. But in other Arts, more for ornament then necessity, they had Gold-smiths, Painters, Potters, and Weauers of curious workes for Noblemen, and so of the rest. No man might change the fashion vsed in his owne Countrey, when hee went into another, that all might be knowne of what Countrey they were.

- For their Marriages, they had many Wiues, but one was principall, which was wedded with Solemnitie, and that in this sort: The Bridegroome went to the Brides House, and put Ostoya, which was an open Shooe, on her foot: this, if shee were a Mayd, was of wooll, otherwise, of Reeds, and this done, he led her thence with him. If she committed Adulterie, shee was punished with death: when the Husband dyed, shee carried a mourning Weed of blacke a yeere after, and might not marry in that time, which befell not the other Wiues. The Incas himselfe with his own hand gaue this woman to his Governours and Captaines, and the Governours assembled all the young men and Mayds in one place of the Citie, where they gaue to euery one his Wife, with the aforesaid Ceremonie in putting on the Ostoya: the other Wiues did serue and honour this. None might marry with his Mother, Daughter, Grandmother or Grand-child: and Tapangui, the Father of Guaynasapa was the first Incas that married his Sister, and confirmed his fact by a Decree, that the Incas might doe it, commanding his owne children to doe it, permitting the Noblemen also to marrie their Sisters by the Father side. Other Incest, and Murder, Theft, and Adulterie were punished with death. Such as had done good seruice in warre, were rewarded with Lands, Armes, Titles of honour, and Marriage in the Incas Linage.

- They had Chasquis or Posts in Peru, which were to carrie tidings or Letters: for which purpose they had houles a league and a halfe asunder, and running each man to the next, they would runne fifty leagues in a day and night.

The Regall Rites, Rights, and of RVMINAGVI and ALVARADO.

When the Ingua was dead, his lawfull heire borne of his chiefe Wife succeeded. And if the King had a legitimate Brother; he first inheried; and then the Sonne of the first. Hee inherited not the goods: (as is sayd already) but they were wholly dedicated to his Oratorie or Guaca, and for the mayntenance of the Family he left, with his Oyl-spring, was alway busied at the Sacrifices, Ceremonies, and Service of the deceased King: for being dead, they presently held him for a God, making Images and Sacrifices to him. The Ensigne of Royaltie was a Red Rowle of Wooll finer then Sylke, which hung on his forehead, which was a Diadem that none else might weare in the middelt of their forehead; at the eare the Noblemen men might. When they tooke this Roll, they made their Coronation Feast, and many Sacrifices with a great quantitie of vessels of Gold, and Silver, and many Images in the forme of Sheepe of Gold and Silver, and a thousand others of diuers colours. Then the chiefe Prielt tooke a young Child in his hand of the age of fixe or eight yeeres, pronouncing these words with the other Ministers to the Image of Viracocha; Lord, wee offer this unto thee, that thou mayest maintaine vs in quiet, and helpe vs in our Wars: maintaine our Lord the Ingua in his Greatnesse and estate, that hee may alway increase: giving him much knowledge to gouerne vs. There were present at this Ceremonie, men of all parts of the Realme, and of all Guacas and Sanctuaries. It is not found that any of the Ingua Subiects euer committed Treson against him. Hee placed the Gouernours in euery Prouince, some greater, and some smaller. The Ingua thought it a good rule of State to keepe their Subiects alway in iiction, and therefore there are seene to this day long Causeys of great labour, diuiding this large Empire into foure parts.

Having conquered a Prouince, they presently reduced them into Townes and Communalities, which were diuided into Bands: one was appointed ouer tenne, another ouer a hundred, and another ouer a thousand, and ouer tenne thousand another. Aboue all, there was in euery Prouince a Gouernour of the House of the Ingua, to whom the rest gaue accounts of what had passed, and who were cyther borne or dead. At the Feast called Raymer, the Gouernours brought the Tribute of the whole Realme to the Court at Cusco. All the Kingdom was diuided into foure parts, Chinchafuyo, Collofuyo, Andesuyo, and Condesuyo, according to the foure wayes which went from Cusco, East, West, North and South.

When the Ingua conquered a Citie, the Land was diuided into three Parts, the first for Religion, euery Idoll and Guaca hauing his peculiar Lands appropriated to their Priests and Sacrifices; and the greatest part thereof was spent in Cusco, where was the Generall and Metropolitan Sanctuary, the rest in that Citie where it was gathered, which all had Guacas, after the fashion of Cusco, some being thence distant two hundred leagues. That which they reapt on the Land, was put into Store-houses built for that purpose.

The second part of that diuision was for the Ingua for the mayntenance of his Court, Kinsmen, Noblemen, and Souldiers: which they brought to Cusco, or other places where it was needfull.

The third part was for the Commualtie for the nourishment of the people, no particular man possessing any part hereof in proper. As the Family encreased or decreased, so did the portion. Their Tribute was to till and husband the Lands of the Ingua, and the Guacas, and lay it vp in Store-houses, being for that time of their labour nourished out of the same lands. The like distribution was made of the Cattell to the same purposes, as that of the lands, and of the wooll, and other profits that thence arose. The old men, women and sickle folkes, were referred from this Tribute. They payed other Tributes also, euen whatsoeuer the Ingua would choole out of euery Prouince. The Chieas sent sweete Woods; the Lucanas, Brancars to carrie his Litter; the Chumtilucas, Dancers: others were appointed to labour in the Mines: and all were slaues to the Ingua. Some hee employed in building of Temples, Fortresses, Houses, or other Workes, as appeareth by the remnants of them, where are found stones of such greatnesse, that men cannot conceiue how they were cut, brought and layed in their places, they hauing no Iron or Steele to cut, Engines to carrie, nor Morter to lay them: and yet they were so cunningly layed, that one could not see the ioynts. Some of eight and thirtie foot long, sayth Acosta, eight broad, and fixe thicke. I measured: and in the walles of Cusco are bigger; none so litle (sayth Sancho) in some buildings there, as three Carts might carrie, and some thirty squarres. Isla Elia which which lately was there, sayth some of them are twentie tunne weight, strangely ioynd with one another.

- They built a Bridge at Chiquitto, the River being so deepe, that it will not admit Arches: they fastned Bundles of Reedes and Weedes, which being light, will not sinke, which they fastned to yther side of the River, they make it passable for man and beast: it is three hundred foot long. Cusco their chief Citie standeth in seuentene degrees: it is subject to cold and Snow, the Houses are of great and square stone. It was besieged by Soto, and by Pizarro, and by him entred, where they found more treasure then they had by the imprisonment of Atabaliba. Quito is said to have bene as rich as Cusco. Hither Ruminagui fled with five thousand Souldiers, when Atabaliba his Master was taken by the Spaniards, and slue Illiscas his Brother, that withstood his Tyrannicall proceedings, slayed him, and made a Drumme of his skinn: slue two thousand Souldiers that brought the bodie of Atabaliba to Quito to be interred, hauing in shew of Funerall pompe and honour, before, made them drunke; and with his Forces scoured the Prouince of Tumbabito: hee killed many of his Wiues for smiling, when hee told them they should haue pleasure with the bearded men, and burnt the Wardrobe of Atabaliba: that when the Spaniards came and entred Quito, which had almost dispeopled Panama, Nicaragua, Cartagena, and other their Habitations in hope of Peruvian spoiles, they found the mielus disappointed of their expected prey, and in anger set fire on the Towne. Alvarado with six newes came from Guatimala into those parts, with foure hundred Spaniards, but was forced to kill his Horse, to feede his famished Company (although at that time Hories were worth in Peru about a thousand Ducats apiece) was almost killed with thirst, was assaulted with showres of Ashes, which the hote Vulcane of Quito dispersed two hundred and fortie myles about (with terrible Thunders and Lightnings, which Pluto had seemed to steale from Iupiter, and here to vent them) and after with Snowes on the colde Hills, which exacted seuentie Spaniards for Tribute in the passage, found many men sacrificed by the Inhabitants, but could finde no Gold, till Pizarro bought his departure with an hundred thousand Duckets. Hee gaue, Thanks, (hee sayd) to God for his deliuerance, by that Trail, by which hee had passed, to the Duell. This was hee that afterward being bruised with the fall of his Horse, (wharof hee dyed) and asked where hee was most pained, sayd, I in his Soule, as guilty to himselfe of his former cruelties and couetousnesse. This is the profit of vn sanctified and ill-sanctified Gold: the one wherof we see in these Peruvian Temples thus spoyled by the Spaniards, who (in the other respect) were more spoyled by this spoyle and purchase. What golden dayes these were to the Spaniards, this History in diuers places sheweth. From one Palace of Cusco (sayth Xerez) they tooke seven hundred places of Gold, each wherof weighed five hundred Castlins: from another House the weight of two hundred thousand. Two Houses of Gold hee speaks of, the very charch being counterfeited in Gold; the strawes with the eares artificially wrought, but every where are these Relations wrought and embrodered with Cusco Gold. Alvarados Armie, which he brought into Peru, had perished, as Cieza relateth, with drought, but for certaine Canes as bigge as a mans legge, which betwene the knots containd a potle of water, extracted from the dewes: for there fell no raine in those parts.
- Cieza* sayth that the Inhabitants of Anzerma were in their Warres armed with complete Harnesse of Gold: and that about Quito there were Mines, whence more Gold was taken then Earth. I tye no mans credit to these reports, but sure it is, that they had these Metals in abundance, which the Spanish warres haue made our European World to feele, more managed and mayntayned by Indian wedges, then Spanish Blades.
- But let vs come from their Mines, to their Minds, which for heavenly things were as full of dross, as the other were of purer Metals.

Strange Canes

Vnder this colour he assembled a mightie Armie, and overthrew the Changnas: and from that time commanded that Viracocha should be held for vniuersall Lord, and that the Images of the Sunne and Thunder, should doe him reuerence. And thenceforth they set his Image highest: yet did he not dedicate any thing to him, saying, that hee being Lord of all had no need. As for those inuisible Souldiers (a conceit like that which wee haue mentioned of the Turkes) he said (that no man might see them but himselfe: and since they were conuerted into stones: and in that regard gathered a multitude of stones in the Mountaynes, and placed them for Idols, sacrificing them. He called them Pururancas, and carried them to the warres with great deuotion, making his Souldiers beleue that they had gotten the victory through their helpe. And by this meanes he obtained goodly victories.

n So haue some reasoned, in Temple quid fac is autem? Per f

Next to Viracocha they worshipped the Sunne: and after him the Thunder, which they called by three names, Chiguilla, Cotacilla, and Inti-lapa, supposing it to be a man in Heauen with a Sling and a Mace, in whose power it is to caule Raine, Haile, Thunder, and other effects of the ayrie Region.

This Guaca (so they called both their Idols and Temples) was Generall to all the Indians of Peru: and in Cusco they sacrificed to him children, as they did to the Sunn. These three, Viracocha, the Sunne, and Thunder, had a more especiall worship alien the rest: they put as it were a Gantlet or Gloue vpon their hands, when they lifted them vp to worship them. They worshipped the Earth in the name of Pachamama, and esteemed her the Mother of all things: the Sea also, and called it Mamaocho: and the Rain-bow, which with two Snakes stretched out on each side, were the Armes of the Ingvas. They attributed diuers offices, to diuers Starres, and those which needed their fauour, worshipped them: so the Shepheard sacrificed to a Starre, by them called Vrechilla, which they hold to be a sheepe of diuers colours, and two other Starres called Catuchilla and Vrechilla, which they sayned to be an Ewe and a Lambe: others worshipped a Starre which they name Machacay, to which they attributed the power ouer Snakes and Serpents, to keepe them from hurting them. To another Starre called Chunguinchibey (which is as much as Tigre) they ascribed power ouer Beares, Tiges, and Lions. They haue generally beleued of all the Beasts in the earth, there is one lik vnto them in heauen, which hath care of their procreation and encrease. Many other Starres they worshipped, too tedious to rehearse. They worshipped also Riues, Fountaines, the mouthes of Riues, entries of Mountaynes, Rocks or great stones, Hills and the tops of Mountaynes, which they call Apachitas. They worshipped all things in Nature, which seemed to them remarkable and different from the rest.

They shewed me (it is Aesius speech) in Cazamalca, a Hill or Mount of Sand, which was a chiefe Idoll or Guaca, of the Ancients. I demanded what Diuinitie they found in it: they alleged the wonder, it being a high Mount of Sand in the middle of the thicke Mountaynes of stone. In the Cisic de los Reyes, for the melting of a Bell, wee cut downe a great deformed Tree, which for the greatnesse and Antiquitie thereof had bene their Guaca. They attributed the like Diuinitie to any thing that was strange in this kind, as Stones, or the Roots Papas and Lallarecas (which they kissed and worshipped:) Beares also, Lions, Tiges and Snakes, that they should not hurt them. And such as their Gods be, such are the things which they offer vnto them in their worship. They haue vsed, as they goe by the way, to cast in the crosse wayes on the Hills and tops of Mountaynes, olde shoes, feathers, and Coca chewed, And when they had nothing else, they cast a stone as an offering, that they might passe freely and lustily: hence it is, that they find in the high wayes great heaps of stones offered, and such other things. They vsed the like ridiculous offering in pulling off their haire of the eye-browes to offer to the Sunne, Hills, Winds, or any other thing which they feare. They report of one of the Ingvas, that said he did not take the Sunne to be a God, because he laboureth so much in his daily iourney. In fine, every one worshipped what liked him best. The Fishers worshipped a Sharke or some other Fish: the Hunter, a Lion, Fox, or other Beast; with many Birds; the Countiman, the Water, and Earth. They beleued that the Moone was Wife to the Sunne. When they sweare, they touch the Earth, and looke vp to the Sunne. Many of their Idols had Pastorall Staues, and Mirres like B shops, but the Indians could tell no reason thereof: and when they saw the Spanish Bishops in their Pontificalibus, they asked if they were Guacas of the Christians.

They worshipped also (as before is said) the dead bodies of the Ingvas, preferring them with certaine Rolin, so that they seemed aliuie. The body of Tapangui, the Grandfather of Atabalipa, was thus found, hauing eyes made of a fine cloth of Gold artificially set, as they seemed naturall, hauing lost no more haire then if he had died the same day, and yet he had bene dead seventy eight yeeres. There also the Spaniards found his Seruants and Mamascenas, which did seruice to his memory.

In some Prouince they worshipped the Image of a Bull, in another of a Cocke, and in other,

other, others. In the Principall Temple of Pachicuma, they kept a free Fox and worshipped it. The Lord of Manta kept a great and rich Emerald, as his Ancestors also before him had holden it, in great veneration: on some dayes it was brought forth in publike to be worshipped. They which were sicke, came in Pilgrimage to visit it, and there offered their gifts, which the Cacique and Ministers turned to their owne profit. The Deuill in many places did appeare vnto them, and he indeed was Author of all these Superstitions.

Apollon. l. 1.

They haue a Tradition concerning the Creation, * that at the beginning of the World there came one from the North, into their Countrey, called Cow, which had no bones, went very light and swift, cast downe Mountaines liſt vp the Hills only with his Will and Word: He said he was the Sonne of the Sunne, and filled the earth with men and women which they created, giuing them fruits and bread, and other things necessary for humane life. But being offended with some, he countermanded all that former good, and turned the fruitful Lands into barren Sands, as they are now in the Plaines, and tooke away the water that it should not raine (hence it came that it raines not) only leauing them the Riuer, of pure compassion, that they should maintayne themselves with labour. Afterwards * came another from the South, called Pachicuma, the Sonne also of the Sunne and Moone, who banished Cow, and turned his men into Cats, Monkeyes, Beares, Lions, Parrots, and other Birds, and created the Progenitors of the present Indians, and taught them to husband the Earth and the Trees. They againe, to gratifie him turned him in their imaginations and superstitions vnto a God, and named the Prouince foure leagues from Lima of his name. He * continued till the Christians came to Peru. He was their great Oracle, and as some Indians asseme, he still continueth in secret places with some of their old men, and speaketh to them.

Of this Temple we shall after speake.

u. Gem. vbi sup.

They hold opinion * also, that on a time it rained so exceedingly, that it drowned all the lower Countreies, and all men, saue a few, which got into Caves vpon high Hills, where they shut vp themselves close, that no raine could get in: there they had stored much provision and liuing creatures. And when they perceiued that it had done raining, they sent forth two Dogges, but they returning all myrie and foule, they knew that the waters had not yet ceased: after that, they sent forth more Dogges, which came backe againe dry, then did they goe forth to people the Earth: but were mightily afflicted with multitudes of great Serpents, which had sprung vp out of those mirie Reliques of the Flood: * but at last they killed them. They beleue also that the World shall haue an end, but before the same, shall goe a great drought, and the Sunne and Moone, which they worship, shall be consumed: and therefore they make grieuous lamentations when there is any Eclipse, especially of the Sun, fearing the destruction of it and the World. They beleue the immortalitye of the Soule, as as we shall more fully see when we come to their Buriall Rites.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Religious Persons, and Places, Confessions, and Sacrifices in Peru.

§. I.

Of their Priests, Oracles and Temples.

O man might come to the * Gnaca, or Idols, but Priests. These were clothed in white, and when they came to worship, they prostrated themselves on the ground, and holding in their hands a white cloth, did speake to their God in a strange Language, that the people should not vnderstand. These haue the authoritie in their holies, and consecrate both the things liuing, and the offerings of other things. In the Sacrifices they diuined by inspection of the inward parts, especially by view of the heart, if it were of a man. And if they find no signes answerable to their expectation, they neuer cease off from sacrificing till they doe find them; beleeuing, and making the people beleue, that God is not till then pleased with their Sacrifices. They bare incredible shew, and were had in great reputation, of holiness. When they were to sacrifice, they abstained from women, and if they had committed any trespass, they did expiate and purge the same with fasting: in sacrificing they did binde, and binde their eyes, and were sometimes so transported with Zeale, that with their nayles they scratched scratched or pulled out their eyes, as hath beene seene. Neyther did the people alone admire their holinesse, but the Princes also, who would doe nothing of moment without their aduise. They also without feare or flattery, declared vnto them what they had receiued from their Oracle. The manner of their Devils consultation was this: In the night time commonly they entred backward to their Idoll, and so went bending their bodies and heads after an vgly manner, and thus consulted with him. The answere he made, was for the most part like vnto a fearefull hissing, or to a gnashing, which did terrifie them. These Oracles are now ceased.

b Acq. l. 5. s. 15

Apollonius speaks of two mighty Princes, not farre from Chili, one of them named Lycheuormes; they are able to bring into the field two hundred thousand men, and are very rich: but the cause why I here mention them, is that number of Priests, which hee sayeth are reported to belong to one of their Temples, to the number of two thousand. Cieza writeth, that the doores of their Temples were Eastward: that in euery Temple were two Images of the Bignesse and likenesse of Goats, before which they burnt sweet wood: there were also Images of Serpents. Euery profession had their seuerall God. In some Temples were banged the dead carcases of men sacrificed.

c Lib. Apoll. l. 1

In euery Province of Peru, there was one principall house of adoration; The ruines of the Temple of Pachacama are still to be seene. That, and the Temples of Collao, and Cusco, were lined within with Plates of Gold and Silver: and all their seruice was of the same, which proved great riches to the conquerours. In Pachacama the Sun was worshipped with great deuotion. There were kept in the same many Virgins. Francis Pizarro sent his Brother Hernando (when he had taken Atahualpa) to spoyle this Temple, but the Priests and chiefe men had carried away aboue foure hundred burthens of Gold before he came, and none doth know what became of it. Yet did he find there some quantitie of Gold and Silver remainyng. They sacked the Sepulchres also, and thence drew abundance of the said Metals. From that time hitherto, the Temple went to ruine.

d Com. l. 1. s. 15

The Temple of Cusco was very sumptuous, the pavement and stones yet remaine witness of the ancient splendour and magnificence. This Temple was like to the Parthenon of the Romans: for that it was the house and dwelling of all the Gods. For the Incas did there behold the Gods of all the Nations and Provinces they had conquered, euery Idoll hauing his proper place, whither they of that Province came to worship it, with excessive charge for the same. And thereby they supposed to keepe safely in obedience those Provinces which they had conquered, holding their Gods as it were in hostage. In this House was the Pirchao, which was an Idoll of the Sunne, of most fine Gold, wrought with great riches of Stones, the which was placed to the East with so great Art, as the Sunne at his rising did cast his beames thereon, which reflected with such brightnesse, that it seemed another Sunne. They say, that at the spoyle of this Temple, a Souldier had for his part this goodly Pirchao, and lost the same in a night at play, whence grew a Proverbe of Gamesters in Peru, They play the Sunne before Sun-rising. This Temple towards the East (if our Spanish Captaine in Ramuse deceiues not) was covered with Gold, which the Spaniards (Religion forbidding Indian helpe) tooke away. There were many boyling pots and other Vessels of Gold. In the houses of the Cite was great store of Gold. In one house or Temple where they sacrificed, was a seat of Gold which weighed nineteene thousand Pezos, in which two men might sit. The house wherein old Cusco lay buried, the pavement and walls were covered with Gold and Silver, many Pots and Iarres were covered with like metal. Xerei also reporteth the same, who was Pizarros Secretary, and his Relation subscribed by Pizarro, and other Chieftaines: that this Temple was on the pavement, walls, and rooffe, covered with plates of Gold and Silver, wrought one into another: and that there were twenty other houses in that Cite, the walls whereof within and without were covered with plates of Gold.

g Geograph.

Both these Authours, eye-witnesses, report, that at Caximalca was a Temple of the Sunne, (into which they entred vntoth) walled and planted with trees round about: the like is also in euery great Towne: here were many other Temples besides. In the midst was the stately Place of Atahualpa, with pleasant Gardens and Lodgings, in one of which was a Golden Cisterne, whereto were by two Pipes from contrary passages brought both cold water and hot, to vse them mingled, or a sunder at pleasure. The Towne had about two thousand houses, seuered by streets as straight as a line, about two hundred paces long, with walls of stone. Ten dayes journey from hence, Atahualpa told the Spaniards, that in the way toward Cusco, was a Temple generall to all the Countrey, which was very rich with Offerings of Gold and Silver, much honoured by his Father and himselfe: other Temples had their particular Idols; this Idoll was generall, and that the custodie thereof was committed to a wiseman, which they thought could foretell things future, by reuelation of the said Idoll.

The

The Citie of Pachacama was famous for Peruvian deuotions. Their Idoll was placed in a darksome painted Room; (shutting close shut, made of filthy wood, hauing at his feete many Offerings of Gold) none but the Ministers of his Holies durst enter, nor touch the wals of the House. Three hundred leagues they came thither on Pilgrimage with rich Offerings: first speaking to the Doore-keeper, who went in and consulted with the Idoll concerning them, and returned his answer. His Priests were of his owne appointment, and might not approach to him without preparations of fasting, and abstinence from their wives. Throw all the streets of the Citie, and on the principall Gates, and round about the Temple, were many Idols of Wood which they worshipped. All the Countrey about payed a yeerely tribute hereunto. The Spaniards told them this their God was a Deuill, and taught them to defend themselves from him with the signe of the Crosse. Neere to this Temple was an Houle or Oratorie of the Sunne, on an high place, engirt about with fūe wals. At Tichicaca was a Temple and Oracle of the Sunne, which had about sixe hundred men and a thousand women that did seruice therein, and made Chica there. Much Gold and wealth was here offered.

Sodomites.*

In some part of Peru, h as at Old Port and Puna, they vsed the detestable sinne against Nature: yes, the Deuill so farre preuayled in their beastly Deuotions, that there were Boyes consecrated to serue in the Temple: and at the times of their Sacrifices and Solemne Feasts, the Lords and principall men abused them to that detestable filthinesse. And generally in the Hill-counties, the Deuill vnder shew of holinesse, had brought in that vice. Eury Temple or principall house of adoration kept one man or two or more, which went as tired like women, euen from the time of their child-hood, and spake like them imitating them in eury thing. Vnder i pretext of holinesse and Religion, their principall men, on principall dayes, had that hellish commerce. A Frier dealt with two of these Ganuides, about the filthinesse of this Vice: and they answered that they held it no fault; for from their child-hood they had bene placed there by their Caciques, both for that employment, as also to bee Priests and to keepe the Temple. Thus farre had they banished Nature, to entertaine Religion, and thus farre had they exiled the soule of Religion, retaining only a stinking Carcase.

i Tentum Religio potuit suadeve malorum.

e 80.*

At Ganada in k Caximalca the Inguas built a Temple in honour of the Sunne. There were Virgins kept, which intended nothing but to weaue, and spinne, and dye clothes, for their Idolatrous seruicers. The like was in other places. In Guanuco was a stately Palace of great stones, and a Temple of the Sunne adioyning, with a number of Virgins and Ministers, which had thirtie thousand Indians for the seruice thereof. The seruice which most of them did, is like to be the tilling of the ground, feeding of Cattell, and such like before mentioned, which they were bound to doe for the Inguas, and also for the Quacas, that is, Idols, and Idol-houses. But it were a wearisome Pilgrimage to goe and leade my Reader with mee, to eury of their Temples, which for the most part had the same Rites, according to that proportion of mayntenance which belonged to them.

¶ II.

Of their Nunnies, Sorcerers, Confessions and Penances.

1 Gen. c. 131.

Omara i reporteth, that their houses of women were as Cloysters or Monasteries, enclosed, that they might neuer goe forth. They gelded Men, which should attend on them, cutting off also their Noses and Lips, that they should haue no such appetite. It was death for any to be found false and incontinent. The men that entred into them, were hanged vp by the feet. These made Robes for the Idols, and burned the ouerplus with the bones of white sheepe, and hurled the Ashes into the Ayre towards the Sun. If they proved with childe, and sware that Pachacama did it, the issue was preferred.

Of these Monasteries or Nunneries, thus writeth Acosla. There were in Peru, many Monasteries of Virgins, = (but not any for men, except for the Priests and Sorcerers) at the least one in eury Province. In these were two sorts of women; one anciant, which they called Mamacamas, for the instruction of the young; the other of young Maydenes, placed there for a certaine time, after which they were drawne forth, eether for the Gods, or for the Inguas. They called this House or Monastery Acaguani, that is, the House of the Chosen. Eury Monastery had his Vicar, or Governour, called Appapanga, who had libertie to chuse whom he pleased, of what qualitie soeuer, being vnder eight yeeres of age, if they seemed to be of a good stature and constitution. The Mamacomas instructed these Virgins in diuers things needfull for the life of man, and in the Customes and Ceremonies of their Gods. Afterwards they tooke them from thence, being aboute fourteene, sending them to the Court with sure Guards, whereof some were appointed to serue the Idol, and Idol-Temples, keeping their Virginitie for euer: some other were for ordinary Sacrifices that were made of Maydens, and other extraordinary Sacrifices they made for the health, death, or warres of the Ingua: and the rest serued for Wives and Concubines to the Ingua, or such as hee gaue them to. This distribution was renewed euery yeere. These Monasteries possessed rents, for the maintenance of these Virgins. No Father might refuse his Daughter, if the Appapanaca required her: yea, many Fathers did willingly offer their Daughters, supposing it was a great merit to be sacrificed for the Ingua. If any of these Mamacomas or Aellus were found to haue trespassed against their honour, it was an ineuitable chastisement to bury them aliue, or to put them to death, by some other cruell torment.

Sorcerers.

The Ingua allowed a kind of Sorcerers or Sooth-sayers, which (they say) tooke vpon them what forme and figure they pleased, flying farre thorow the Ayre in a short time. They talke with the Deuill, who answered them in certaine stones, or other things, which they reuerence much. They tell what hath passed in the furthest parts, before newes can come. In the distance of two or three hundred leagues, they would tell what the Spaniards did or suffered in their ciuill warres. To worke this diuination, they shut vp themselves vp into a house and became drunke, till they lost their senses: a day after, they answered to that which was demanded. Some affirme they vse certaine vnctions. The Indians say, that the old women doe commonly vse this office of Witchcraft, especially in some places. They tell of things stolne or lost. The Anacomas (which are the seruants of the Spaniards) consult with them, and they make answer, hauing first spoken with the Deuill in an obscure place: so as the Anacomas heare the sound of the voyce, but vnderstand it not, nor see any body. They vse the Herbe Pillea with their Chica, (drinke made of Mayze) and therewith make themselves drunke, that they may bee fit for the Deuils conference. The conference with these Witches is one of the greatest lets to the proceeding of the Gospel amongst them.

Among their Religious persons, I may reckon their Confessors. They held opinion that all Aduersities were the effects of sinne: for remedie whereof they used Sacrifices. Mercur, they confessed themselves verbally almost in all Prouinces, and had Confessors appointed by their Superiours to that end, with some reseruation of Cases for the Superiours. They received Penance, and that sometimes very sharply, when they had nothing to give the Confessor. This office of Confessor was likewise exercised by women. The manner of the Tchuyri was most generall in the Prouinces of Collasuo. They discovered by lots, or by the view of some beasts, if any thing were concealed, and punished them with many blowes of a stone vpon the shoulders, vntill they had revealed all: after that, they enioyned them Penance, and did sacrifice. They likewise used Confession, when their Children, Wives, Husbands or Caciques were sicke, or in any great exploit. When the Ingua was sicke, all the Prouinces confessed themselves, chiefly those of Collao. The Confessors were bound to hold their Confessions secret, but in certaine cases limited. The sinnes which they chiefly confessed, were, killing one another out of warre, stealing to take another mans Wife, to giue poison, or Sorcery to doe any harme, to be forgetfull in the reuerence of their Guacas, not to obserue Feasts, to speake ill of, or to disobey the Ingua. They accused not themselves of secret sinnes. The Ingua confessed himselfe to no man, but to the Sunne, that hee might tell them to Viraacocha, of him to obtayne forgiveness: which done, hee made a certaine Bath to cleanse himselfe in a running Riuer, saying, I bane told my sinnes to the Sunne, receive them, then, Riuer, and carrie them to the Sea, where they may neuer appeare more. Other that confessed, used likewise those Baths. When any mans childrendyed, hee was holden for a grievous Sinner, saying, that it was for their sinnes, that the Sonne dyed before the Father. Such therefore, after they were confessed, were bathed in the said Bath, and then came a deformed person, to whip them with certaine Needles. If the Sorcerers or Enchanters, by their lots or diuinations affirmed that any sick bodie should dye, the sicke man makes no difficultie to kill his owne Sonne, though he had no other, hoping by that meanes to escape death, saying that in his place he offered his Sonne in Sacrifice. The Penances enioyned them in Confessions, were, to fast, to giue apparell, Gold, or Silver, to remayne in the Mountaynes, and to receive many stripes vpon the shoulders.

Of their Sacrifices.

q Gen. 2.12.
Accl. 15. 118.

He Sacrifices of the Indians may be reduced 9 into three kind; of insensible things; of beasts; of Men. Of the first sort were their Sacrifices of Coca (an Herbe of much esteeme) of Mayz, Peathers, Gold and Siluer, in figures of little Braills, or in the forme of that which hee sought for: also of sweet Wood, and diuers other things, whereby their Temples became fo rich. They made these Offerings to obtaene a good winde, health, faire weather, and the like.

Sacrifices and Offerings.

Of the second sort of Sacrifices, were their Coyes, which are like Rabbets, and for rich men in matters of importance, Pacos (the great Camel-fashion'd sheepe) with curious obseruation of the numbers, colours, and times. The manner of killing theii Sacrifices is the same which the Moores now vse, hanging the beast by the right fore-legge, turning his eyes toward the Sunne, speaking certayne words, according to the qualitie of the Sacrifice. For if it were coloured, they directed their words to the Thunder, that they might want no water; if white, to the Sunne, that he might shine on them; if gray, to Viracocha. In Cusco they did euery yeere kill and sacrifice with this solemnitie a shorne sheepe to the Sunne, and did burne it, clad in a red Wastecote, casting small baskets of Coca into the fire. They sacrificed also small Birds on this manner: they kindled a fire of Thornes, and cast the small Birds in, certaine Officers going about with round stones, wherein were carued or painted, Snakes, Lions, Toads, Tigris, and saying, Usachum, that is, Let the victory bee giuen vs, with other words. They drew forth certaine blacke sheepe, called Vrea, which had beene kept certaine dayes without meate, and therefore vsed these words: So let the hearts of our Enemies be weakened, as these Beasts. And if they found, that a certaine piece of flesh behind the heart were not consumed by fasting, they tooke it for a bad signe. They sacrificed also blacke Dogges, which they slue and cast into a Plaine, with certayne Ceremonies, causing some kind of men to eate the flesh, which they did, lest the Inguas should bee hurt with Poyllon. And for this cause they fasted from morning till the Starrs were vp, and then glutted themselves. This was fitting to withstand their Enemies Gods. They offered shels of the Sea to the Fountaines, saying, that the shels were the Daughters of the Sea, the Mother of all waters. These shels they vsed (in manner) in all Sacrifices. They offered Sacrifice of whatsoeuer they did sowe, or rayse vp. There were Indians appointed to doe these Sacrifices to the Fountaynes, Springs, and Riuers, which passed through their Townes or by their Farmes, that they might not cease running, but alwayes water their grounds. Gumara saith, that their Priests married not, went little abroad, fasted much, although no fast lasted aboue eight dayes; and that was in their Seed-time, and in Harvest, and in gathering of Gold, and making Warre, and talking with the Deuill: yea, some of them (I thinke) for feare, because they are blind-folded when they speake with him, put out their eyes; they enter into the Temples weeping and lamenting, which the word Gnaca signifieth. They touch not their Idols with their hands, without cleane and white Linnen, they bury in the Temples the Offerings of Gold and Siluer, in their Sacrifices they cry aloud, and were neuer quiet all that day nor night: they anointed with blood the faces of their Idols, and doores of their Temples; they sprinkle also their Sepulchres. The Sorcerers did coniure, to know what time the Sacrifices should be made: which being ended, they did gather of the contribution of the people what should be sacrificed, and deliuered them to such as had charge of the Sacrifices.

f Gen. 22. sup.

g Gnaca signifieth mourning

h Accl. 22. sup.

In the beginning of Winter, at such time as the waters increased by the moysture of the weather, they were diligent in sacrificing to the Fountaynes, and Riuers which ranne by their Cities and Farmes. They did not sacrifice to the Fountaines and Springs of the Deserts. And euen to this day continueth this their respect to these Springs and Riuers. They haue a speciall care to the meeting of two Riuers, and there they wash themselves for their health, first anointing themselves with the flowre of Mayz, or some other things, adding thereto diuers Ceremonies, which they doe likewise in their Baths.

Their third kind of Sacrifices was the most vnkind and vnnatural, namely, of Men. Wee haue shewed before of their Butcheries, at the Burials of their great Lord. Besides this, they vsed in Peru to sacrifice yong Children, from foure or sixe yeeres olde to ten: the greatest part of Sacrifices were for the affaires that did import the Inguas, as in sicknesse for his health, for victory in warre, at the Coronation or giuing him the Royal Robe. In this solemnitie they sacrificed two hundred Children. The manner of Sacrifice, was to drowne and bury them with certayne Ceremonies: sometimes they cut off their heads, anointing themselves with the blood from one eare to another. They did likewise sacrifice Virgins, of such as were brought brought from their Monasteries. The common sort (as you haue heard) being like to dye, would sacrifice their owne Sonne to the Sun, or Uracocha, desiring him to be so content, and spare the Fathers life.

Xeres relatech that they sacrificed their Children, and with their blood anointed their Idols faces, and their Temple-doores, and sprinkled the same also on the Sepulchres of the dead; and that those which are sacrificed, goe thereunto voluntarily with Dances, Songs, and Mirth.

When they sacrificed, they obserued the heart, and other the inward parts for diuination, and if they saw a good signe (after their bad construction) = they danced and sung with great merriment; if a bad, they were very heauy, but, good or bad, they would bee sure to drinke deepe. They ate not their humane Sacrifices, but sometimes dried them, and presented them in Coffer of Silver.

It were an endlesse toyle, to reckon vp all the Superstitions of Peru, in which were so many Nations agreeing in disagreeing from truth, yet disagreeing in their diuertified errors. To let passe Paucura, which sat, Sacrifice, and ate their Captiues, and every Tuesday offer two Indians to the Deuill: and the drunken Prouince of Carapa, where they ate little, and drinke much, at once drinking in, and pissing out; the Mitimaes which are early at their meate, and make but one drinking in the day (which lasts from morning till night) by Bacobs Priuiledge, enioying without controll any woman they like: The Canari put their Wives to the drudgery abroad, whiles themselves spin, weau, trickt vp themselves, and performe other womanish functions at home: The Galani make their Captiues drunke, and then the chiefe Priest cutteth off their heads, and sacrificeth them. Generally, in the Mountaines they were more cruell, but all obserued bloody, beastly, Diabollicall Ceremonies, the recounting whereof must needs weary the patientest Reader.

CHAP XII.

Of their Feasts, Sepulchres, and other Peruvian Superstitions.

§. I.

Of their Kalender and Holy-dayes.

BEfore we speake of the Peruvian Festiuall times, it is not amisse to take some more generall view of their Kalender. They diuided their yeere into so many dayes iustas we doe, and into so many Moneths or Moones. To make the computation of their yeere certaine, they vsed this indutrie: Vpon the Mountaynes about Cusco there were twelue Pillars set in order, and in such distance, as euery moneth one of these Pillars did note the rising and setting of the Sunne. They called them Saccangas; by meanes whereof, they taught and shewed the Feasts, and the Seasons fit to sowe, and reape, and for other things. They did certaine Sacrifices to these Pillars of the Sunne. Euery Moneth had his peculiar name and Feasts. They sometimes began the yeere in January: but since, an Inga called Pachacuti, which signifieth a Reformer of the Temple, began their yeere in December, by reason, as it seemeth, of the Sunnes returne from Capricorne, their neerest Tropicke. I reade not of any weekes they obserued: for which they had not so certaine a rule, as the Sunnes course was for the yeere, and the Moones for the Moneth.

They obserued in Peru two kinds of Feasts: some ordinary, which set out in certain moneths of the yeere, and others extraordinary, which were for certaine causes of importance. Euery Moneth of the yeere they made Feasts and Sacrifices; and had this alike, the offering of a 100. Sheepe, but of vnlike colour and forme, according to the Moneth. In the first Moneth they made their first and principall Feast, therefore called Capacraymo, that is to say, a rich and principall Feast. In it they offered a great number of Sheepe and Lambes in Sacrifice, and burnt them with sweet wood: then they cauled Gold and Silver to bee brought vpon certaine Sheepe, setting vpon them three Images of the Sunne, and three of the Thunder, the Father, the Sonne, and the Brother. In these Feasts they dedicated the Inga Children, putting the Gnaras or Ensignes vpon them, and they pierced their eares: then some old man did did whip them with Slings, and anoint their faces with blood, in signe that they should be true Knights to the Inguas. No stranger might remayne in Cuzco during this month, and this Feast, but at the end thereof they entred, and were made partakers of the Feasts and Sacrifices after this manner. The Mamacomas or Nunnes of the Sunne made little loaves of the flower of Mays, dyed and mingled with the blood of white Sheepe, which they did sacrifice that day: Then they commanded that all strangers should enter; who let themselves in a certaine order: and the Priests which were of a certaine Linage, descending from Luzqui Tupangui, gave to every one a morcell of these small loaves, saying that they gave it them to the end they should bee vnited and confederate with the Inguas: and that they aduised them not to speake or thinke any euill against the Inguas, but alwayes to beare him good affection: for that this piece should be a winnesse of their intentions, and if they did not as they ought, would discouer them. They carried these small loaves in great Platters of Gold and Silver, appointed for that purpose; and all did receive and ate those pieces thanking the Sunne and the Inguas. This manner of Communicating they vsed likewise in the tenth month called Coyaymay, which was September, in the Feast called Cyrua. They likewise sent of these loaves to all the Guacas of the Realme, whither the people assembled to receive them: to whom they said, that the Sunne had sent them that, in signe that hee would haue them honour Him, and the Caciques. This continued from the time of Inguas Tupangui, whom we may call the Peruvian Numa, till the Spaniards substituted in place thereof their Masse, a masse of more monstrous absurdities (in their Transubstantiation, Bread-worshipping, God-eating, which they can also vse to combine Subiects, not to their Inguas or lawfull Princes, but against them, as our Powder-traitors did) then the former, notwithstanding the fairest pretexes of Christian and Catholike Titles.

Vega pag. 2. lib. 8. c. 1. tells of the Corpus Christi Solemnities in Cuzco obserued by the Spaniards carrying in Procession sumptuous Herfes with Images in them of Christ, our Lady, &c. attended by the Indians, their Caciques and Nobles honouring the Feast after their wonted Pagan Rites: viz. Some clothed with Lions skins, their heads enclosed in those of the beasts, because (they say) the Lion was beginner of their stocke; others with the wings of the great Bird Condore or Cuntur (as Angels are painted) from which they suppose themselves descended; Others with other deuises, painted with Rivers, Mountaynes, Lakes, Hills, Mountaynes, Caves, because their first Progenitors came forth of such. Others with strange deuils of apparell placed with Gold and Silver, others with Garlands thereof, others in monstrous shapes with vizors with skinnies of diuers beasts with strange gestures, and saying themselves Fooles, &c. One counterfeiting Riches another Prouince: and every Province with that which seemed to them the best inuention with greatest varietie they could imagine to giue content. Thus had they vsed to solemnize the Feasts of their Kings, and thus in my time, sayth Vega, they solemnized the Feast of the most holy Sacrament, the true God our Redeemer and Lord, every diuision of the Indians singing in their owne Languages and not the generall of the Court with Flutes and Musical Instruments, some hauing their wiues also to helpe them sing prayes, to God and the Spanish Priests and Seculars for their Conuersion: after they ascended seuen or eight steps to worship the Sacrament, each squadron diuision or company leuered from the rest ten or twelue paces, descending another way, each Nation according to their antiquitie, as they had bene conquered by the Inguas, the last first, and the Inguas themselves last of all. These went before the Priests in the least and poorest company, as hauing lost their Empire and Inheritance. These squadrons being gone, the Canaries succeeded in a squadron with their Herfes, &c. The Inguas and they being ready to quarrell, and the Spanish Officers forced to quiet them, by reason the Canarie carried a head of an Indian which he had slaine in a Duell, in a battle betwixt the Spaniards and the Indians, which the Inga said was not by his owne force but by the power of our Lord Pachacamac here present, and the Spaniards blessing, &c. The Iustice was faine to take away the head from the Canaries, the other crying Auca, Auca, against them. The Couent of Saint Domingo in Cuzco, was sometimes the Temple of the Sunne: of a Procession from thence on Saint Markes day with a tame Bull. See cap. 2. seq. which tooke vp an excommunicate person, and cast him forth of the Church, &c. 1556. The Indians called the Sacrament Pachacamac.

But to retorne to our Capacaymay, it is strange, that the Deuill had not only brought in an Apish imitation of Christian Sacraments, but of the Trinitie also in their Pagan Rites. For the Father, Sonne, and Brother, called Apompti Churumiti, and Intiguacqui, that is, Father Sunne, Sonne Sunne, Brother Sunne, had some shew of that great Mytery. In like manner they named the three Images of the Chnquilla, or God of the Aire, whence are thunders, raines and Snowes. They had one Guaca, where they worshipped an Idol called Tangataanga, which they said, was One in Three, and Three in One. Thus dorh the Deuill despite the truth, which which he would seeme to imitate, In the second moneth, called Canoy, besides the Sacrifices which they made, they cast the ashes into the River, following five or six leagues after, praying it carrie them into the Sea, for that the Viracocha should there receive this present.

In the third, fourth, and fifth moneth, they offered a hundred Sheepe, black, speckled, and gray, with many other things. In the sixth moneth they offered a hundred Sheepe more, of all colours: and then made a Feast; bringing Mayz from the fields into the house, which they yet use. This Feast is made, comming from the Farme to the House, saying certaine Songs, and praying that the Mayz may long continue. They put a quantitie of the Mayz (the best that groweth in their Farmes) in a thing which they call Pirua, with certaine Ceremonies,

10 watching three nights. Then doe they put it in the richest garment they have, and being thus wrapped and dressed, they worship this Pirua, holding it in great veneration, and saying, It is the Mother of the Mayz of their Inheritances, and that by this meanes the Mayz augments, and is preferred. In this month they make a particular Sacrifice, and the Witches demand of this Pirua, if it hath strength enough to continue vntill the next yeere. And if it answers n, then they carrie this Maiz to the Farme whence it was taken, to burne, and make anothe Pirua as before: and this foolish vanitie still continueth. In the eleventh moneth they made the Feast Iniraymi, and sacrificed an hundred Guanasos in honour of the Sunne: they made many Images of Quinua-wood carued, all attired with rich garments, they danced, and cast flowres in the high-ways, and thither came the Indians painted and singing.

20 In the eighth moneth they burned an hundred Sheepe, all gray of the colour of Viscacha, with the former Solemnities. In Tapaguis their ninth month, they burn a hundred Sheepe of Chelut colour; and likewise a thousand Cuyes (a kind of Rabbit) ro the end the Frost, Ayre, Water, and Sunne, should not hurt their Farmes. In the tenth moneth called Coyarami, they burnt a hundred white Sheepe that had freces; and then they made the Feast Situa in this manner: They assembled together the first day of the Moone before the rising thereof, carrying Torches in their hands: and when they saw it, they cryed aloud, saying, Let all harme goe away, striking one another with their Torches: which being done, they went to the common Bath, to the Rivers and Fountaynes, and eury one to his owne Bath, setting themselves to drinke foure dayes together. In this moneth also the Mamacamas made their 30 Loques (as is said) of communicating with the Sunne, and the Jagua. The Bathes, Drunkenness and some reliques of this Feast Situa remaine still, with the Ceremonies a little different, but very secretly. In the eleventh moneth they offered also three hundred Sheepe. And if they wanted water, to procure raine, they set a black Shrepteyd in the midst of a Plaine, powring much Chica about it, and giuing it nothing to eat till it rayned. This Chica is a drinke or wine made of Mayz, steeped and boyled, and will sooner make one drunke then Wine of Grapes: they haue another way to make it, by champing the Maiz, which they hold then brst, when it is done (after the beastliest manner) by olde withered women. This drunken people will spend whole dayes and nights in drinking it, and it is therefore forbidden by the Law. But what Law can preuaile against the Deuill and the Drunkard?

40 We need not goe to Peru to proue this.

The twelfth and last moneth they sacrificed a hundred Sheepe, and solemnized the Feast called Raymacanar Rayguis. In this moneth they prepared what was necessary for the children that should be made Nouices: the month following the old men made a cer:aine shew, together with the children, in rounds and turnings, which they commonly doe, when it raineth too much, or too little, and in the time of Plague.

Among the extraordinary Feasts (which were many) the most famous was that which they call Tus. This had no time prefixed, but by Necessitie or Distresse. And then the people prepared themselves threeto, by fasting two dayes; during which, they did nryther company with their wives, nor eat any meate with Salt or Garlicke, nor drinke any Chica. All did 50 assemble together in one place, where no Stranger, nor any beast might be admitted; they had Garments and Ornaments which serued onely for this Feast. They marched very quietly in Procession, their heads couered with their veiles, sounding of Drummes, without speaking one to another. This continued a day and a night: The day following, they danced and made good cheere for two dayes and two nights together, saying, that their Prayer was accepted. Euen still they vse one which is somewhat like this called Ayma, with Garments onely seruing to that end, and make Procession with their Drummes, hauing fasted before, concluding with good chere. And although the Indians forbear Sacrifices because of the Spaniards, yet they vse many Ceremonies still, which had their beginning from their ancient Superstitions.

d They which did this, were called Pacacmas.

Purgatorie.

The Indians of Peru beleue commonly, that the Soule liued after this life, and that the good were in glory, and the bad in paine. They vsed a wonderfull care to preserve the bodies, which they honoured after death: their Successors gave them garments, and made Sacrifices to them, especially of the Inguas, of whom wee have spoken before. In their bloudie Funerals the Women he loued best were slaine, and multitudes of other Attendants of all sorts for his new Family in the other World, and that, after many Songs and drunkenesse. They sacrificed to them many things, especially young children, and with the blood they made a stroke on the dead mans face, from one care to another. This crueltie is common through a great part of the East and West Indies, as in these places this History doth shew you: wittily auoyded once by a Portugall, who was a Captiue, and to be slaine at the Funerals of his Lord, and hauing but one eye, law better to saue his life then if hee had both. For he told them, that such a deformed and mayned fellow would be a disgrace to his Master in the other life, and so perswaded the Executors, or Executioners (if you will) to seeke a new choice. The Indians haue another Ceremony more general, which is, to set meate and drinke vpon the graue of the dead, imagining they did feed thereon. At this day, many Indian Infidels doe secretly draw their dead out of the Churchyard, and bury them on Hills, or vpon passages of Mountaynes, or else in their owne houses. They haue also vsed to put Gold and Siluer in their mouth, hands, and bosome, and to apparel them with new garments, durable, and well lined. They beleue, that the soules of the dead wander vp and downe, induring cold, thirst, hunger, and trauell: and for this cause they vse their Annieries, carrying them clothes, meate, and drinke.

Pedro de Cieza reporteth, that in Cenu in the Prouince of Cartagena (which we here mention for proximitie of Rites, rather then of place) neere to a Temple built in honour of the Deuill, there was taken forth an innumerable quantitie of Sepulchres, more then a Million of them, old and new. Himselfe was there present. Much treasure was found in the Graues. Juan de la Torre tooke forth of one Sepulchre more then fiftie thousand Pezoes. The Great Men adorned their Sepulchres with Vaults and Towres, and had with them interred their Women, Seruants, Meate, Chicha, Armes and Ornaments. He addeth, that the Deuill (in the shape of some principall person deceased) would sometimes appeare, and shew them newes out of that other World, how he liued and fared there. And hence (it seemes) came that spoyle of so much wealth, and so many persons for their Funerals. But take heed (Reader) that you doe not beleue it was the Deuill that was wont to appeare in some habit of afflicted soules, and demanded Drges and Masses for their manumission out of Purgatory! Alas, the Deuill was confined to the Indies, and would neuer haue bene so good a Purueyor for the Popes Kitchen, And certes, if our Christian Ancesters had not their wiues and goods buried in their graues, with Food, Rayment, and Ornaments: yet these things were also buried with them, whiles the feares of Purgatory made them willing to endow the Priests and Monasteries, and bestow on Lights and other Rites, that which should haue maintayned their Houles, their Wiues, and Children. But how came we from Peru to Rome? Nay, how comes Rome, if not from Peru, as more lately discovered, yet with Peru, and with, and from, other Heathen Nations in the World, in her manifold Ceremonies and Superstitious Rites: as this Relation of Peru, for their Confessions, Processions, and many other Rites will shew: And one day I hope more fully to acquaint the World, when wee come in our Pilgrimage to visit Christian-Antichristian Rome. Worle Sepulchres then the better (to returne to our American Historie) were those which Herrera mentions within fifty leagues of Popayán, where the Husband hath bin seene to eate the Wife; Father and Son, Brother and Sister haue renewed aneerer proximitie and butcherly incorporation: where Captiues are fatted and brought forth with Songs; his members by piece-meale cut off and eaten, whiles himselfe liued and seeth it. Since, the inhabiting of Saint James of Arma, they haue eaten more then eight thousand Indians and some Spaniards.

This our Author testifieth (let vs a little view the present state of Peru) that Los Reyes in twelue degrees consisteth of three thousand households: it is one of the best Climates in the World, not subiect to plagues, hunger, raine, thunder, but alwayes cleere. It is the Seat of the Viceroy and Royall Councell and Inquisition. John Ellis, which was partaker of Sir Richard Hawkins his Aduenture, saith, that Lima is neere as big as London within the Walls: the Houles are of Lome: here are nigh an hundred thousand Negres: it raineth not there, but it doth within twelue leagues. There are mainteyned a hundred m Horfemen, and an hundred Carbines. At Paricauo it is as cold as in England, in Winter. They paffed to Cufco in thofe wayes before mentioned, made by Guaianacapa. Cufco is now without a Wall, as large as Briftoll. At Potoffi there worke neere an hundred thouland Indians, brought in courtes thither to the Mines by the Cafiques. Betweene Cufco and Potoffi is continuall Trade; the Lords by the way will entertaine men with abundance of Plate, and Guard (if they like) them with three or foure hundred Indians, Imperiall Village of Potoffi is in nineteene degrees, it hath five hundred houfholds of Spaniards, and about fifty thouland Indians going and coming. Alexandro Vesputo, who fayth he liued in Peru thirty and foure yeeres, and had travelled thorow all the Kingdome, hath written, that in Potoffi and Porto are three hundred Mines of Spaniards, and five thouland of Indians; and that the Kings part there is two Millions of Silver; in Chili one, and one and a halfe of Gold; all the Gold and Silver which yeerely comes to Lima is twelue Millions. This Lima is the fame m with Los Reyes before mentioned, and is an Archiepiſcopall See; and hath vnder it the Bifhops of Quito, Cufco, Guananga, Arequipa, Pax, Plata, Trugilla, Guanuco, Chachapoya, Portus Vetus, Guaiaquil, Popayan, Carebi, Saint Michael, and Saint Francis.

MO ROMAN.

Eroymo Roman a Spanifh Fryer, hath written ſomewhat largely of the Indian Ceremonies, in his ſecond Tome of the Common-wealths of the World; eſpecially of New Spaine and Peru: but therein and in other his Relations differs from other, perhaps more vnderſtanding Writers. From Florida to Panama, hee affirms, there was little Religion or Politie; that they acknowledged One True God Immortall and inuiſible, reigning in Heauen, whom they called Tocahunaguamaoroceti: which, they ſaid, had a Mother named Atabex, and a Brother called Guaica. He tels of their Images, that an Indian, going through a Wood, ſaw the tree ſhake, which ſtriking him in feare, hee approached to that which made moſt noyſe, and asked what hee would haue, and who hee was. The tree (the Deuill, or the Lye) made anſwere, That hee ſhould firſt ge call a Bobique or Prieſt; which coming to the tree demanded, Why hee was ſent fir; and was by the tree intruſted how to make thereof an Image and Temple, and ordayned Sacrifices and Ceremonies; which by cutting of that tree was preſently effected, and the Dedication yeerely ſolemnized. The truth of the Hiſtory I know not; of the Myſtery is plaine, that they which make them, are like vnto them; and ſuch Blocks may beſt be taught of Blocks their blockiſh Deuotions.

In New Spaine the Sunne (he ſayth) was their chiefe God, and they erected to him the moſt ſumptuous Temples in the World; beſides other artificiall Deities innumerable, in matter and forme infinitely diuerſified like Birds, Beaſts, Serpents (one kind like the Picture of Eue with the Serpent) like the Grecian Bacchus, like their mured Biſhops, like Frogs, or other naturall or imaginary formes. Any thing which could eyther hurt or benefit them, they obſerved as Gods. In Mexico they had (hee ſayth) diuers degrees of their Prieſts: the firſt of the High Biſhop or Pope, in the Mexican Language called Ichnatecoſtli, in the Totonac tongue Papa (as alſo we haue before obſerued) the ſecond was as a Biſhop, and had other inferior Prieſts ſubordinate. When the Spaniards erected their Deuotions in Mexico; they did not pray for the Papa (left they might be interpreted of this Ebnike Pope) but called him the High Biſhop. Their Biſhop they called Hupix, which ſignifies the Great Miniſter of God; Their Prieſts Teniz Piqueu that is, Gods Officers. Other Functions bare name of their particular Offices, Treafurer, Veſtry-keeper and the reſt. Some Provinces in New Spaine had ſixe Prieſts, which were as it were Patriarkes or Archbiſhops, all vnder the Pope aforeſaid: all addiſſed to Abſtinance and Chaſtitie, not drinking ſtrong Drinke, and calling their eyes to the ground if they ſaw a woman; profeſſing much grauitie and mortification; eſteemed as Saints, and of great authoritie and ſway in the State.

ed by Citizens or honourable persons, and others which liued neere the Temple, vnder a speciall Matter of Ceremonies called Telpuchitlat. Many other things he writes of the Religion of New Spaine, partly agreeing with our former Relations, partly diuers, or contrarie. The like also of Peru: where the chiefe Priest (he sayth) was stiled Uilama: the Temples were most magnificent, which they erected on high grounds or Hill tops, making foure round Mounts of earth, higher each and lesser then the former; in the middelt building the Temple in foure squares like Cloysters of Monasteries, within which were Altars, and in the most eminent place the rich and pompous Image of the Sunne. Their Temples had two doores, to which they ascended by thirty steps. They were rich on the inner side, being for the most part Gold, Silver, or other rich Metals. On the Easterne part was an Oratorie or Chancell against the Sun-rising, ascended by six steps with a thicke wall, and a hollow part therein, which contained the Image of the Sunne with rayes of Gold (as we paint it) by reflexion of the Sun-beames yeelding a Sun-like lustre. Of all their Temples those of Pachicama and Cusco were most famous: to which were Pilgrimages from the Prouinces (as to Saint James, our Lady, and other famous Holies in Christendome) three hundred leagues distant. If I should follow this Fryer in his large Obseruations of the American Rites, I might soone out-goe your patience, and somewhere perhaps the Truth: contenting my selfe therefore with that before obscured out of the most indicious Authors (if your Author bee iudicious) I remit those that would further know his Relations to himselfe; hauing chosen a little, and that here by it selfe inserted.

And thus we take our leaue of this Continent, and must into the adioyning Sea, to observe matters of principall note we shall there find.

And now I must obey the Spaniards Law, which will admit no strangers trafficke in Peru, and are zealous of any Carriall, which shall hold longer and more familiar Discourse with America, although they haue rather forced her to their lusts, then wooed her to their loues. I also beginne to grow wearie of this trauell in another World, willing to looke homewards; and therefore am now imbarqued on the Peruvian Coast, where the Peaceable Sea may free me of those former dangers whereto my Pilgrimage was subiect in passing along snowie and fierie Hills; deceitfull, vnuholosome Bogs; scorching sandy Plaines; Wildernesses inhabited with wild beasts; Habitations peopled with wilder and more beastly Men; and now by this commoditie of my Paper-barke, I may both direct my course homewards, and yet walke, as intending another contrary, or diuers Voyage. And euen as those Heauenly Planets in their Wandering and yet most constant course, are guided by the general motion of that Vniuersall Wheele, and yet forget not their owne peculiar: so I, in my wandering Discourses propound all and euery place of the World, to be the place of my Exercise, and subiect of my labour, but yet the smoke of Ithaca is sweetest, and my knowing all, would bee but a melancholy Maze, if I should not come home to fill English eares with the newes. The Reader also, by this time wearied, will be glad to heare of an end.

In this Sea we may see many Ilands which Nature hath seemed to set, as Centinels along the Coast, to hold their watch, as Skowts to espie, and as Garrisons to defend their Soueraigne, Earth, lest the Ocean (by secret vndermining, or by violent and tempestuous force) should be too busie an encrocher.

The Earth also on this side, finding her selfe more strongly assailed then on the other, hath summoned them all home to her borders, and placed them for her better defence in stations neere her, not suffering them to stay abroad, as in other Seas is vsuall: so that there are almost no Ilands in this widest of Seas, the Peaceable, but neere the mayne. If there bee any, they are obscure, small, and not worthy our Relation: as for those of Salemone and New Guinæa,

Guinea, with their Neighbours, they are reckoned to ^f another Continent, if they bee not continent themselves; and for the Archipelago of Saint Lazaro, these Islands may be reckoned vntuly Borderers, which, while it is vncertaine whether they should acknowledge the Soueraigntie of Asia, Terra Australis, or America, are loyall to none; and therefore, where they are best knowne, are knowne by the name of S. Theenes; a name fitting their nature and disposition. Thus did Magellane find them, from whom (besides other things) they stole his Boat, which by force he was forced to recover. Such did our Countymen ^g in Master Candibes renowned Voyage find them, who saw also their Images of Wood in the head of their Boats, like the Images of the Deuill, Temple, and Saint, best fitting their deuotions: and such did Oliver Noort find them, who came crying about him, Iron, Iron, offering him, 10 Fruits in exchange for peeces of Iron; and if any opportunitie offered it selfe, stealing close-ly, or openly, any thing they could lay hold on. They shot at them in vaine, so actiue were they in diuing vnder the water, and continuing there, as if they had beene fitted alike to both Elements. The women also, no lesse then the men. They are a beastly people, polluting themselves in promiscuous lusts, and branded (of them) with the markes of their intemperance; the Pockes hauing eaten their noses and lips. They are browne, fat, long of stature: the men go naked; the women weare a leafe before them, so that they beare some resemblance to the Pictures of Adam and Eue. Their Boats are twentie foot long, and but a foot and halfe broad, cunningly wrought. They are extremely greedie of Iron, of which metall the Hollanders caft five peeces into the Sea, 10 to try them, and one of them fetcht them all out. But lest these Theenes rob vs of our intended Deuotions, and our Reader of patience in longer stay heere, wee will looke backe towards the Straits, and so compasse the other side of America. Many Islands wee may see heere nere the shore, all along as wee passe. But what should wee trouble the Reader with names? I haue small deuotion to them, vnlesse I had some intelligence of some Deuotion in them; further then that wherein they agree with the Peruvian Rites, wherewith you were last tired.

In the Straits are some Islands of small quantitie, of smaller dignitie: and who would stay there, where the Penguins are your best Holts; the rest are Giants or Man-eating Sauiages: and in the next out of the Straits, but Seales, who all can yeeld but an inhospitalitie. 30 Neyther hath proud Nature in all those Coasts of Chica, or Brasill, beene prodigall of her Island force, foreseeing that they would, eyther bee vsurped by Seales and Sea Monsters, or other more vnnaturall and monstrous inhumane shape, of Deuillish inhumane, from the Land. It seemes the hath beene the more sparing in the numbers, nobleness, or quantitie of Islands, in all those Seas, which wee haue most swiftly furrowed, that thee might in the great Bay more bountifullly impart her plentie, and shew her excellence in that kind. This is a great field, as it were, sowne with Islands of all sorts; the Earth seemes a louing Mother, which holds open her spacious lap, and holds our her stretched armes betwene Paria and Florida: the Ocean also, as ielous of the Earths more naturall Inheritance and claime vnto them, seemes to neglect his course to the Southward, and heere sets in with a violence 40 current, alway forcing his watery forces to walke (or rather to runne and flie) these rounds, to see that the Continent keepe her hand off, and not once touch his conqueied possessions; that though (like Tantalus) she seemeth alwayes to bee closing her open hands and mouth vpon them; yet are they kept by this officious watchfulness of the Sea, that thee can neuer incorporate and vnite them to her selfe. Easily can they vnfold this Mystery, that are acquainted with the scito of the Earth, and the swiftnesse of the current in this vaill space of Earth and Sea, setting in at Paria, and after out againe at Florida, with admirable and incredible violence.

To begin then at Paria: (for of Orenoque and his mouth full of Islands, and of Trinidad, that hath escaped the Riuer, and betaken her selfe wholly to Neptunes Loues, we haue already spoken.) Heere two rowes and rankes of Islands make shew and muster of themselves: the one extending East and West, the other North and South. Of the former is Margarita, which (like many a Gallant, whose backe robbeth his belly, whose bowels empty of necessities, alway are croking and complaining of superfluitie in ornament and fashion) so hath shee a World of Pearles to adorne her, but wanteth water to satisfie her thirst: 50 the store of Pearles thee can communicate of her plentie; water thee is faine to borrow of her Neighbours.

The like we may say of Cubagua, her next Neighbour, that by her store of Pearles, hath wonne Suiters from our, and the American World, whom she can neyther bid eate or drie of her Land-hospitalitie, where Grass and Water are wanting. But as it vsually comes to passe with these Fashion-mongers, which neglecting necessities, must at last be neglected of their ornaments too: So this Island, which sometimes was so rich, notwithstanding all her Pearles of the Ind. s.

Pearles she pawned for her dyet (in so much that the Kings o five amounted ordinarily to fifteen thousand Ducks a yeere) yet now seemes almost beggered, her Pearle-fishes, and Pearle-fishers, most of them gone; and now it is time for vs to be gone from her too.

Yet let vs heare this Relation of Herrera before we goe, of an Earth-quake which happened there the first of September 1530. which rayled the Sea foure fathoms, ouerthrew the Fort:esse, opened the Earth in many places, whence issued much Salt-water, as blacke as Inke, sinking of Brimstone. The Mountayne of Cariaco remayned open. Many died of feare, and some were drowned. Captaine William Parker Anno 1601. hauing taken Puerto Bello, and Melender the Gouvernour, landed in Margarita, and received five hundred pound in Pearle, for ranfome of Prisoners: tooke a ship which came from Angola with three hundred and fcutient Negroes. Ouiedo hath written in his nineteenth Booke of the Iland of Cubagua. It hath no trees, and but little grasse. There is a Fountaine on the East part thereof, nere the Sea, which casteth forth a bituminous substance like Oyle, which is said to be profitable for medicine, and may be found two or three leagues floring in the Sea.

and other fishes, and Observations of those Seas.

little businesse can we find any further, in following that Westerne ranke, Orchilia, Oruba, and the rest, and therefore will looke Northwards, to that other ranke we spake of: where leauing Tobago on the right hand, wee see before vs Granata, Saint Vincent, Saint Lucia, Dominica; and then circling to the Northwest Desiderata, Saint Christopher, Holy Croffe, and others, whose names, without other matter of Historie, would be but tedious to the Reader. These, and a multitude of others vntionned, are called the Ilands of the Caribes, or Canibals. The Inhabitants eat mans flesh, and passe to other Ilands with their Boats to the hunting of Men, as other Hunters doe for Beasts. Carib signifieth Stranger, for so the more innocent Indians esteeme them.

At home they onely couer their priuities, but in time of Warre they vse many ornaments. They are nimble, bearded (vsing little Pincers to pull out the haire) shoote poysoned Arrows, bore holes in their eares and nostrils for elegancie, which the richer sort deke with Gold, the poorer with Shells. From the tenth or twelfth yeere of their age they carrie leaues, to the quantitie of Nuts, all the day in eyther checke, which they take not out, but when they receiue meate or drinke. With that Medicine they make their teeth blacke: they call other men, Women, for their white teeth, and Beasts for their haire. Their teeth continue to the end of their liues without ache or rottenesse.

When the men went on man-hunting (which they did sometimes in long and farre Expeditions) the women manfully defended the Coast against their Enemies: and hence it is Martyrs iudgement, that the Spaniards tell of Ilands inhabited only with women; which may be the true interpretation, happily, of I know not how many places in America, besides those of Asia and Africa, reported Amzonian. Pontius would warre vpon the Canibals, but on the Iland of Guadalupa, his women were taken, his men slaine, himselfe forced to depart from that, both place and enterprife. Columbus in his second Voyage landed on this Iland, where he saw their round houses, hanging beds of Cotton, and certaine Images which he had thought had bene their Gods: but by Interpreters after learned, that they were but for ornament, and that they worshipped nothing but the Sunne and Moone, although they make certaine Images of Cotton, to the similitudes of such phantasies as (they sayd) appeared to them in the night. They found Earthen Vessels, like ours, also in their Kitchens, Mans flesh, Duckes flesh, and Goose flesh, all in one pot, and other on the Spits, realie to be laid to the fire. Entering into their inner Lodgings, they found Faggots of the bones of mens armes and legges, which they reſerue to make heads for their Arrows. They found in their Villages one Hall, or Palace, to which they assemble, as to their Theatre, or Playing place.

The Inhabitants at the sight of the Spaniards were fled. In their houses they found about thirtie children Captiues, which were reſerued to bee eaten, but they tooke them for their Interpreters. Here they saw Parrots bigg, r then Pheasants, with backes, breasts, and bellies of Purple colour. They vsed to prey on Hispaniola, and Saint Johns Ilands, or Buriquen: and if these, in their warres with the Canibals, tooke any of them, they were sure to goe to pot (v. n. in the first sense) and to be eaten. Master Perey saith in Guadalupa they found a Bath so hot, that it boyled them peece of Pork in halfe an houre. In Meniu also they found a Bath like like ours in England. In Mona they killed two wilde Boares, and saw a wilde Bull, which was an ell betwene the hornes. Three leagues from thence is Manetta, where the Fowles flew ouer them as thicke as haile, and made them deafe with their noyse: they cannot ter foot on the ground, but shall tread on Fowles or Egges, wherewith they laded two Boates in three houres. Master Chalenge saith, that in the Ieuen Antiles of Saint Vincent, Granado, Lucia, Matalina, Dominica, Guadalupe, and Asloy, are not about one thousand Indians. They brought away a Frier, named Blasem, which had bene sixteene moneths Slave in Dominica, whom they saued, his fellowes being slaine, because hee taught them to make Sayles.

M. H. Chalenge.

- 10 A little before Master Hawkins was there, in the yeere 1564. * a Spanish Carauell coming to water at Dominica, one of the Canball Ilands, the Sauages cut her cable in the night, and so she draue on shore, and all her company was surprisid and eaten by them.

u Nov. M. Iohn Hawkins ep. Hak 10m. 3.

- Master George Pearce relateth of the Dominicans (which they visited in their Virginia Voyage) that they paine themselves to keepe off the Muskita: that they weare the haire of their heads a yard long, platted in three plaits, suffer none on their faces, cut their skinnes in diuers Workes or Embroideries: they ate their Enemies; lap spittlepit into their mouths like Dogges; worship the Deuill; poyson their Arrowes. When they were heere, they had sight of the chiefest which Nature yeldeth, the fight of the Whale with the Sword-fish and Thresher, which killed him in two houres fight. The Sword-fish is not * great, but strong-made: his Sword groweth vp right out of his neck, like a bone, foure or five inches broad, and about a yard long (sometimes they are greater) with prickles on both sides. The Thresher hath a broad and thicke tayle. Both these hold a naturall conspiracie against this Grant of Nature, the one on the top of the water threshing him vpon the head with violent blowes, that found as a peece of Ordnance, and may be heard two leagues; forcing him to hide his head in his Mothers lap, which yet betrayeth him there to the Sword-fish, who is readie to receiue him on his Naturall Blade, and layneth the Sea with his blood. The Whale hath no remedie, but with bellowing grones, heard further then the Threshers blowes, to secke to the shore; and there embayed to make his part good without danger of an Vnderminer: otherwise becoming prey to these his Aduerfaries. Thus we see Greatness not 30 alway exempt from dangers, yea perishing by fine force of weaker Enemies. This our Author (for we cannot passe from Iland to Iland but by Sea, and may not be wholly idle by the way) telleth, that betwixt the Tropikes, they were attended continually with three kinds of Fishes, Dolphins, Bonitos, and Sharkes; the first like to the Rain-bow, his head differing from other fishes, being halfe a span straight vp erected from his mouth, the greatest foure foot long: a foule of these followed them neere one thousand leagues, knowne to bee the same, by some hurts wherewith they had marked them.

x S. R. Hawkins. y The like Sea-bawking is betwene the flying fish (which hath as it were Bat wings) & the Bird Alcatraz, and the Bonito, the one in the Aite, the other in the Sea, pursuing him.

- The Bonitos are like Mackrills, but greater, some as bigge as a man could lift. The Sharkes haue their mouthes vnder their bellies, that they cannot bite their prey without a halfe turne, and the helpe of his tayle. These are the most rauinous, and some hold, ominous: they haue found in their bellies, Hats, Caps, Shoes, Ropes ends, and whatsoeuer hanged by the 40 Ships sides: they haue thirteene rowes of teeth: They spawne not, but whelp, like the Dogge, or Wolfe, and at night or towards stormes, receiue their young into their mouthes for laterie. I haue seene them (sayth Sir Richard) go in and out, being about a foot and halfe long. Little fishes alway accompany them, and feed on the scraps: they are lesse then a Pilchard, streaked blacke and white (as in coloured Liuries) keeping on the head, fins, and backe of the other.

- Another obseruation of this our Author, is the Scurvie or Scotbuxe, * whereunto they are much subiect in Navigations neere the Line; the cause he ascribeth, the weaknesse of the stomacke in immoderate heate; salt meates, specially fish, Calmes and the Sea-water, which 50 could not but infect the World, if it were not otherwise affected and mowed with Windes, Tides, and Currents: an instance whereof he sheweth in the Queenes Naue, in the yeere of our Lord 1500. at the Asperes many moneths becalmed, the Sea thereby being replenished with feuerill sorts of Cellies and formes of Serpents, Adders, and Snakes, Greene Yellow, Blacke, White, and some partie-coloured, whereof many had life, being a yard and halfe, or two yards long. And they could hardly draw a Bucket of water, cleere of some corruption withall. In twentie yeeres, wherein he vied the Sea, hee could giue account of two thousand consumed with this disease.

- In this Voyage, they were forced for want of fresh Water, to distill Sea-water, which they found whollome and nourishing. I might follow our Author in his Obseruations of these Seas (which he sayth, vnder the Line, is best to crosse in January, February, and March) 60 and of the Ilands of Cape Verde * (shew here by vs obserued) being in the height of these Ilands, where now we are discouering: which he sayth, are the most vnwhollome in the World,

World, and had halfe his people on this Coast sicke of shaking, burning, frenzie-feuers: a man can scarcely goe on the Earth, though well shod, when the Sun shineth: and the Breeze, which in the afternoon cooles them from the North-east, pierceth them also with sudden cold: so that the Inhabitants goe thicke clothed with Caps and Kerchers, besides their Hats, their Suites of thicke cloth, and Gownes well lined or furred to prevent danger. Sleeping in the open Ayre, or in the Moone-shine, is there very vnwholsome: The Moone shining on his shoulder on the Coast of Guinee, left him with such paine, that for twentie houres space he was like to run mad. But what Moone-shine hath made mee lunatique, to run from these American Islands, to those, and the Coast of Africa? Patience, Reader, and I will bring thee backe in a fresher pursuit.

In Dominica (where we were list on shore) it is related by one which wrote the Earle of Cumberland his Voyage to Port Rico, that they haue their severall Houses to other vses private, but haue a common Hall or Dyet for to eate in together, as Lycargus instituted to prevent Riot, amongst his Spartans. The Maydes in this land are laid to weare no Garments, and the first night of their Marriage they tye them so hard, that the fifth hangs ouer. In Tortuga they tolled certaine Spaniards ashore, vnder pretence of Traffique, and then ate them.

Bishopricke &
Monastie.

Boriquen * or Saint Iohn: is three hundred miles long, and seuentie broad, trauesed with a rough Mountayne, which yeelds many Riues. The Spaniards haue there some Townes. The Earle of Cumberland in the yeere 1597. hauing by his Sea forces stayd the going of five Carikes to the Indies, whereby the King of Spaine lost three Millions, and the Merchants foure times as much; sayled to Saint Iohns Riue in this land, and tooke it with diuers Forts; here was a Bishops See * and Cathedral Church with a Fryery, foure hundred Souldiers in pay, besides three hundred others: it was accounted the Mayden Towne and inuincible, and is the Spanish Key and their first Towne in the Indies. He brought from thence neere fourescore cast Peeces, and much other wealth. This land was first conquered by John Ponce and by him inhabited: the Naturals were altogether like in Religion and manners to the Inhabitants of Hispaniola; and so were the Plants and Fruits also. Ouido hath written hereof largely in his sixteenth Booke. There growes the Tree called Legno Santo, more excellent then Guaiacan for the Neapolitan and many other diseases: there is also white Gumme good for Ships in stead of Pitch, and there are Bats, which the Inhabitants did eate. These Islands are not so well peopled as in former times: and many of them are retyring places of Rebels and Fugitiues, which take this shelter against the Spanish cruelties. Hispaniola is the next land of name, but shall haue a place by it selfe, as a Map and Summarie of all the other.

Iamaica is almost as large as Boriquen. * It is extremely subiect to the Uracani, which are such terrible gulls of Winde, that nothing can resist them. They turne vp Trees, ouer-turne Houses, transport the Ships from Sea to Land, and bring with them a most dreadfull and horrible confusion. They raigne, or tyrannize rather, in August, September, and October. The Inhabitants are of quicker wits then the other lands.

Cuba is more Northerly, and extendeth it selfe three hundred leagues in length, and twentie in breadth, full of Mountaynes, Woods, Fennes, Riuers, Lakes, both salt and fresh. This land hath had many names given by the Spaniards: Fernandina, Ioanna, Alpha and Omega. The Woods are replenished with Swine and Kine; the Riuers yeeld Golden Sands. It hath sixe Spanish Colonies. Saint Iago, a Bishops See, is the chiefe Towne in the land; and Hauana is the chiefe Port of the Indies. Ouido reckons two things most admirable therein: one a Valley, trenling betweene two Hills three leagues, which produceth abundance of stones, enough to lade many Ships, of a perfect round forme, like Bullets: The other a Fountaine, whence Bismar, or a certaine Pitchie substance floweth and stoteth iuen to the Sea, excellent for pitching of Ships. In this land the common people were prohibited the eating of Serpents, as beinge referred for Royall Dainties, and the Prerogatiues of the Kings Table.

Columbus * sayling by this land, lighted into a Nauigable Riue, the water whereof was so hot, that none might endure his hand long therein. He elpied also a Canoe of fishermen, which after a strange fashion vsed to hunt fish, and take them by the helpe of another fish, which they kept tyed in a cord by the Boats side, and when they elpied a fish, loosed the cord; this hunting fish presently layes hold on the prey, and with a skinne like a Purle growing behind her head, graspeth it so fast, that by no means it can be taken from her, till they draw her vp above the water, and then not able to abide the Aire, she resigneth her prey to the fishers, which leape out into the water, and take it; in recompence whereof they give her part of her purchase. He found also in this Coast Waters, for the space of fortie miles, white and thicke like Milke, and as though Meale had bene strewed through that Sea: other waters he found spotted with white and blacke, and others all blacke. An old man of fourecore yeeres being a Gouvernour in Iland, came to Columbus, and with great grauntie flattered him, and counselled him to vse his victories well, remembering, that the foules of men haue two Iournies, after they are departed from their bodies: The one foule and darke, prepared for iniurious and cruell persons: the other pleasant and delectable, for the peaceable, and louers of quiet.

Many other Ilands might be here mentioned, and but mentioned: little to our purpose I finde in them. Of Aculamil, neere Lucatan, is already spoken. Of the Lucate or Lucate, the greatest thing is their great number, which some esteeme about foure hundred. Lucate is a generall or collective name, as Zeland, Legnis, Malacco. The Spaniards haue carried the Inhabitants, as Martyr signifieth, into seruitude, to lesse their insatiable desire of Gold. The women of these Ilands were so faire, that many of the bordering Countries, forsooke their owne Countre, and chose this for their loue. These women were nothing till the time of their menstruous purgation, at which time the Parents made a Feast, as if they were to be married; and after that, she weareth before those parts Nets of Cotton, filled with leaves of Hearbs. They obey their King so strictly, that if he command them to leape downe from an high Rocke, alledging no other reason then his will, they performe the same. But they are now, and were long since desolate, being wasted in the Mines of Hispaniola and Cuba, or by Diseases and Famine, to the number of twelue hundred thousand.

But I am loth to wilder my selfe further in this Wildernesse of Ilands (for so haue the Spaniards made them:) Columbus in one Voyage gaue names to seuen hundred Ilands; of which I can report little fitting this our Pilgrimage. Hispaniola is the Lady and Queene of them all, and (as it were) the common Store-house of all their excellencies: and therefore we will there make some longer stay.

CHAP XIII.

Of Hispaniola: and a touch homewards at Bermuda.

p. I.

The Names, naturall Rarities, and Creatures thereof.

Hispaniola or Spagniola is Eastward from Cuba, it was of the first Inhabitants called Quisqueia, afterwards Haiti, and by Columbus Cipanga and Ophir. The Spaniards call it as we first mentioned, and also Saint Dominick or Domingo of the chiefe Citie an Archepiscopall See. It containeth in compass five hundred and fiftie leagues. They called the Iland Quisqueia, which signifieth Great and Al, thinking that the Sunne gaue light to no other World then this, and the other Ilands adioyning. Haiti signifieth Craggie, and such is the Iland in many places, with high Craggie Hills, overlooking the deepe and darke Vallies. But in many places it is most beautifull and flourishing. It seemeth to enioy a perpetuall Spring, the trees alway flourishing, and the Medowes clothed in greene. The Ayre and the Waters are wholesome. It is in manner equally diuided with foure great Rivers descending from high Mountaynes, whereof Imma runneth East; Atibonnicum, West; Nababa, to the South; and Iache, Northward. Some diuide it into five Prouinces, Caicimu, Huababa, Cababo, Bainoa, Guacaciarima. In the first of these there is a great Caeue, in a hollow Rocke, vnder the root of a high Mountayne about two furlongs from the Sea; the entrie is like the doores of a great Temple. Many Rivers stole their waters from the sight of the Sun, the vse of men, and the ordinary Officers of Neptunes Custome-house, and by secret passages came and hid themselves in this Caeue. So the Ilanders imagined, seeing diuers rivers swallowed vp of Orrell, Theat. p. Columbus called it Cipanga, thinking it to be that Iland which Marcus Paulus calls by that name in the East. Ent. l. 3. He called it also Ophir, thinking it to be that whence Solomon had his Gold. Shall. Dec. 3. l. 7.

of the earth, after they had runne fourescore and ten miles, and such a sinke or channell of waters in the Caue.

The Ilanders beleued, that the Iland had a vitall spirit, and that there it doth breathe: and a hole therein is the female nature thereof (for of that sexe they deeme it) euen as Antiquitie conceited the ebbing and flowing of the Sea to be the breath of Demogorgon.

Dec. 7. 8.

Andreas Morales entred in with his ship, which was almost swallowed with the Whirlpools, and boyling of the water. Clouds engendered of those watery conflicts, and darkness, layed hold on his eyes; terrible noyse, as of the fells of Nilus, made deafe his eares, that when with labour he had gotten out, he seemed to haue escaped the barkings of Cerberus, & the obscure Vaults of Hel. Vpon the tops of high Mountaynes, the same Morales saw a Lake, 10 three miles in compasse, into which many little Riuer ran, without any other apparant issue.

In Bainoa is a Lake of S. le water, notwithstanding it receiue thoure great fresh Riuer from the East, West, North, and South, and twenty smaller: and within a furlong of the Lake, on the Northside, are two hundred fresh-springs. It is thought to haue a large entrance with the Ocean, because they are Sharkes (great Sra-fishes, which deuoure men) in the same. Here are stormes and tempests, which seeme to bee the Caters and Pur-wors for those fishes, in drowning many. Diuers other Lakes are mentioned in this Iland; one whereof partly Salt, partly fresh, is five and twenty miles long, and eight broad. They are all in a large Plaine 120. miles in length & breadth, betweene 18. and 25. There is another Vale 200. miles long, and broader then the former: another as broad as that, which is 180. miles long. 20

Barr de la Casa telleth of a Kingdome in Hispaniola, called Magna, which signifieth a Plaine, compassed about with Hills, which watered the samewith 30000. Riuer and Brookes; twelue of them were very great: and all which come from the West (twenty thousand in number) are enriched with Gold.

Cotechi is a Plaine on the tops of Hills, so high, that it is subiect to the foure seasons of the yeere. There is also another Region of the same name, most barren, and yet most rich; full of Mynes, otherwise vnfruitfull; a thing common in Nature, that great Mynes vndermine fertilitye; and not strange amongst men, that the greatest hoorders of Treasures are the most vnfruitfull, and barren in good workes. The Gold (they say) is as a liuing tree, which rooth in the centre of the Earth, sendeth forth branches vnto the vppermost face of the earth, and there sheweth forth certaine beautifull colours in stead of flowies, round stones of Golden Earth in Read of Fruits, and thinne Plates in stead of Leaues. From this Iland 9 was yearly brought foure or five hundred thousand Duckets of Gold. They imagine some Diuine Nature to bee in Gold, and therefore neuer gather it, but they vie certaine Religious expiations, abstaining from women, delicate meates and drinkes, and all other pleasures.

q Dec. 14.

There is an Iland a little from Hispaniola, which hath a Fountaine in it, comming by secret passages vnder the Earth and Sea, and riseth in this Iland: which they beleeue, because it bringeth with it the leaues of many trees, which grow in Hispaniola, and not in this Iland; the Spaniards call the Ile Archebusa. Onudo mentions a little Iland betweene this and Samatca, called Nauanza, halfe a league from which are many Rockes in the Sea about five foot couered with water: out of which issueth and spouteth, about the water of the Sea, a spout of fresh water as great as a mans arme, that it may bee receiued and taken sweet and good. This was scene by Stephano della Rocca a man of good credit.

L. 6. C. 12.

r R. Tom. sen. op.
Hist. tom. 3.

The Ile of Hispaniola is much infested with Flies, or Gnats, whose pricking causeth wonderfull swelling: also there is a Worme called Nigua, which crepteth into the soles of mens feet, and makes them grow as bigge as a mans head, with extremitie of paine; for which they haue no remedy, but to open the flesh sometimes three or foure inches, and so digge them out. The Gnats are so troublesome, that the Inhabitants doe therefore build low Houses, and make little doores, which they keepe close, and forbear to light Candles. Nature hath to this disease ordained a remedy, namely, certaine Creatures, called Cucui, 50 which is a kind of Beetles. These haue four lights, which shine in the night; two in the feate of his eyes, and two which he sheweth when hee openeth his wings. The people get these and bring them to their houses, which there doe them a double seruice: they kill the Gnats, and giue so much light, that men may see to reade and write Letters by the light of one; and many of them seeme as so many Candles. They had but three fords of foure-tooted Beasts, and those very little. Now men are exhaust, and Beasts multiplied, in so strange manner, that one which was Deane of the Conception, carrying a Cow thither, there was a lue six and twentie yeeres after, and her fruitfull generation was multiplied in the Iland to eight hundred. They are now growne wild, as their Dogges also. They kill their Kine for the Hides: five and thirtie thousand were transported to Spaine when Acosta returned, in the yeere of our Lord 1587. Ants haue bene as noysome to Hispaniola, as Grasshoppers in many parts of the World: in the yeere 1519. and two yeeres after they ruined their Farme- 60 houses,

- houses, and spoyled their Oranges, Cannahstula, and their fruit-trees. They could keepe nothing in their houses which was fit to be eaten, from them: and if they had continued in like quantitie, they would haue dishabited the lland and left it desolate, But they chosely for a Saint; so whole tuition they might commit themselves in that extremitie, which fell vpon Saturninus, who was faine to become their Patron against the Pismires. These Ants were little and blacke: another sort were enemies to these, and wrought against them and chased them out of their holds, and were not hurtfull, but as good Benefactors (if Oniedo say true of them) as I can beleue of Saturninus. Other sorts there are many, of which some become winged and fill the Aire with swarms: which sometimes happens in England. On Bartholomew day 1613. I was in the lland of Foulesse on our Essex shore, where were such cloudes of these flying Pismires, that we could no were flee from them, but they filled our clothes; yea the doores of some houses where they fell, were in a manner covered with a blacke Carpet of creeping Ants; which they lay downe themselves about that time of the yeere in the Sea. Oniedo tels of other Ants with white heads, which eate through wals and timbers of houses and cause them to fall. There are some Caterpillers a span long, and others lesse, but more venomous. There are Wormes which doe so much harme in Timber, that a house of thirty yeeres in this lland would be ruinous, and seeme as old as one of a hundred in Spaine; and those which could not be old when hee wrote this, seemed as if they had stood 150. yeeres. Many other small creatures this our Author mentions, but my Relations would be too great if I should follow him.

§. II.

Of their Idols, Songs and Dances, Priests, Oracles, Superstitious Opinions and Customs.

- BEfore the Discouerie of this lland by Columbus and the Spaniards, these llanders of Hispaniola were forewarued thereof by Oracle. Their Cacique and Bubiti (that is, their Kings and Priests) reported to Columbus, that the Father of Garrionexius, the present King, and another Cacique, would needs be importunate demanders of their Zemes, or Gods of future events, and therefore abstayned fve dayes together from all meate and drinke, spending the time in continuall mourning. The Zemes made answer, That there would come, not many yeeres after, vnto that lland, a strange Nation, clothed, bearded, armed with shining Swords, that would cut a man asunder in the middle; which should destroy the ancient Images of their Gods, abolish their Rites, and slay their children. To remember this Oracle, they composed a mournfull Dittie, which they call Areito, which on some solemne dayes they vsed to sing. Their Priests were Phisicians and Magicians, or Diviners.

- Oniedo* sayth, that they danced at singing of their Areito or Ballads, which word I vse because it hath that derivation which argueth dancing as well as singing. These dances are generall thorow America. In this lland they danced, sometimes men alone, and sometimes women alone, but in great Solemnities they were mixed, and danced in a circle, one leading the dance; the measures whereof were composed to the Areito, of which one sang a Verse, and all the rest followed singing and dancing, and so thorow every Verse of the same till it was ended, which sometimes continued till the next day. Anacana the widow of the Cacique Caonabo, entertained the Spaniards with a dance of three hundred Maids. Thus these Areitos were their Chronicles and Memorials of things passed, as we read of the Bards in these parts. They vsed sometimes Drummes or Tabers to these dances, made onely of wood, hollow, and open right against that place where they did strike. In some places they covered them with Deere skins, but here were no beasts in this lland that could yeeld any for such purpose. They had Tobacco in Religious estimation, not onely for amitie, but for sanctitie also, = as Oniedo writeth, the smoke whereof they tooke in at the Nose with a sanctified Pipe fitted to both nostrils, holding the single end in the smoke of the hearbe burning in the fire, till they became senselesse. Their Priests most vsed this, which coming to themselves after this sleepe fume, deliuered the Oracles of their Zemes or Deuils, which sometimes spake by them.

- Now concerning the Zemes (which could foretell that which they could not auert) and the Superstitions of Hispaniola, = the Spaniards had bene long in the lland before they knew, that the people worshipped any thing but the Lights of Heauen; but after, by further conuersing and living amongst them, they came to know more of their Religion, of which one Ramonus, a Spanish Heremite, writ a Booke, and Martyr hath borrowed of him to lend vs. It is appar by the Images which they worshipped, that there appeared vnto them certaine illusions of euill Spirits. These Images they made of Gossamine Cotten hard stopp'd, incring, like the Pictures of the Deuill, which they called Zemes; whom they take to be the Mediators and Messengers of the great God, which they acknowledge, One, Eternal, Infinite, Omnipotent, Inuincible. Of these they thinke they obtayne raine, or faire weather; and when they goe to the warres, they haue certaine little ones which they bind vnto their fire-heads. Every King hath his particular Zemes, which he honoureth. They call the euill God by these two names, Iocanna, and Gnamauomecon, as their Predecessors taught them affirming, That he hath a Father called by these five names, Atiabeyra, Mamona, Gnacacapita, Lella, Guimaza.

They make the Zemes of diuers matter and forme: some of Wood, as they were admonished by certaine Visions appearing to them in the Woods: others, which had receiued answers of them among the Rocks, make them of Stone: some of Roots, to the similitude of such as appeare to them when they gather the Roots whereof they make their bread, thinking that the Zemes sent them plenty of these Roots. They attribute a Zemes to the particular tuition of euery thing: as sometimes the Pagan, and now the Popish Romans: some assigned to the Sea, others to Fountaynes, Woods, or other their peculiar charges. When the Beris consule with the Zemes, they goe into the House dedicated to him, and with the powder of the herbe Cebobba, snuffed into their nostrils, are distracted; after which, returning as out of a trance, he telleth, That the Zemes had spoken to him, and vttereth his Revelations. They say, That a certaine King, called Gnamaretsu, had a Zemes, whose name was Carachinim, which often vsed to descend from the top of the house, where Gnamaretsu kept him close bound: the cause of his breaking loose was either to hide himselfe, or to goe seeke for mate, or else for the act of generation: and that sometimes being offended, that the King Gnamaretsu had not honoured him diligently, hee was wont to lie hid for certaine dayes. In this Kings Village were some children borne with two Crownes, which they supposed to be the issue of this Zemes. And when this Village was burned by the Enemy, this Zemes brake his band, and was found a furlong off, without any harme. He had another Zemes called Epiquesuana, made of wood, being in shape like a foure-footed Beast, which went often from the place where he was honoured, into the woods. When they perceived that he was gone, a great multitude gathered together to seeke him, with deuout Prayers: and when they had found him, brought him home religiously on their shoulders, to the Chappell dedicated vnto him. But after the Spaniards comming into the Island, hee fled for al together; and could neuer be found; whereby they diuined the destruction of their country.

They honoured another Zemes, in the likeness of a woman, on whom waited two other, like men. One of these executed the office of a Messenger to the Zemes, that had authoritie of Clouds, Winds, and Raine, &c. at command of this woman: the other performed the like to the Zemes of the waters that fill from the Hills, that being loosed, they might breake into floods, and overflow the Country, if the people doe not giue due honour to her Image.

lib. 6.

Let vs adde to this Relation of the Zemes of Hispaniola, an accident in Cuba. A Mariner being sicke, was there left on shore, who recouering, grew into fauour with the King, and was employed in his warres with great successe against the Enemy. He attributed his victories to the Virgin Mary, whose Picture hee had in his bosome. The King by his perswasion reiecteth his Zemes, and dedicated a Chappell and Altar to this Picture, whither hee and all his Family resorted a little before the Sun-set, bowing their heads, and saying, Aue Maria, Aue Maria; further they could not say. They beset the same with Iewels, and many Earthen pots, some with sundry meates, some with water, round about the Tabernacle, which they offered in stead of sacrifice, as before they had done to their Zemes. Being demanded, why they did thus, they answered, Left it should lacke meate. For they beleue, that Images may hunger, and doe eate and drinke.

They told of this Picture, That being carried with them into the warres (as they vse to bring their Zemes with them into the battle.) This made the Zemes of the enemy turne his backe yea, a woman (a Iye, or a Deuill) defended in the sight of them all to play the Bellona for her followers; and in a contention betwixt them, whether the Zemes or this Ladie were more excellent, two young men of each side were bound, and whether Deitie should loosen her party, that should be their God. Both inuoke: the Deuill appeared in vgly shape, and by and by a faire Virgin, wherewith the Deuill vanished (doe you beleue it) and the Virgin with touch of a Rod loosed her mans hands, which were found on the other aduerser party, being now double bound. Thus can the Deuill transforme himselfe into an Angell of Light, at Loretto, in Hispaniola, and where else soeuer hee can bee entertained; the name of Saints, and promise of Heauen, shall further his Hellish designs.

They

They had festiual Solemnities in Hispaniola to their Zemes, whereunto the Kings summoned their Subjects by public Cryers: and they, neatly dressed after their manner, painted with diuers colours of herbs, resorted thither, with their armes, thighs, legs, adorned with shells, to make Musicke in their dancing. Thus they presented themselves before the King, who sat drumming at the entrance of the Gate. When they were to sacrifice, they purged themselves first, thrusting downe a sacred hooke into their throat, and by vomit emptied their bodies. After, they went into the Kings Court, and all sat in a Ring about the Idoll, crosse-legged like Taylors, and wry-necked for reuerence, praying, that their Sacrifice might be accepted. The women in another place, when the Priests gaue warning, fell to dancing and singing (in manner as is before expressed) the prayse of their Zemes, and offered Cakes in baskets, concluding with Songs in prayse of their ancient Kings, and Prayers for future prosperitie. After this, both Sexes kneeled downe, and offered their Cakes; which the Priests receiving, cut in pieces, giuing to euery man a portion, which hee kept vntouched the whole yeere, for a holy Relique, esteeming that house in danger of Fire and Whirle-winds, that is not preserued with this reserved piece of Cake. They seemed sometimes to heare a voyce from their Zemes, (whether by the illusion of the Priests, or the Deuill) which the Priests interpreted by their behaviour: for if they danced and sung, all was well: but if they went sorrowfully, the people went forth sighing, and gaue themselves to fasting, euen to extreme faintnesse with weeping, vntill they thought their Zemes reconciled. In this Iland they had as many wives as they were able to sustaine: the Cacique Beheicus had thirtie, two of which were buried with him pe. force. Some of them were addicted to lusts of Sodometie, and others more (if more may be) vnnatural. Generally they were very luxurious, both men and women: yet they abstained from Mother, Sister, and Daughter (other degrees they spared not) thinking that such Incest would bring them to an euill death. In their buying and selling they weighed not the worth of things, but only their owne fancy, as we see in Children. Theeues they cruelly punished, empaling them on sharpe stakes aliue.

Touching the originall of man, thus they fable. There is in the Iland a Region called Cauana, where they saie that Mankind came first out of two Caves of a Mountayne called Cauta: and that the biggest sort of men came forth of the mouth of the biggest Cae, and the least sort out of the least Cae: this Cae they name Amiauna, the greater, Cauibaxagua. Before men might come out of the Cae, the mouth thereof was kept and was ched nightly, by a man whose name was Machobael, who departing further to looke abroad, was by the Sunne (the sight of whom he was forbidden) turned into a stone. They saie the like of others turned into trees; for going so farre a fishing in the night, that they could not returne before the rising of the Sunne. A certaine Ruler also, called Vagoniua, sent one forth of the Cae a fishing, who by the Sunnes surprisall, was turned into a Nightingale, which therefore in the night bewayleth his misfortune. Vagoniua sore troubled with this losse, leaving the men in the Cae, brought forth the women and sucking children, and leaving the women in an Iland of that Tract, called Mathimino, carried the children away with him, which being oppressed with famine, fainted; and remayned on the banks of a certaine Riuer, where they were turned to Frogs, and cryed toa, toa, as children with them vlc to cry for the duggie. And hence also come those pittifull cryings of the Frogs in the Spring-time. As for Vagoniua, he by speciall priuledge was not transformed: wandering in diuers places, he descended to a certaine faire woman, whom he saw in the bottome of the Sea, and receiued of her bright plates of Laten, and a kind of Stones which their Kings greatly esteemed. Another Cae they had (for the former tale is endlesse, as Superstition commonly is) called Iouanabina, adorned with Pictures of a thousand fashions. In the entrance were two grauen Zemes, whereof one was called Bintbaitel, and the other Marobu. Out of this Cae they say the Sunne and Moone first came to giue light to the World. They made as Religious concourse to these Caves, as they which goe on Pilgrimage to Rome, Compottella, or Ierusalem.

They had a superstitious conceit of their dead: who (they thought) walked in the night, and ate the fruit Guanababa (which is like to a Quince) and that they would decieve women, in taking the shape of men; making, as though they would haue to doe with them, and suddenly vanish away. If any feeling a strange thing in his bed, made doubt whether it were a dead bodie, he might be resolved by feeling on his belly, because these Ghosts could take all other members of mans bodie, but not the nauell (as some will imagine that the Deuill can take the whole shape of a man, onely his clawes excepted): these dead men, they say, often met them by the way, and if a man were not afraid, they vanished; but if hee were afraid, they would assault him, and many hereby haue beene taken with the losse of their limbs. These Superstitions were left them by tradition in Riches and Songs from their fore-fathers, which it was lawfull for none to learne, but onely the Kings Sonnes. They sung them before the people on solemne Feasts, playing on an instrument like a Timbrel. Their Bonij or Priests instruct them in these Superstitions: these are also Physicians, making the people beleue that they obtaine health for them of the Zemes. They tie themselves to much fasting, and outward cleanness and purging; especially where they take vpon them the cure of great men: for then they drunk the powder of a certayne herbe, which brought them into a furie, wherein they said they learned many things of their Zemes.

Much also they make about the sicke partie, deforming themselves with many gestures; breathing, blowing, sucking the forehead, temples, and necke of the patient; sometimes also saying that the Zemes is angry for not erecting a Chappell, or dedicating to him a Grove or Garden, or the neglect of other holies. And if the sicke partie dye, his Kinsfolkes by Witchcraft enforce the dead to speake, and tell them whether he dyed by naturall destinie, or by the negligence of the Bonij, in not fasting the full due, or ministring conuenient medicine: so that if these Physicians be found faulty, they take reuenge of them. They vied in ministring their Physicke, to put certayne stones or bones in their mouths, which if the women can get, they keepe religiously, beleueing them to be profitable for them in trauell, and honour them, as they doe their Zemes.

When their Kings dyed, they buried the best beloved of their Concubines with them, who also had other women buried for their attendants, together with their Jewels and Ornaments. They had in the Sepulchre beside them a cup full of water, and some of their Cassavi-bread. Hispaniola is (sayth Herera) in 19. degrees; and an halfe, hath ten Spanish Townes, and hath sometime had in it feutene thousand Castilians. Ouido reporteth of a Huticano or Tempest, which, 1508, threw downe all the houses, except some which were built of stone in Domingo: and the whole Towne of Buena Ventura changed his name into Mala Ventura, being hereby quite ouerthrowne. Twentie Sayle and more were lost in the Harbour of Domingo. Many men were lifted vp and carried in the Ayre many Bowshots, some being thereby miserably bruised. In Iuly the next yeere happened another more terrible then the former. But now, sayth hee, these Huracans are nothing so fierce since the Sacrament is placed in the Churches.

Of the Bermudas, or Sommers Ilands.

Auing thus wearied you with this long stay in Hispaniola (by which yee may guesse of the neighbouring Ilands) we will haste homeward, and not touching in any Iland by the way (for we could but touch and away) we may adventure, notwithstanding the wonted danger, vpon Bermuda. Danger hath made it now not so dangerous: incumments haue beene disincumments. For while some haue beene wracked there, they haue made vertue of Necessitie, and so well obserued the Coast, that skill hath almost secured that, which Nature had seemed to see there in defiance both of Habitation and Navigation, to both which it is now subseruited by our Nation. It was called Bermuda, as Ouido sayth, of Iohn Bermudez, which first discovered it, and Garcia, of the ships name wherein hee then sayled; Ouido writeth that hee was iust by it, and had thought to haue sent some Hogs on shore there to haue multiplied, but by force of tempest was driuen thence: and others eyther of like purpose, or by force of shipwracke haue since done it. It is also called the Iland of Devils, which they suppose inhabit there; and the enchanted Iland: but these are enchanted conceits. Ioh^h Horrop relateth, That in the height of Bermuda they had sight of a Sea-monster, which three times shewed himselfe from the middle vpwards, in shape like a man of the complexion of a Mulato or tawny Indian. But this name was giuen it not of such Monsters, but of the monstrous tempests which here they haue often sustayned. Sir G. Sommers hath descrued that it should beare his name, by his inleuous thereabouts testified in life and death. Hee with Sir Thomas Gates, as before is said, were wracked on the Iland, which losse turned to some gaine, as if God would giue them this into the Virginia-bargaine. Before, Anno 1593. Henry & May, an Englishman, in a French ship was wracked thereon, and hath giuen vs some Discourte thereof: more fully hath Syluester & Iourdan, one of that Virginian Company, one of the company of those worthy Knights, in a Treatise of that shipwracke, and the Discouerie of Bermuda. The Commodities whereof, he reckoneth, varietie of fishes, plentie of Hogges (which it seemeth haue escaped out of some wrackes) diuers Fruits, Mulberries, Silke-wormes, Palmitos, Cedars, Pearles, Ambergrise: But the most strange thing seemes the varietie of Fowle, of which they they tooke a thousand of one sort in two or three houres, being as bigge as a Pidgeon, and laying speckled Egges, as bigge as Hens Egges, on the sand, where they come and lay them daily, although men sit downe amongst them. When Sir Thomas Gates his men haue taken a thousand of them, Sir George Summers men haue stayed a while by them, and brought away as many more. Another Fowle there is, that liueth in holes, like Cony-holes; their Egges like in quantity and qualitie to Hen-egges. Other Birds were so gentle, that whistling to them, they would come and gaze on you, while with your stickes you might kill them. Other Egges they had of Tortoytes, a bulhell in the belly of one very sweet: they tooke forty of them in a day: and one would serue fiftie men at a meale. Two were there borne, and other two married, to make the most naturall possession thereof for our Nation; which now in hope of good successe hath there planted an habitation. That wracked Company built there a Ship and a Pinnaffe, and set saile for Virginia.

William Strachie in a large Discourse, with his fluent and copious pen hath described that tempest which brought them to this Island, affirming that there was not an houre in foure dayes, in which they freed not out of their almost captiued Ship, twelve hundred Barricoes of water, each containyng fixe gallons, and some eight: besides three Pumps continually going: euery foure houres they bestowed an hundred tun of water on the cruell Sea, which seemed the more hungry after their bodies, or thirstie for their blood from Tuesday noon till Friday noon, they bayled and pumped two thousand runnes, and were ten foot deepe; nor could haue holden out one day longer, when they first had sight of the Bermudas. Twelue (he sayth) are an Archipelagus of broken Islands, not fewer then fye hundred, if all may be so called which lye by themselves: the greatest (which lyeth like an halfe moone) is in 32. degrees 20. minutes. At their first landing they killed with Bats seuen hundred Fowles, like to Gulls, at one time. The Islands seeme rent with tempests of Thunder, Lightning, and Raine, which threaten in time to deuoure them all: the stormes in the full and change keepe their vnchangeable round Winter and Summer, rather thundring then blowing from euery corner, sometimes 48. houres together; especially when the Hale (or circle about the Moone) appeareth, which is often, and there foure times as large as with vs. The North and North-west winds cause Winter in December, January, and February: yet not such, but then young Birds to be seene. Without knowledge a Boat of ten tuns cannot be brought in, and yet within is safe harbour for the greatest Ships. They found there for their sustenance wild Palm-trees, the tops of which trees roasted did eate like fried Melons, foddin, like Cabbages: with the leaues they couered their Cabins: Berries blacke and round, as bigge as a Damion, ripe in December, and very luscious: in the Winter they shed their leaues. No Island in the World had more or better Fish. Of Fowles was great varietie. They killed a wild Swan. Some there are which breed in high Islands in holes, to secure them from the Swine. They haue their seasons, one kind succeeding another. Besides this reliefe of Fowles, they had plenty of Tortoise Egges, which they lay as bigge as Goose Egges, and commit to the Sun and Sands hatchling nurserie. They had sometimes fye hundred in one of them. Euen here (lest the Island should lose that former name of Devils) some entred into Devilsill conspiracie three severall time. Some were banished, and after reconciled. Henry Paine was shot to death. Some fled to the Woods, but all reduced, except Christopher Carter and Robert Waters. But these Islands haue now bene possessed diuers yeeres by an English Colonie; and my friend Malter Barkley (which hath bene there, and is now ¹ on wards on a second Voyage thither) seemeth raiouished with the naturall endowments, both for health and wealth, of these Islands: which now are to be shared amongst the Adventurers, and fortified against all inuasions; Nature it selfe being herein readie to further their securitie against the greatest forren force, mustering winds (which some say are violent further off, but calmer neere the Islands) and Rocks many leagues into the Sea, for their defence: which now yet they are gone to strengthen, both with men and munition. The Colonie that is there, haue not only verbal, but reall commendations of the place: as may appeare by a Treatise thereof lately set forth by one, which in the Shippe called the Plough, sayled thither Anno 1612. wherein is declared the Commodities there found, as Mulletts, Breames, Lobsters, and Angel-fish, Hog-fish, Rock-fish, &c. as before is said. The Ayre is very healthfull, as their experience (the best argument) hath found, and agreeing well with English bodies: the ground as fertile as any (they say) in the World: Ambergrece, Pearle, Cedars and other unknowne Timbers: store of Whales and other Commodities, which would bee tedious to rehearse: which I hope and pray, may further prosper, to the profit of this and the Virginia Plantations. From hence and thence, I am now passing in an English Ship for England, where to passe away tediousness of the Voyage, I will enterrayne my Reader with a Discourse of the more then tedious and fastidious Spanish cruelties.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Spanish cruelties in the West Indies : and of their peruerse Conuerſion of the Indians vnto Chriſtianitie.

Or as much as the Papiſts doe vſually glory in the purchaſe of a New World vnto their Religion, and would haue men beleue, that ſince this Scripture-
Heretic hath made new Rome to tremble now, no leſſe then Hannibal did her Pagan-mother, they haue a new ſupply with much aduantage in this Weſterne World of America; and they make this their Indian Conuention, one of the Markes of the trueſſe and Catholiciſme of their Church, which hath gained (if Porſenn lye not) an hundred times as much in the New World towards the Weſt, South, and Eaſt, by new Conuerſes, as it hath loſt in the North parts by Heretickes: where through both the Hemifpheres (ſaith Hill) theſe thouſand yeeres, nay as farre as the Sunne ſhineth, there is no tongue, nor people, nor climate, which hath not in ſome meaſure (ſuch a meaſure perhaps as he meaſured his truth and wit withall in this aſſertion) the Catholike Roman Religion: I would we could borrow the height of this Hill, whereto to ſtand and ouer-view ſo many parts of the World yet vnknowne, and learne of this Giant Atlas (how eaſily may this Mute become a Liquid?) which beareth thus the Hemifphere of his Roman Heauen on his mounting ſhoulders, a new Geographic. But his impudence is already ſufficiently whipped and expoſed to the Worlds deriſion, by Him, the neereſſe of whoſe preſence doth now ſo much glad me after ſo long and farre a Pilgrimage. His learned Pen hath ſhewed the like bold brags of Briſtowa and Stapleton his Maſters, and prooued them Fables. For further confutation whereof, it ſhall not be amiſſe to obſerue the proceedings of the Spaniards in theſe parts. And herein will vſe the witneſſe of men of their owne Romiſh Religion. Iofephus a Acſoſa, a Ieſuite, writeth, that the Indians conceiue an implacable hatred againſt the Faith, by the ſcandall of the Spaniards cruelties: and that they haue baptized ſome by force, Vega accuſeth them of baptizing without making them know the faith, or taking knowledge of their life. And how could it otherwiſe be, when we find it recorded of ſundry of their Preachers, that baptized each one of them about an hundred thouſand, and that in few yeeres? In ſo much that (as is ſtoied by Surinus) it is to be found among the Records of Charles the fiſt, that ſome old Prieſt hath baptized leuen hundred thouſand, another three hundred thouſand. Some of theſe were ſo good Chriſtians, that they ſtill continued (as Nunna de Guzman writeth to the Emperour) the Sacrifices of humane fleſh. Oñieda writeth, that they haue but the name of Chriſtians, and are baptized rather becauſe they are of age, then for deuotion to the faith; and none, or very few of them are Chriſtians willingly.

He that will read what they lately haue done in Spaine with the remnants of the Moores, may perhaps ſatiſſie himſelfe with the reaſons of Frier Fonſeca, in defence thereof. But for the poore Indians, Bartholomew de las Caſas, a F Dominican Frier, of the ſame Order with Fonſeca, and after a Biſhop in America, hath written a large and vnanſwerable Treatiſe of the enormous cruelties, and vnchriſtian Antichriſtian proceedings in the New World, the ſumme whereof is this, That the Indians were a ſimple harmleſſe people, loyall to their Lords, and ſuch as gaue no cauſe to the Spaniards of diſlike, till they by extreme iniuries were prouoked: they are alſo docible and pliant, both to good doctrine and liuing. To theſe Lambes, ſayth he, the Spaniards came as cruell and hungry Tygres, Beares, and Lions, intending nothing theſe forty yeeres (he wrote this Anno 1543) but blood and ſlaughter, to ſatiſſie their Auidice and Ambition: inſomuch that of three Millions of people, which were contained in Hiſpaniola of the Naturall Inhabitants, there ſcarce remayned at that time three hundred, and now as Alexandro Vſſino reporteth, none at all: only two and twenty thouſand Negroes, and ſome Spaniards reſide there.

Cuba, and the other Ilands had indured the like milerie, and in the ſirme Land ten Kingdomes, greater then all Spaine, were diſpeopled and deſolate, and in that ſpace there had not periſhed leſſe then twelue Millions by their tyrannie: and he might truly ſay that fifty Millions had payed Natures debt.

In the Iland Hiſpaniola the Spaniard had their fiſt Indian habitations, where their cruelties draue the Indians to their ſhitts, and to their weake defence, which cauſed thoſe enraged Lions, to ſpare neyther man, woman, nor childe: they ripped vp the great bellied women, and would lay wagers, who could with moſt dexteritie ſtrike off an Indians head, or

Imto him a funder in the middle: they would plucke the Infants by the heeles from their Mothers breasts, and dash out their braines against the stones, or with a scoffe hurle them into the River. They set vp Gibbets, and in honour of Christ and his twelve Apostles (as they said, and could the Devil say worse?) they would both hang and burne them. Others they cooke, and cutting their hands almost off, bid them carry those Letters (their hands dropping blood, and almost dropping off themselves) to their Countreimen, which (for feare of the like) lay hidden in the Mountaines. The Nobles and Commanders, they broyled on Gridirons: I once (sayth our Author) saw foure or five of the chiefe of them thus roasted, which making a lamentable noyle, the nicer Capitaine bade they should be strangled, but the cruell

10 Tormentor chose rather to stop their mouthes, so to prevent their out-cryes, and to continue their broyling till they were dead. They had Dogs to hunt them out of their courts, which deuoured the poore soules: and because sometimes the Indians, thus prouoked, would kill a Spaniard, if they found opportunitie, they made a Law, that a hundred of them should for one Spaniard be blaine. The King of Magua offered to till the ground for them fifty miles space, if they would spare him and his people from the Mines. The Capitaine in recompence deflowered his Wife, and hee hiding himselfe, was taken, and sent into Spaine; but the ship perished in the way, and therein that admirable 8 graine of Gold, which weighed in the first finding (being pure) so many thousand Crownes as in the first Chapter of the eight Booke is mentioned.

g P. Mart. mentioneth this graine of Gold: and likewise the Spanish cruelties, though not so largely as Casas

10 In the Kingdome of Xaragua in Hispaniola, the Gouvernour called before him three hundred Indian Lords, which he partly burned in a House, and put the rest to the Sword, and hanged vp the Queene, as they did also to Higuanama the Queene of Hiquey. Of all which cruelties our Author an eye-witnesse affirmeth, that the Indians gaue no cause by any crime, that had to be deterred by any Law. And for the rest that remayned after these Wares, they shamed them as slaues. They which should haue instructed them in the Catholike Faith, were ignorant, cruell, and couetous. The men were spent in the Mines, the women consumed in tillage, and both by heauie burthens which they made them carry, by famine, by scourging, and other miseries.

And thus they did in all other parts wheresoeuer they came. In the Isles of Saint Iohn, and 10 Jamaica, were sixe hundred thousand Inhabitants, whereof then when the Author wrote this, there were scarcely left two hundred in eyther Iland. Cuba extendeth furthest in length of any of these Ilands. Here was a Cacique named Hathuey, which called his Subjects about him, and shewing them a Boxe of Gold, said, That was the Spaniards God, and made them dance about it very solemnly: and lest the Spaniards should haue it, hee hurled it into the River. Being taken and condemned to the fire, when he was bound to the stake, a Friar came and preached Heauen to him, and the terrors of Hell: Hathuey asked if any Spaniards were in Heauen? The Friar answered, Yea, such as were good. Hathuey replied, hee would rather goe to Hell, then goe whete any of that cruell Nation were.

I was once present, sayth Casas, when the Inhabitants of one Towne brought vs forth victuall, and met vs with great kindeesse, and the Spaniards without any cause slue three thousand of them, of euery Age and Sexe. I, by their counsell, sent to other Townes to meet vs with promise of good dealing, and two and twenty Caciques met vs, which the Capitaine against all faith caused to be burned. This made the desperate Indians hang themselues (which two hundred did, by the occasion of one mans cruelty:) and one other Spaniard seeing them take this course, made as though he would hang himselfe too, and persecute them in the Regions of death, which feare detayned some from that selfe-execution. Sixe thousand children dyed, sayth our former Author, in three or foure months space, while I was there, for the want of their Parents which were sent to the Mines: they hunted out the rest in the Mountaynes, and desolated the Iland. Neyther did the other Ilands speed better. The Lucike they brought to an vtter desolation: and shipping multitudes of men for the Mines in Hispaniola (wanting food for them) the third part commonly perished in the way; so that an vnskilful Pilot might haue learned this way by Sea, by those floating markes of Indian carcaises. This Spanish pestilence spread further to the Continent, where they spoiled the shoates, and the Inland Countries of people. From Dariena to Nicaragua, they slue foure hundred thousand people with Dogs, Swords, Fire and diuers tortures.

Their course of Preaching was, to send, vnder paine of confiscation of lands, libertie, wife, life, and all, to acknowledge God and the Spanish King, of whom they had neuer heard. Yea, they would steale to some place halfe a mile off the Citie, by night, and there publish the Kings Decree in this sort, being alone by themselues: Yee Caciques and Indians of this place, or that place (which they named) Bee it knowne to you, that there is one God, one Pope, and one King of Castile, who is Lord of these lands: Come quickly and doe your homage. And then in the night, while they were asleepe, fired their houses, and slue and tooke Captiues at their pleasure, pleasure, and after fell to search for Gold. The first Biliop that came into these parts, sent his men to be partakers of the spoyle. A Cacique gaue the Spanish Gouvernour the weight in Gold of nine thousand Crownes; he (in thankfulness) to extort more, bound him to a post, and put fire to his feet, and forced him to send home for a further addition of 3000. They not satisfied, persisted in their tormenting him, till the morrow came forth at the soles off his feet, whereof he dyed. When any of the Indians, employed by the Spaniards, fayled under their heavy burthens, or fainted for want of necessaries, lest they should lose time in opening the Chaine wherein he was tyed, they would cut off his head, and so let the bodie fall out. The Spaniard robbed the Nicaraguans of their Corne, so that thirty thousand dyed of Famine, and a Mother ate her owne childe: five hundred thousand were carried away into bondage, besides fiftie or sixtie thousand slaine in their Warres: and now, sayth Casas, remaine foure or five thousand, of one of the most populous Regions of the World. Heere did Vaschub 1 giue at one time foure Kings to be deuoured of Dogs.

In New Spaine, from the yeere 1518. to 1530. in foure hundred and eighty miles about Mexico, they destroyed about foure Millions of people in their Conquests by fire and sword, not reckoning those which dyed in seraitude and oppression. In the Prouince of Naco and Honduras, from the yeere 1524. to 1535. two Millions of men perished, and scarcely two thousand remaine. In Guatimala, from the yeere 1524. to 1540. they destroyed about foure or five Millions vnder that Alvarado, who dying, by the fall off his Horse, as is before said, complained (when hee was asked where his paine was most) of his Soule-torment: and his Citie Guatimala was with a three-fold deluge of Earth, of Water, of Stones, oppressed and ouerwhelmed. He forced the Indians to follow him in his Expeditions, in Armies of tenne or twentie thousand, not allowing them other sustenance, then the flesh of their slaine Enemies, mayntayning in his Army Shambles of mans flesh. In Panuco and Xalisco their state was much like; one made eight thousand Indians wall about his Garden, and let them all perish with Famine. In Machuacan they tortured the King that came forth to meet them, that they might extort Gold from him. They put his feet in the Stockes, and put fire thereto, binding his hands to a Post behinde him; and a Boy stood by, basting his roasted feete with Oyle, another with a Crosse-bow bent to his breast, and on the other hand another with Dogges; of these tortures he dyed. They forced the Indians to deli- 30 uer their Idols, hoping they had bene of Gold, but their Golden hope failing, they forced them againe to redeme them. Yea, where the Fryers had in one place made the Indians to cast away their Images, the Spaniards brought them some from other places to sell them. In the Prouince of Saint Martha, they had desolated foure hundred and fiftie miles of Land. The Bishop wrote to the King, that the people called the Spaniards Demils, or Tares, for their Diabollicall practices; and thought the Law, God, and King of the Christians had bene authors of this crueltie.

The like they did in the Kingdome of Venezuela, destroying foure or five Millions, and out of that firme Land, carried to the Ilands for slaues at times, in seuentene yeers, a Milli- 40 on of people.

But why doe I longer trace them in their bloody steps; seeing our Author that relates much more then I yet protesteth that it was a thousand times worse. Or what should I tell their sparing no persons? plucking the child from the breast, to quarter it to his Dogs? Torturing Kings with new deuices, borrowed yther from the Inquisition, or from Hell? Cutting off the noses and hands of men and women, that lued in peace with them? Selling the Father, Mother, Child, to diuers places and persons? Lying with the women (as one of them bragged) that being with childe, they might yeeld more money in the sale? How was Nature become degenerate in these prodigious monsters? Euen the nature of things might be abashed with the sense of this vnaturall senselessestie. The Tygre would not deuoure his prey, and not curiously torment it; the Lion sometimes spares it; nay, their Dogges haue sometime bene lesse dogged, then their doggish Deuillish Masters. How may wee admire that long suffering of God, that rained not a flood of waters, as in Noahs time; or of fire, as in Lois, or of stones, as in Ishazars some vengeance from Heauen vpon these models of Hell? And how could Hell forbear swallowing such prepared morsels, exceeding the beastlinesse of beasts, inhumanitie of wouted Tyrants, and Deuillishnelle, if it were possible, of the Deuils? But these you will say were 50
Souldiers: let vs leaue the Campe, and looke to their Temples.

There perhaps you shall see their Priests reading, praying, and (this they most glory of) preaching, to conuert the Indians by their word and workes. Aske Colmenero, a Priest of Saint Martha, who being asked what hee taught the Indians, said that hee deuoted them with curses to the Deuill, and this sufficed, if he said to them, Per signum Santum Crucis. You haue heard what good Diuinitie the Dominican preached to Atabaliba King of Peru (which 60 wanted not her wants of Millions by their cruelties, as well as the former; They teach them (saith Acofta) a few Prayers in the Spanish Tongue, which they vnderstand not; and they which are more painful, a Catechisme without explanation.

Ind. fol. 1.4.4.4.

Their teaching is but a self and shadow to get money: they follow dicing, hunting, whooring; in so much that Baptisme is scorned, and the Indians are forced to it against their will: and a sincere and upright Iudge was wont to say, that if hee came into Spaine, hee would periwade the King to send no more Priests into America; such is their dissoluteness. They had then indeed three Archbishopricks; that of Dominico, which had fixe Suffragane Bishops, the second of Mexico, which had 7. the third of Los Reyes, to which were subiect three

10 Bishops; yet these teach the people vices, by their practice and ill example; in so much that the Indians (saith Casas) are of opinion, that the King of Spaine (which hath such subiects, as the Spaniards shew themselves) is himselfe most cruell, and lues on mans flesh; and that of all Gods, the God of the Christians is the worst, which hath so bad seruants; longing for their owne Gods, of whom they neuer receiued such ill, as now by this of the Christians: The Spaniards cannot endure the Indians to heare a Sermon, thinking it makes them idle (as Pbarash said of the Israelites) and captious: they learne them Vlury, lying, swearing, blasphemie, and things repugnant to their nature. Thus did a Cacique defende a Christian to Benzo, by the vchristian course of the Spaniards. Christians! (saith he, looking Benzo on the face) what are Christians? They imperiously demand Maize, Honey, Silke, Rayment, an Indian woman to lye with them; they call for Gold and Silver, they will not worke; are Gamblers, Dickeis, Wicked, Blasphemers, Backbiters, Quarrellers: and concluded that Christians could not be good. Benzo said, that euill Christians did such things, not the good ones: hee replied, Where are those good, for I neuer saw any but bad? Hee was seventy yeeres old, and spake Spanish perfectly. Benzo sayth, that they would not looke on the Christians, but curse them

20 and as before is said, called them Sea-roth. Hee being very inquisitive to see what they thought of our Faith, reporteth, that some of them taking a piece of Gold, will say, Loee, heere the Christian God: for this they kill vs and one another; for this they play, blaspheme, curse, steale, and doe all manner of villanies. A Franciscan publicly said, that there was neither Priest, Monke, nor Bishop, good in all India: and the Priests themselves

30 will say, they come thither for gaine. A Cacique Sonne which was towardly in his youth, and proued after dissolute, being asked the reason thereof, said, Since I was a Christian, I haue learned to sweare in iuramento, to dice, to lye, to swagger; and now I want nothing but a Concupiscence (which I meane to haue floridly) to make me a compleate Christian. These indeed are the Miracles that the Spaniards worke in the Indies, lye our Author. I asked an Indian once if he were a Christian; he againe asked me, if hee should be the Bishops Groome a dozen yeeres to keepe his Mule. Others of the Indians, saue a little washing and some cold Ceremonies, know nothing of our Religion.

13 Cap. 18.

You haue heard what Commerce and conference many of them were wont to haue with the Deuill; and how the Spaniards haue taught them, now to scarse him away with the 40 signe of the Crosse. And this is the report of a certaine Spanish Treatise of Prelates, that the Deuill is now frayed away with the presence of the holy Sacrament of the Eucharist, and of the holy Crosse: weapons spirituall in pretence, carnall in the intention, but neither preuayling like the spirituall which Paul mentions, nor effecting so much as some say of those which are indeed carnall and wholly materiall: Yea these thus vied (with deniall of the power of the Crosse and godlinesse) are the Scepters of his Empire amongst them. And for those carnall weapons which Paul disclaymed, the Spaniards doe not onely acknowledge, but glory off. Nunno of Gusman auereth in a writing to the Emperor, that howsoeuer some find fault with their wars vpon the Indians so to bring them to the faith, yet he accounts it a most worthy & holy work, & of so great merit, that in the seruice of God none can be greater.

1. 2. 1. 1. 1. 1.

50 The Indians haue liued at more quiet with the Spaniards, since the King proclaimed them free; yet still hate them: and for their Christianitie, Franciscus a Villoria protesteth, that it doth not appeare to him, that Christian Religion had beene propounded in meete sort to the Indians: Miracles he heard not of, but on the contrarie, scandals, villanies, and many impieties. This is the Preaching and Conuersion the Romists boast of, and gull our European World with muffers of their M racles, and thousands of their Profelytes which we rather pittie then enuie.

How the case is altered, since that new generation of the Ignatian brood hath taught (especially the Spaniards, whose they are, and whom they serue) a better Catholiciſme; let Arauco tell you: he sayth, that they haue indeed wrought Miracles amongst Indians: among which he reckoneth conuerting the Pagans, by butcherly subuerting and rooting them out. In Hispaniola, by keeping the husbands and wiues in diuers workes asunder, the old generation being thus worne out, and a new preuented. In Peru they had publicke places of torture within the Marches, wherein they might put a thousand at once, by tortures to draw forth confessions of their hidden treasures: such as escaped, hanged themselves in the Mountaynes, and their wives by them, with their children at their teete. By their Dogs at land they worried them: and in their Pearle-fishing exposed them to the ravenous Sharks, themselves more dogged and sharking then the brute creatures; by fire and Sword consuming 20 Millions of the people, I would give the Deuill his due, and therefore would not ascribe all this to those later Locusts, the Iesuits (who are yet accounted the most cunning and zalous Architects, in setting vp the roote of that aspiring Spanish Monarchie) these and the like bloudie foundations notwithstanding; and therefore may be called Accessories after. As for the Spaniards, we see them by testimonie of their owne, accused of the same things. And how the Ignatians wash their hands not from, (but in) bloud, our Europe can testifye.

What Deuill brought into America the Inquisition (his faire Daughter much resembling his accursed presence) I know not: our Countymen Philips, Harisp, and others, knew it to their cost. But what should we speake of the Spanish crueltie to others? Locke on their dealing with each other in ciuill broyles: thus dealt they with Columbus, rewarding him with Chaynes, and sending him Prisoner to Spaine by that way which he first of all, and for Spaine had discovered, What Roldanus and his rebellious faction did in Hispaniola, and Vaschi in the Continent, Martyr relateth. But the bloudiest butcheries passed in Peru: where Coutouinelle, which before had ioynd, now diuorced the hearts of Pizarro and Almagro; and after that, that neerer coniunction of the head and body of Almagro,^a reuenged in the persons of all the Pizarri, which againe retorted the like vengeance vpon the Almagristi; their Ghosts seeming, or some hellish furies rather, to be loosed on that Peruvian ffige, and to haue brought like mischiefs to the beholders and actors in this Tragedie. Vengeance seemed to haue broken forth of Atabalbas Tombe, armed with Sword, fire, halters, chaynes; yea, the Spaniards themselves offered themselves her officious Vassals, to become cruell Executors of her bloudy Will, in mutuall executions vpon themselves. The awfull names of Vice-royes, Gouvernours, and Captaines, were no lesse subiected to imprisonment and death, then the poorest Souldier. But for these ciuill vnciuill cruelties amongst themselves, they require a good Orator to describe them: and those former tyrannies vpon the Indians, are beyond all Oratory and description. Thunders from Heauen had need be the voice to vtter such Hellish and vnheard of Massacres; Deuils from Hell were fittest Scribes, with the fierie Characters of their infernall work-houles to register them; the reading whereof might astonish the sense of the Reader, amaze his reason, exceed his faith, and fill his heart with horror and vncouth passions. For mee; I want fit words to paint them in their blacke colours: my Hand with reluctance trembleth at the writing: my Tongue faltereth in the speaking, and wholly I seeme to my selfe surprized with distraction, and not to bee my selfe, whiles the view of this Spanish Medusa transformeth mee into a stone: the rather, when I thinke such should our English Conuersion haue bene, if in that dismall yeere 1588. England had as well succeeded to them as the Indies: or if since, our Catholike Preachers had preyraied in their Powder-projects, in the yeere 1605. Who for a Temple chose a Vault, that their workes of darknesse might be done in the darke, and their Work-house might be neerer to Hell, thence to borrow at hand supplies of Deuillish devices, and in neerer familiaritie to consult with the Deuill. For words, they had prepared a Sulphurous breath, the smoke whereof might darken the Heauens; the fire might rent the trembling and astonished Earth: the noyle might make the hearers pall hearing, and being together. Once, those Hellish Cerberi by such preaching had intended there to haue opened the mouth of Hell vpon vs, which should haue swallowed our Lawes, our Religion, our Sun, Moone, and Morning Star (the King, Queene, and Prince) Our fairest Skie of fixed and well ordered lights, then shining in their greatest splendour of Parliament-brightnesse. The Giants of old were said to bee the sonnes of the Earth; but these, as they were engendered of Earth, so had they incestuously violated that their Mother (whether you vnderstand it in a littell or mysticall sense) and begotten in her wombe this Hel-monster of their bloudie Catholicisme; they had designed the time of her Trauill, and themselves would haue bene the Mid-wives; the Deuils had bidden themselves as Gossips, and at that opening of the Earths wombe in her fierie trauell, would haue sent that way into the World (to attend the Babe) all the black-guard of Hell, Treason, Superstition, Atheisme, Ignorance, Fire, Sword, and all confusion, in a revolution of a worlds Change: then that Tobin and Babin of old could haue effected. Then should it haue bene no maruell, if Rome, France, Spaine, or any other had exercised tyrannie or crueltie, seeing all must haue come short of the first crueltie, which our English Catholikes had executed, to open the flood-gates of bloud vnto them. And all this was the Catholike cause, and these the Preachers, or the Vilners rather to the Preachers (for the Iesuits will be angry if wee take from

But whither is your Pilgrime transported? Friend, I draw neere my Port, and leauing America behind mee, still red with this blood; now also hauing England in sight, which (as from a greater height) was neere to a more dangerous fall: and in this subiect, which is of the Spanish cruelties (not written in hatred of their Nation, because they are Spaniards) but of their Pseudo-catholike Religion, vnder shew whereof, they there did, and heere would haue executed those butcheries; and for thankfulness to God for our later deliuerance, 10 of which the time when I relate these things (being the returne of that very Day, * wherein those things should haue bene effected) iustly demandeth my testimony: I haue thus told out my Storie.

And now, me thinkes, I see the shores of England, from which my lingering Pilgrimage hath long detain'd me: I heare the Bells, and see the Bon-fires, with publike acclamations of thankfulness for that Deliuernance, all singing their Halleluab's, and saying, * This is the Day which the Lord hath made, wee will reioyce and bee glad in it. And now I see a better sight then all my Pilgrimage could yeeld; Christian Churches, without Heathenish, Iewish, or Antichristian pollutions: a Royall King, truly entituled Defender of the Faith: a Learned Clergie; wise and Honourable Counsellors; peaceable and loyall Commons: in a word; Eng- 20 land presents it selfe to mine eyes, representing to my mind a Map of Heauen and Earth, in the freedome of Bodie and Soule, yea where our subiection and seruice is Freedome (which I haue not else-where found in all my Perambulation of the World) I feele my selfe herewith rauished, and in a ioyfull extasie cannot but crye out: * It is good for vs to bee here, in the true Church and Suburbs of the true Heauen:.) Heere then,

Reader, let me rest me, till I see whether thy kind acceptation of this, will make mee willing to accept another and neerer (but harder European) Pilgrimage.

Eader, I here present vnto thee in a later seruice; that which deserved a fitter place in another Worke; and which I had sought with much in-dustrie before, without successe. I am ashamed againe to tell thee with what little effect my Russian labours for Intelligence were seconded:
 but since my PILGRIMES published, Sir Ierome Horleys kindnesse offered me (without seeking) better Intelligence then any others could haue giuen: for the times of Iuan and Febdore, with the polskie preparations of Boris vnto the Muscouian Empire: a Story whereof I was so much more desirous, to publish; because our Age (if euer so short a time in any Age or any State) can hardly parallel the like practises of humane Policies, to couetous, cruel, ambitious ends, ended in the Authours and Actors owne Tragedies; God taking the wise in their craftinesse, and iustly spoyleing the vniust spoyleers, of their spoyles, liues, states, yea, rooting out their whole Families, the greatnesse and glory whereof they had sought to aduance by such wicked courses; and withall punishing the wickednes of the people by so frequent forreigne Inuasions and intestine Combuitions: that wee may out of others euils learne this good, Discite iustitiam moniti, the true vse of all Historie.
 I had out of Alexander Gwagninus, Paulus Oderbornius and others collected some Relations of Iuan Vasiluwich and his Sonnes, but those could see but the out-sides of things, and giue vs but huskes, shels, and rumours, See my Pil-grimes, Part. 3. 4. c. 9.
 (which often are vncertaine, sometimes false) but here wee present an Eyewitnesse, which tooke not vp Newes on trust by wonted Bills and Tales of Exchange, but was admitted vnto the Myseries of that State, in the Historie of the Imperiall Acts writen in their Records; and in his owne personall and honourable Employments betwixt Queene Elizabeth of glorious Memory, and the Russian Emperours. And indeed want of the Languages of remote Regions hath hatcht many imperfect Histories, the blind leading the blind into error; wherein as I haue euer loued truth, so was I glad to rectifie our Russian Relations by opportunitie of so worthy a Guide; whose Papers had before furnished Doctor Fletcher with the best peeces of his Intelligence. Euen here also I was straitned in time, the Presse pursuing me so fast, that I had not leisure to transcribe at large the Authours Danish, Polish and Germane

Relations; nor to adde forme or beauty from Arte: and perhaps this native nakednesse in a Iournall or Travelling Method will be to some most acceptable. The Author and matter addes better lustre to the Worke then my words can; the one so full of varietie and weight, the other an experienced and Religious Knight, employed in many and honourable Services of State, and honouring the Name and Family of the Horleys, with his Acts, Arts, and good Parts. Who had long since also dedicated this Worke to that Honourable Patriote Sir Francis Walsingham.

Now for Master Methold, I had spared some of Frederikes, Balbies, and Fitches Relations, if these had comne in time, which so many times I had both by messages and in person sought, and by reason of the Authours absence or busineses was frustrate. But the Reader will finde his labour and cost recompensed in the Rarities of matter, and stile also travelling beyond the wonted pace of a Merchant-Traveller. The Relation is correspondent to the Subject, it entreates of a Mine of Diamants, and is a Mine of Diamants it selfe. 20
Gemmes may bee put on after the whole bodie (so I call my former large Worke) is astired and after that full repast, as Indian Drngs Vsed in second Services, it will second thee with a new, and refresh thee with a fresh Indian appetite, and present vnto thee (like Spectacles after great Feasts) such a muster of Indian Elements, affaires, men, arts, Religions, customes, and other varieties, as before we were not able to bring on our Stage.

the most copious & elegant Language of the World; with some small difference of (Dialect) comming neere the Polish Lettois and Transylvanian, and all those Countries adiacent, being vled by Merchants in Turkie also, Persia, & in India.
I read their Chronicles written and kept in secret by a great Prince of that Country, Knez Mishislafike; who out of his loue and favour imparted vnto mee many secrets observed in the memory of his fourescore yeeres time, of the nature and government of that State. To omit things of former ages, Vasily Andreevich hauing enlarged his Dominions vpon the Pole and Swethen, and specially on the Cimime Tartars, left his people strong and rich, his Countries diuided into foure parts; and two Sonnes, the eldest of five yeeres called Valcia Knez Iuan Vasilovitch which reigned after him; the other of two yeeres Duke of Vaga. Russian Chronicles.

Iuan grew vp comely in person, indued with excellent gifts. At twelue yeeres age he married Naisacia Romanova, which became so wise and vertuous, that he was much louded and feared, a long time carrying the whole sway. Her Husband being young and riotous, the ruled with admirable wisdom, so that he cast off the yoke of homage to the Crym, conquered diuers Tartarian Princes, the Empires of Casan and Astracan 2700. miles downe the Volga from Mosco, and by a generall Concell of his Princes, Prelates, and Nobles was crowned and stiled the Emperour, and Great Duke of Volliadmiria, Muscouia, Casan and Astracan, &c. His Conquests grew with his yeeres. He tooke from the King of Poland the famous Citie of Pollozca, the great Citie of Smolensca, Doragabus, Vafma, and many other Townes with much riches, and infinite numbers of captiues, seuen hundred miles within their confines, Lituania and Bela Russia, goodly Townes of Traffike, and Countries yelifant and proult, ouermightie for his next Neighbours, and blouidie in all his Conquests. When his good Queene Nastacia dyed, she was canonized a Saint; and to this day worshipped in their Churches. By her he had two Sonnes Iuan and Theodore.

The Emperour after this married one of the Chircas by whom hee had no issue that hee would be knowne of. The manner of this Marriage was strange and heathenish, which I forbore out of their owne History to relate. By this Marriage hee was much strengthened by the Tartars better Souldiers then the Natiues, of whom he made vse to curb his Princes and Nobles which were discontent with his cruell robbing; and incessant murdering of his Nobilitie. He set forward with 100000. Horse and 50000. Foot with provisions of Cannon and Munition towards Liuonia and Swethia, kills men, women and children in his way to Nouogrod and Plesco the two greatest Townes of Trafficke in all the East, with the Narue, which three stand triangle wise at the end of the Baltike Sea within the Sound. In this last hee built a Castle called Iuan Gorod, and caused the eyes of the Architect to be bored out. Thence he enters the Confinnes of Liuonia, sends Knez Iuan Grinskey, to besiege Newhous, which was taken with all the Townes in the way to Dorps. This also yielded, and the Tartars carried away eight thousand Captiues, the Merchandize and Treasure was sent to Nouogrod for the Emperours vse. He proceedeth, deuident his Army into foure parts, ten thousand are appointed to draw the Ordnance ouer the frozen Lakes, takes all in his way thirty walled Townes and Castles neere the Easterne Sea within two hundred miles compasse, drowning, burning, ranshing Maydes and Wives, stripping them naked not withstanding the cold, tying them by two and three at their Horse tayles, and dragging them some aliuie, some dead, the wayes and streets lying full of carcases of euery age and sexe. These Liuonians are accounted the fairest people in the World. Infinite numbers were sent into Russia with infinite treasure. Sixe hundred Churches were robbed and destroyed, He and his Tartars at last came to Reuell, besiegeth and batters it with twentie Cannons. The Inhabitants by night make vp the breaches by carrying and casting hote and cold water which froze so thicke, that after sixe weekes siege, and 20000. Cannon shot spent with losse of 7000. he hastened away, the sudden thaw also making him to leaue much of his Artillery behind, with former booties, baggage, and 30000. men, in his retiring.

Enraged with fury for this repulse and losse hee comes backe to the Narue, spoyles the Towne of all the Riches and Merchandise, kills men, women, and children, and giues the spoyle to his Tartars, which bred no small emulation in his Russe Captaines. Thence hee marcheth to Plescou (alias Plesko) where he intended to doe the like, easily beleueing those which reported that these two Townes and Nouogrod had practised against him, that by their meanes hee had sustayned his losse at Reuel. But there met him a Magician Mikulka Smet which that Towne held their Oracle, who with bold Imprecations and Exorcismes calling him Bloud-sucker and Deuourer of Christian flesh, swore by his Angell that hee should not escape death by a present Thunderbolt, if he or any of his did touch the least chaine haire in that Citie, which God by his Angell did preserue for better purpose then his rapine: that therefore he should get him thence before the fierie Cloud of Gods wrath were rayled which he might behold hanging ouer his head, it being a very great and darke storme at that instant. The Emperour trembling at these words, desired Prayers for his deliuerance, and forgiveness of his cruell thoughts. I saw this Impostor, a foule creature: hee went naked Winter and Summer, induring extreame frost and heat. His Holinesse could not endure me. He did many strange things by Magicall Illusions, and was much followed and feared there of Prince and people.

The Emperour returning to Nouogrod, where all his Captiues and Prisoners remayned, in exceeding discontent he chargeth it with 30000. Tartars, and 10000. Gunners of his Guard, who without respect ranshing the women and maides, robbed and spoyled all that were within it: murdered young and old, burned the household stuffe and Merchandises with Ware-houses of Waxe, Flaxe, Cordage, Tallow, Hides, Salt, Wines, Cloth of Gold, Silkes, Furrer, all set on fire. The Waxe and Tallow melted ran downe the Kennels of the streets together with the blood of 700000. men, women, and children, as some affirmed, besides beafts: insomuch that with blood and carcases the River Volga was as it were stoped. He wanted that this Massacre should exceed those of Ninive and Ierusalem. The Citie being thus destroyed and desolate he returned towards Musco, and in the way employes his Captaynes to take the people in the Townes and Villages within a hundred miles compasse, Gentlemen, Peasants, Merchants, and Monkes, old and young, with their Families, Goods, and Cattle to goe and inhabit this ruined Nouogrod, exposing them to a new slaughter. For many of them dyed with Pestilence and poyson of that infected place, which could not be replenished to any purpose.

Not long after God empties the Emperours Kingdome and chiefe Cities of his people by Pestilence.

Pestilence, Famine, Fire and Sword : and this his cruelty bred such discontent , that many practised to destroy him, which were still discovered. Hee countenanced the Rascaitie and the most desperate Souldiers against the chiefe Nobility. Hee seized his Treasures in Mosco and the principall Monasteries. Many of the Nobilitie he put to shametull death, and tortured : and now suspecting his Chereas Tartars also, he placed them in his new Conquests of Leestland and Sweathland. The Crim Tartar his ancient Enemy invaded him, incited by his Nobilitie as he found out : against whom he levies out of remote Provinces a huge Army of strangers ; with his owne hundred thousand horse, and fifty thousand foot. He dedicated his Chereas suite, and purs her in a Monastery, and among many of his owne Subiects, chusest

- 10 Natalia Daughter to Knaaz Phiodor Bulgakov a great Commander in his warres, who soone after lost his head; and his Daughter within a yeere was shorne a Nunne. Newes came of his Enemies approach. (God suffered this wicked people who lived and wallowed in the height of their wickedness and lust of crying Sodomiticall sinnes, to be thus punished both by so bloody a King, and this Scythian Enemy) who came with two hundred thousand Horsemen within fifty miles compasse on the River Oca neere Circapoe, and upon secret intelligence, as was thought, he passed the River without repulse of the Emperours Army, who durst not on paine of death stirre beyond their bounds upon whatsoever advantage. The Enemy approaching the great City of Musco, the Russe Emperour flies with his two Sonnes, Treasure, Servants and his Guard of twenty thousand Gunners towards a strong Monastie.

20 ry Trovets, or the Trinity sixty miles off.

Upon Ascension day, the Enemy fires the high steeple of Saint Iohns Church, at which instant happened a tempestuous wind, whereby all the Churches Houses, Monasteries, and Palaces within the City and Suburbs thirty miles compasse, built most of Firre and Oke were set on fire and consumed in fixe houres space with infinite thousand of * Men, Women, and Children burnt and smothered to death by the fierie aire ; few escaping, without and within the three walled Citilles. The River and Ditches about Musco were stopped and filled with multitudes of people laden with Gold, Silver, Jewels, Earrings, Chaines, Bracelets, Rings and other Treasure, which went for succour to save their heads above water. All which notwithstanding, so many thousands were there burnt and drowned, that the River

- 30 could not with all meanes and industry that could be used, bee in two yeeres after cleansed ; those which were left alive, and many from other places being daily occupied within great circuits to search and drage for Jewels, Plate, bags of Gold and Silver. I my selfe was somewhat the better for that nothing. The streets of the City, Churches, Sellers and Vaults lay so thicke and full of dead carcases as no man could passe for the noysome smells long after. The Crim and his Army beheld this fire, solacing himselfe in a faire Monastery foure miles off, and tooke the spoyle of such as fled from the fire, besetting all the wayes about the Citie, and returned with much Treasure, and store of Captives passing over the River the same way they came.

- The Russe Emperour fled further to Vologda, five hundred miles from Mosco, accompanied with his Clergy, in whom he had most confidence. He summons a Councell Royall, disolvet his Army which sought not a stroke for him, examined, racked and tortured many of his chiefe Captaines ; executes, confiscates, destroys their Race and Families : takes order for cleansing, repaying and replenishing Musco. In the midt of this Parliament Chigaly Murzay sends an Embassadour attended with many Murzyys, (in their account Noblemen) all well horsed, clothed in sheepes skinne Coats girt to them with blacke Caps of the same, having Bowes and Arrows with curious Cymitars by their sides. They had a Guard to keepe them in darke Roomes ; stinking Horse flesh, and water was their best dyet, without Bread, Beere, Bed, or Candell. At the time of their audience had vsage was offered them which they pushed at and scorned. The Emperour late with his three Crownes before him in great Royalty, his Princes and Nobles attending, richly adorned with Jewels and Pearle. He commanded the Embassadours sheepe skinne Coats and Cap to be taken off, and a Golden Robe and rich Cap to be put on, who laughed aloud thereat, enters the Emperours presence, his followers being kept sicke in a space grated with Iron. The Embassadour chafes with a hollow, hellish voyce looking fierce and grimly on the Emperour, being otherwise a molt vgly Creature. Foure Captaines of the Guard bring him nere his seate, and then without reuerence he thunders out that his Master and Lord Chigaley great Emperour of all the Kingdomes and Chams that the Sonne doth spread his beames over, hath sent to him Iuan Vassillich his Vassall and great Duke over all Russia by his permission, to know how he liked the severge of his disposition by sword, fire, and famine ; and withall had sent him for remedie, a present of his indignation (pulling out a foule rustie Knife) to cut his throat with all. This done, hee hastied out of the Roome without answer. They would have taken off his golden Gowne and Cap, but he and his company stroue with them, and would not permit it. The Emperour fell in-

* D. Fletcher expresseth this number to bee 800000, which may seeme credible not only by the multitudes of Inhabitants at that time, but also the Neighbouring Villages and Countries fleeing thither for refuge. Musco never recovered that losse. Simon Monast to an agony, tore his haire and beard, sent for his Ghostly Father. The chiefe Captaine desired leave to cut them all in pieces, but he gaue no answer. After he had detain'd him some time, his fury being alayed, he sent him away with better vlage and this Messige: *Tell the Merchant and vnbelermer thy Master, it is nothe, it is my sinnes and the sinnes of my people against God and Christ: he it is that hath giuen him a lummie of the Devil his power and opportunitie to be the instrument of my rebuke, by whose pleasure and helpe I doubt not of vengeance, and to make him my Vassall, though he be now but a Runnegate, and hath no place of abode to be found out in. Hee answered, he would not doe him so much service to speake so arrogant a message from him. Whereupon, not long after, hee did adresse a Noble Gentleman Alfonso Phedorowicz Nagay in that Emptie, who was there detain'd and indured much misery for seuen yeeres space.*

The Emperour was loth to come to Musco, but sent for the chiefe Merchants, Handicrafts and Trademen from all other Cities and Townes within his Kingdome to build and inhabit there: and further to draw Traffike thither, tooke away all Impositions, and granted freedome of Customes; let seuen thousand Masons and Workmen to build a faire stone Wall round about the Musco, which was finished in five yeeres space, strong and beautifull, and furnished with faire brasse Ordnance: he also seled his Offices and Officers of Iustice therein as before.

Himselfe kept much at Uolagda, on the River Dwina, the Centre and safest place of his Kingdome. He conferred much with one Elisius Bomelin, a Mathematician come out of England. He also sent for skillfull Artificers, Carpenters, Ioyners, Masons, Goldsmiths, Physicians, Apothecaries and such like out of England. He builds a Treasure-houle of stone, great Barks and Barges to conuey and transport Treasure vpon any sudden occasion to Sollautz, a Monastery standing on the North Sea, the direct way to England. Hee seced his Merchants by taking their Commodities to exchange with Merchant Strangers for Gold, Dollars, Jewels and Pearles which he tooke into his Treasury, paying little or nothing, he borrowed great summes of Cities, Townes, and Monasteries, exhausting all their wealth by great Impositions and Customes, to augment his owne Treasure, which he neuer would diminish vpon any occasion whatsoever; whereby hee became so odious that in a desperate resolution he desired to prevent and alter his estate, to annull and frustrate all these engagements of his Crowne. He made a diuision of his Subjects, calling the one Oprosy, and the other Smilsey, and established a new King or Emperour named Char Spynon, Sonne to the Emperour of Casau, transferring on him his stile and Crowne with the authority incident, but crowning him without any solemnitie or consent of Peeres. Hee causeth his Subjects to adresse their persons, suites, and affaires to him & in his name all Priuiledges, Charters, and Writings to be called in, and new to be granted in this Emperours Name and vnder his Seale: in his name are all Court pleadings, Coynes, Customes, Fines, Reuenues for the maintenance of his House, Officers and Seruants. Hee sits in Maiesty and is lyable to all debts and matters concerning his Treasury. The old Emperour and his Sonnes prostrate themselves and his Bishops, Nobility, and Officers are caused to do the like: Embassadors also to resort to him (which some refused) and he further married him to the Daughter of a Prime Prince of the bloud Royall, named Kneaz Mishyloiskie.

Now would the old Emperour take no notice of debts owing in his time, Letters Patents and Priuiledges of Townes and Monasteries are made voyd, States of Inheritance for want of confirmation and other things are at a stand. His Clergy, Nobility and Commons for remedy hereof, after a yeeres discontinuance must petition Iuan Vassilumich, that hee will be pleased to resume the Crowne and Government vpon many conditions and authenticall instruments confirmed by Act of Parliament in a very Solemne new Inauguration. Hee being content, infinite Gifts and Presents of worth were sought to bestow on him, his old debts and former incumbrances discharged. Now he is againe inuested in slauie que prius, regnants Priuiledges to Townes, Monasteries, Noblemen and Merchants, vpon new compositions, whence a portion is made for his Niece, daughter to Kneaz Andrew his late Brother, who in ieaoulie (as was thought) of the peoples loue to him was made away, in pledging the Emperour in a Cup of Mead which he had drunke to him. This his daughter was married to Hartique Magnus Brother to Frederike King of Denmarke, borne before his Father Christianus Duke of Holst was elected King of that Country. To pacifie dissention betwixt them, King Frederike was content to exchange for the Dikedome of Holst all his Townes, Castles and Lands during his life which hee had in Liefland. This Emperour makes vp the Match, and marries them in Mosco, gives him in dower with his Niece Elna, all the interest hee had in the Townes and Castles conquered by him in Liuania, establishing him therein, and stiling him Coral, that is, King Magnus; gives him a hundred good Horse well furnished, 200000. Rubles in Gold, Silver, Plate, Jewels, and rich apparell, with liberal gifts to all his Followers, sends 2000. horse to see this King and Queene settled in their estates at the City of Dorp.

But in steed of expected amity, wars follow from Denmarke and Swethia, those two Kings ioyning with Stephanus that valiant King of Poland, who not long after got from him the Narue, and besieged Plefcoue. The Dane and Swethen are also competitors with him in certaine Territories on the North Coast, Wardhouse, Cola, Sollauetka, V. rague, &c. Put him from his Customes and Traffike there, offering also to debarre the English Merchants in their passage for fishing on those Coasts, and trading with them at Saint Nicholas and Colmogro. The Emperour notwithstanding these incursions, lends for all his Nobles and Gentlemens fairest daughters (Virgins) thorow his Kingdome, out of whom hee choletia a wife for himselfe, and another for his eldest Sonne Charewich Luane. Her name was Nastacia, daughter to Iuan Sherimitten a Viond of a good Family. The Emperour lueth in feare, ¹⁰ daily discouers Treasons, and spends much time in torturing and execution.

Foure Paharinkes were Executioners, one of which thrusting his Knife too farre (it seemed, purposing to dispatch him) was presently had to a blocke, and that hand cut off, whereof (not well scared) he dyed the next day. Her body swolne and lying naked in the field, open to the view of all which passed by, hee commanded his Huntsmen to bring their hungry Hounds to deuoure her flesh, and bones dragged vp and downe. The Emperour at this sight said, such as I fauour I haue honoured, and to such as bee Traytors I will doe thus. I could enumerate many more like Obiects, but I forbear; his chiefe exercise ³⁰ being to deuide and execute new torture, especially on his Nobility best beloued of his Subjects.

His purposes for England.

New Policy.

But his estate still growing daily more dangerous, he enquired of Eliuzius Bonelius Doctor of Physicke, a rare Mathematician or Magician, and of others of Queene Elizabeths yeeres, and what hopes there might be if he should be a Suter vnto her for himselfe: notwithstanding that he had three wives then liuing, and many Kings could not preuaile in that Sute. Presently he puts his last wife into a Nunnery, and thinking to make England in case of extremities his safest refuge, built and prepared many goodly Barks, large Boats, or Barges at Vologda, and brought his richest Treasure thither to be embarked in the same to passe downe the River Dvina, and so into England by the English ships vpon a sudden, leauing his eldest ⁴⁰ Sonne Charewich Luane to gouerne and pacifie his so troubled estate. To this purpose hee experimented a rare proiect, which increased his treasure and hatred together. He calls for the principall Priors, Abbats, Archimandrites and Egomens of the richest Monasteries of his Kingdome, which were very many, and told them that what he had to say was best knowne vnto themselves. He had spent the most part of his time, wits, vigor and youth in warsing for their wealth and safetie, who had received increase by that which had exhauited his treasure and safetie (by his danger) from forreine Enemies and disloyall practisers: nor could hee or they longer ⁵⁰ supply out of their infinite abundance must bee the triall of their fidelities, which urgent necessity of the time exacted, the soules of their Patrons and Donors (Saints and Wonderworkers) for redemption of their sinnes and soules command, and they must prepare their best thoughts without fustitious refusals. Vpon these Rhetoricall threats at the Prouinciall Conuocation called in the great Consistory of the Holy Ghost, the Oath of Souerainty was minitred in the Citie of Mosco. Some feare there was that he did ayme at all.

After many disputes and allegations (which appeare in the Originall) prepared for the Kings audience, hee hauing intelligence by priuy Spyes from their Register, framed delayes of audience, meane whiles thundering threats to be carried by his Initiators to their eares. He calls forty of the most pragmaticall, tels them, hee vnderstands of their consultations and that they were the principall, whom his mild Relation of his disaduentures, and the peoples miseries had not mollified. What shall we render you for reward? the Nobilitie and people cry out that ⁶⁰ you haue got all the treasure in the Land, by trading in all kind of Merchandises, taking the benefite of all other mens trauels, being priuiledged to pay no Custome to our Crowne, nor charge of warres: and by tariuing the best seruice of our Subjects, you haue gotten by due computation the third part of the the Townes, Royalties, and Villages of this Kingdome into your Possessions, by your Witchery, Incantments and Sorcery. You buy and sell the soules of our people, you live a most idle life in all pleasure and delicacie, commit most horrible sinnes, Extortion, Briberie and excessive Drurie. You abound in all the bloudie and crying sinnes, Oppression, Gluttony, Idleness, Sodomitie, and worse (if worse may be) with beests. We haue much to answer before God to suffer you to live, and so many more worthy to die for you. God forgive me taking part with you. Did not the Pope of late by his Nuncio earnestly perswade to haue the Supremacie ouer you, and to dispose of all your Places and Renewment Hath not the Greeke Church often solicited vs for the change of your Metropolitan Sea, by mediation of the Patriarke of Alexandria? Ten and often I haue bene moued for your dissolution to the reparation of thousands of my ancientest and poorest Nobility, from whose Ancestors most of your Renewment came, and to whom it most iustly belongs, that haue spent their liuing and liues for your safeties and enrichings, and my rich Subiects are impoverished (borow your rapine and deniable illutions). A faire Example wee haue of that valorous King of England, Henry the Eighth; your Renewment being much more, besides your standing treasure, then your prodigall and luxurious maintenance can expend. By which meanes our Nobilitie and seruicable Subiects are decayed and our treasure so exhasted, that we are enforced by the secret inspiration, by the Soules and holy Saines, the holy workers of Wonders, from whom you professe to hold that inuise treasure, not yours, that lyes as a dead talent in your custodies, put to no Religious vse. In their names and all the Donors and Benefactors we comend and command that by such a day, lest you be all then through the plague of Gods iust wrath deuoured by wild beests of the Forrest (who attend the execution of your indgement with a more sudden and fearefull death then befell the fullbook of Ananias and Sapphyras demall) you bring vs a faithfull and true Inuentorie what treasure and zeerey Renewment enery of your Houses haue in possession. Necessary will not permit delay nor excuse for the contrary. By that time we intend to call a Parliament Royall to be Iudges of our urgent necessitie for defence of our Realmes against the Kings and Princes of Poland, Sweethia, Lithuania, and Denmarke, all combined, and our Rebels confederated with the Crimmes, and to be witnesses also of the discharge of our dutie to God and his Angels (to incite you in their name) and his poore distressed people, for whose necessities and preformation of you all we are thus earnest, their so miserable estates lying yet in your hands and power, in time to remedie and sustaine.

The chiefe of the Clergy often assembled and dissembled, deuising with the discontented Nobility to make waire and resist. But they wanted sufficient Commanders, and were otherwise vnprovident of Armes. Hereof the Emperour tooke aduantage, and proclaimed the heads of those Houses to be Traytors, enditewentye of the principall, and chargeth them with Treasons and other odious crimes, hauing fitted pregnant proofes to manifest the same to be true. He commands his great wild Beares to be brought out of their daire Kates, kept of purpose for such psumes at Slobida Velica. Vpon Saint Iames day, in a spacious place walled about, teuen of the principall fat belied Fryers were brought forth one after another, each with his Crosse and Beads in one hand; and (through the Emperours great fauour) a Bore-speare of five foot in length in the other hand for his defence. A wilde Beare was let loose, which ranging against the wall, sented the Fryer and made more mad with the peoples houting and cry, runnes at him fiercely, and crusheth his head, body, bowels, legs, and armes as a Cat doth a Moule, and hauing thus deuoured or torne the Fryer, was shot and killed by the Gunners. Then was another Fryer and a fresh Beare in like sort committed and likewise letted, and so the rest, of which only the last had so much skill and agility that setting the end of his Speare in the ground, and guiding it to the breast of the Beare, he ranne himselfe thorow on it, and both dyed in the place. This Fryer was canonized for a valiant Saint by therest of his liuing Brethren, of Michalla Swart in Sulska. Seven other Fryers were condemned to be buried alive. Hereupon the Metropolitans Bishops, Monkes, and Fryers of all Houses resorted with Petitions and Prostrations to pacifie the Emperour, not only suitering his Ghostly Father to absolve him, but acknowledging the others to haue suffered iustly, hoping that it would be example to all which professed holy Orders. They all, their Treasures, and Heads of all the chiefe Monasteries and Nunneries did in the name of themselves and the soules of their holy founders present a true and perfect Inuentory of all their Treasure, Moneyes, Townes, Lands, and Renewment particularly belonging to any Saint which commended the same to their trust and custodies successively for the euermaking maintenance of those holy Seminaries and Sanctuaries, hoping and assuredly beleueing that his sacred Soule in commemoration of all others, will not suffer any violation in his age, which must passe away with accounts before the Trinity of things in all Ages done: if otherwise, that it would please him to giue them some authentick discharge to remayne to Posteritie. I haue with my best skill translated thus much verbatim out of the Originall.

These Incantments prevented their dissolution, but preuayed not against the Emperours resolute demand of 300000 Markes sterling brought speedily in Coyne vnto his Treasury, ster, their Assembly were at least two thousand every Sunday, their Rites after the Lut- herane fashion: Of these eighty five were Scots Souldiers left of seven hundred sent from Stockholme, and three English in their company. I got them well heuled at Boluen neere the Mosca, I appeased the Emperours fury against them, causing to be told him the difference of these remote Adventurers (ready to serue any Christian Prince for pay) and the Native Swedes, and that they would be of good vse against the Crimme Tartar. Some vse was after made of my aduice, and 1200 of them did better seruice against the Tartar, then 12000.

 those new Deuils that come with their thundring puffs of fire, whereat the Emperour laughed and wished for more of them: and they had Penions and Lands allowed, and married with the Livonian women increased into Families. I was glad hee tooke no notice of the English, which might haue yielded him an opportune quarrell to my selfe, and to the Merchants goods in his Countrey worth 100000 Markes. A little before hee had sold Master Thomas Glover a chiefe Agent for the English Company, a Wife borne of a Noble House in Poland, Basmaniana, taken Captiue with her Sister at Pollotzen, for 10000 Hungarian Duckets in 50 Silkes and other merchandise, and sent him with his Wife empty out of his Land.

The Emperour expecting some returne and answer of his Letters out of England, the Queene addrested one Daniel Syluester therewith, who arriued at Saint Nehelaz, past vp to Calmege, and there making Clothes for his passing vp to the Emperour, whiles the Taylor was putting on him his new Sute in the English house, a Thunderbolt strooke him dead, piercing downe his necke and collar in the inside of his new Coat, not outwardly seene. A flash of Lightning killed also his Boy and Dogge by him, burnt his Deske, Letters and the House at that instant: at which newes, the Emperour much perplexed, said Gods will hee done, the Queenes Maiessty; Perceiuing that I had attained the familiar knowledge of his Language the Polish and Dutch Tongues, he questioned me of diuers things; I liked my answer, asked if I had seene his great Vessels at Vologda. I told him I had. What Traytor hath shewed them you? I ventured in company of thousands more (I said) to behold their beauty, &c. He said, You shall see double the number ere long, but much more to be admired, if you knew what inestimable treasure they are inwardly to be beautified with. It is reported that your Queene my Sister hath the best Navy of Ships in the World. It is true said I, and entred into a large discourse and description of them.

Sir Ierome Horsey sent from the Emperour to Queen Elizabeth

He gaue me charge to prepare my selfe and to be silent and secret, and to attend every day till he were prepared for my dispatch, he commanded his Secretary to take in writing of me a description of the Queenes Navy Royall, to which I added the Picture of a Ship with all her glorious and Martiall accoutrements. About this time, the Emperour was much busied in searching out a Treason against him plotted by Bomelius and the Archbishop of Novogrod with some others, discovered by their Seruants on the Racke, Letters sent in Cyphers three sundry wayes to Swethen and Poland. The Bishop contended all, and Bomelius denied all: But being racked, his backe and body cut with wyre whips, he confessed more then the Examiners were willing the Emperour should know. He sent word they should roast him, being taken from the Pooke and bound to a wooden Spit, which being done till they thought no life left, they brought him in a Sled thorow the Castle, where I with others saw him, and he espying me, called vpon Christ. They threw him into a Dungeon, where he miserably ended his life. He had liued in pompe, and bene Authour of much mischiefe, had conuayed much treasure out of the Countrey, by way of England to Wesell in Westphalia where hee was borne, though brought vp in Cambridge; an Enemy alway to our Nation. Hee had deluded the Emperour with tales of Queene Elizabeths youth and hopes (by his Calculations) of obtaining her. (But the Emperour, out of hope hereof, heard that there was a young Lady of the blood Royall, the Lady Mary Hastings, daughter to the Earle of Hunnington, whom he now affected.) The Bishop of Novogrod was condemned of coyning and sending money to Swethen and Poland, of keeping Witches, buggering Boyes and Beasts, confederating with Bomelius, &c. All his goods were confiscated, and himselfe throwne into a Dungeon with Irons on his head and legges, where he made painted Images, Combes and Beads, lued with bread and hear, Eleuen of his confederate Seruants were hanged in his Palace gate at Moscow, and his women Witches shamefully dismembred and burnt.

I beheld all this,

The Emperour passed over those which had bene accused, and now consulted about marrying his second Sonne Charinich Theodor, being of great simplicitie, the eldest hauing no issue. But hauing his Prelates and Nobles together, could not but evaporate some of his conceits from the former confessions of their Treasons, being Ascension day, on which before Moscow had bene burned. He spent some houres in Rhetoricall enlarging the dismalnesse of that day with great eloquence, darting still with his eye at many Confederates in the late Conspiracie, pretending to leaue them a naked & Royall and distressed people, and a reproch to all Nations of the World. The Enemies are at hand, God and his prodigious creatures in the Heauens fight against vs, Scarcity and Famine witness it, and yet no Iudgements moue remorse in you, The Originall is too long to recite. Little was done, but all prostrating themselves to his Maiessty, and mercy desired God to blese his holy purpose for the marriage of his Sonne, for whom he chose Irenia, daughter of Theodor Iuanowich Godonone, and after the solemnization of the marriage with great Feast dismissed the Nobles and Prelates with better words and countenance, which was taken for a reconciliation. But the Nuptials could not be performed by vidual cohabitation, which much distempered the King; it is not decent to write the courses taken therein.

Letters sent to the Queene inclosed in a Bottle by Sir
Ierome Horsey.

The Emperours Letters & Instructions were ready, himselfe & his chiefe Secretarie Sauvay Fromlow (whiles I was present) closted them vp in one of the false sides of a wooden Bottle filled with Aquavita to hang vnder my Horse-mayne not worth one penny: appointed me foure hundred Hungarian Duckets in Gold to be sowed in my Boote, and quited in some of my worst garments. He said, he forbore to tell me of some secrets of his pleasure, fearing lest I passing thorow his Enemies Countrey might bee enforced to discouer what hee would not haue knowne. The Bottle you carry with you shall declare what you shall say to Queene Elizabeth my louing Sister, of which you must haue careess of your life, vntill you come in safe place to open it. In meane while, and alway, beehou my sweet Sunshyne, Irenimiko, trusty and faithfull, and thy reward shall be my goodnesse and grace from me hereafter. I fell prostrate, layd my head on his foot with a heauy heart to bee thus exposed to vnauoydable danger. Doussa Planow a Gentleman of good ranke, and daily Woyter on the King attended me; my Sled and Horse and twenty Seruants were ready at the postern gate. I posted that night to Oster ninety miles, where victuals and fresh Horses were prepared, and so to Nova.

Within three houres after, the Centinell tooke me vpon the borders, and brought me to Newhouse into the Castle before the State-holder or Lieutenant, who strictly examined and searched me, suspecting me as one coming from their enemies Country. I said I was glad to come into their hands out of the vaile of misery the Muscovites Country, not without losse. On the third day vpon some mediation, they appointed mee a Guide, and suffered mee to passe. The Guard expected gratuite, but I excused, as pinched by the Russe. I passed three

10 dayes by Land and frozen Meares to Ofsell in Lusland, an Island large and spacious vnder the King of Denmarke, Raggamuffin Souldiers tooke me and vsed me roughly, and carried me to Sewen Burgh, and so to Orent Burgh, the chiefe Townes and Castles in those parts, and there delivered me to the State-holders Lieutenant. I attended his pleasure kept hardly as a Spie, the Snakes creeping in my Lodging, on Bed and board, and Milke pans: the foyle was such they did no harme. I was called before the chiefe Gouernour (a graue Gentleman in good fauour with the King, many Halberds attending) who examined me with many questions. I answered I was a Subiect of the Queene of England, who had peace with all Christian Kings, specially with the King of Denmarke: but was committed againe to custody, whence (having dismissed his company) he sent for me againe by his Sonne and being private, holding a Letter

20 in his hand, said, I haue receiued sundry Letters from my friends, and one of late from my daughter, captiue in Mosco, which sheweth of much friendship shee hath found at an English Gentlemans hand, which negotiates in that Court for the Queene of England. My Lord, said I, is your daughter called Magdalen Vrtil: yea Sir, said he. I answered I was the man, & that within these ten dayes she was well. He sayd he could not procure her ranfome, and clasps me about the neck, crying as did his Sonne likewise: Gods Angell hath brought your goodnesse thus to me, how euer disguised in this turbulent time, that I might render you thanks and furtherance. I desired free passe and safe conduct. He feasted me ioyfully, and made ready his Letters and Passports to Capitaines of Townes and Castles, gaue mee a faire German striking Clocke, offered his Sonne and Seruants armed to guard me out of danger, which I could not

30 accept of, and commended his daughter to me.

I passed on to Pilton a strong Castle where King Magnus lay, who vsed mee roughly, because I could not drinke with him excessively. Hee had riotously spent and giuen most of his Townes and Castles, Jewels, Plate, &c. to his followers and adopted daughters, which hee receiued in Dowre with the Emperours Neece, and not long after dyed miserably, leaving his Queene and only daughter in very poore estate. I roade thorow the Duke of Curlands Country, and Prussia to Koninsburgh, Melun and Dianzike in Poland, Pomerania and Mischelburgh to Lubeck, where I was knowne and honourably entertained, I had now gotten foure or five Seruants Dutch and English. The Burgomasters sent mee a Present of Fish, Flesh, and Wines, taking notice of the fauours I had done to them and theirs: diuers came with thankfull acknowledgement of their Redemption by my means and Purse, from Muscovites and Tartarian Captiuitie, and presented me with a Boll coauer guilt, in it Ricks Dollers, and Hungarian Duckets, which Coyne I returned againe. They brought mee their Towne Booke, and prayed mee to write my Name and place of Birth and abode, that they and their Posteritie might honour my Name in Record for euer. At Hamburg likewise, they for like cause presented me their thanks, and Present, and the Burgomasters testified me.

I landed at Harnich, opened my Aquanita Bottle (which had beene girt close vnder my Calfooke by day, and my best Pillow by night) and tooke thence the Emperours Letters, which I sweetned as well as I could. But yet the Queene smelt the Aquanita Aiuour. I had access three or foure severall times, and some discourse by means of my Lord Treasurer, Sir Francis Halingham, and some honourable countenance of my Lord of Leister, by Sir Edward Horsley my Kinsman his meane, I was well entertained by the Muscovite Company, to whom the Queene had giuen command to prepare those things for which the Emperour had giuen directions. With which, and her Maiesties Letters & gracious fauour (sworne her Seruant, Elquire of the Body, giuing me her Picture & Hand to kisse) I departed in company of twelue tall Ships, Wee met with the King of Denmarke his Fleet of Shippes and Gallies neere the North Cape, fought with them and put them to the worst, and after arrived at S. Nicolas. I passed ouer Voga, and came to Slobida Alexanderssen, where I deliuered the Queenes Letters to the Emperour, with her pleasure, by word of mouth shored of his expectation. He commended my silence, commended my speed and businesse done for him, gaue me allowanances and promised his goodnesse for recompence of my seruice. He commanded also that these Commodities should be brought vp to the Musco, and receiued into his Treasury, viz.

Emperour,

He came to the Citie of Musca, and cast his displeasure vpon some Grandes hee sent a Parasite of his with 200. Gunners to rob his Brother in Law Mektia Romanowich our next Neighbour, which tooke from him all his Armour, Hoofes, Plate, Money, Lands and Goods to the value of. 100000. Marks sterling. He sent the next day to the English House for as much courte Cotton as would make himselfe and his children Gownes to cover them. The Emperour sent likewise Simon Nagoy another of his Instruments, to squeeze or sponge Andrew Shalken a great bribing Officer, who brought his faire young Wife Solumaneda out of her Chamber, defiled her, cut and galled her naked backe with his Cemitar; killed his trusty Seruant Iuan Lutsig, tooke all his Horfes, Goods and Lands, and beat out of his shimes 10000. Robles or Markes sterling in money. At that time did the Emperour also conceiue displeasure against the Dutchmen and Linonians before mentioned (to whom a Church and libertie of Religion had bene giuen by my meanes) and appointed certaine Captaines with 2000. Gunners in the night to take the spoile of all they had, who stripped them naked, ranslated and defouled the women and virgins, carrying away diuers of the youngest and fairest to serue their lusts. Some escaping came to the English house, where they were clothed and relieved not without danger of displeasure, amongst whom was that daughter of the Gouverneur of Orell in Lusland commended to my fauour, whose freedom I also afterwards procured and conueyed her to her father.

The Emperour
strikes his Sonnes; some say with his staffe on his head,

His crueltye grew now ripe for vengeance; and hee not long after falling out with his eldest Sonne for his committeration to those distressed Christians; and for greiuing at his Vnkle wrongs, iealous also of the peoples affection to him, gaue him a boxe on the eare (as it was termed) which he tooke so tenderly that hee fell into a burning Feuer, and in three dayes departed this life. Whereat the Emperour tore his haire and beard, like a mad man, lamenting too late for that irreuerable losse, not to himselfe so much as to the Empire, whose hopes were buried with him; being a wife, milde and worthy Prince of three and twenty yeeres. Hee was buried in Michala Archangell Church in the Musca with Jewels and Riches put in his Tombe valued at 50000. pounds; watched after by twelue Citizens in course, euer night deuoted to his Saint Iohn and Michael, to keepe both body and Treasure till his Resurrection.

Death and buriall of young Iuan.

Now was the Emperour more earnest to send into England about his long conceited match, his second Sonne being weake of wit and body, without hope of ability for government, and the third not only young but disallowed in Sanktine, and according to the fundamentall Lawes illegitimate, borne out of Wedlocke of the fit vnlawfull Wife, not solemnised with the Rites of their Church, but in the Church-yard by a de priued and excommunicated Prelate, in which respect neyther she nor her Issue were capable of the Crowne.

So sayth the Originall.

The Emperour perused the Queenes last Letters, and addresth one of his trustiest Seruants in Embassage Theodore Pissempkow a wife Nobleman about the Lady Mary Hastings aforesaid; and that her Maiesty would bee pleased to send some Noble Embassage to treat with him therein. This Embassage tooke shipping at Saint Nicolaus, and arriuing in England, was magnificently enteratyned and admitted audience. Her Maiesty caused that Lady to be attended with diuers Ladies and young Noblemen, that so the Embassage might haue a sight of her, which was accomplished in Torke House Garden. There was he attended also with diuers men of quality brought before her, and casting downe his countenance fell prostrate before her, and rising ranne backe with his face still towards her. The Lady with the rest admiring at this strange salutation, hee sayd by an Interpreter; it sufficed him to behold the Angelicall presence of her, which hee hoped should bee his Masters Spouse and Emperesse, seeming ranslated with her Angelicall countenance, state and beauty. Shee was after that by her familiar friends in Court called Emperesse of Moscouia. Sir William Russell, third Sonne to the Earle of Bedford, a wife and comely Gentleman was appointed her Maiesties Ambassage to the Moscouites; but hee and his Friends considering of the businesse, and not so forward thereto, the Company of Merchants intreated for Sir Ierome Bowes, mooued theretowith his presence and tall person.

Hee was well let forth, most at their charge, and with the Russian Embassage arriued at S. Nicolaus. The Emperours Ambassage posted ouer land, and deliuered his Letters with the accounts of his Embassage which was ioyfully accepted. Sir I. B. passed slowly vp the Dwina 1000. miles to Valogda. The Emperour sends a Pensioner Michael Prastepogne well attended to meet him and make his prouisions. At Terslane another Query of the Stable, met him. At Musca hee was honourably enteratyned. Knez Iuan Suetuio attended with 300. Horse brought him to his lodging. Sanelle Frollone the Secretary was sent to congratulate his welcome with many dishes of dressed meate, and promise of best accomodating.

The next day, the Emperour sent a Noble man Ignatie Taisibone, to visit him with faire words and promise of speediest audience, which was on Saturday following. About nine of the clocke the streets were filled with people, and a thousand Gunners attired in yellow and blue Garments set in ranks by the Captaines on Horsebacke with bright Harquebutes in their hands from the Ambassadors doore to the Emperours Palace, Knez Ivan Siticour attended him mounted on a faire Gennet richly bedecked, with a faire Gelding well furnished for the Embassadour, attended with three hundred Gentlemen gallantly adorned. The Embassadour being displeased that the Dukes Horse was better then his, mounted on his owne Horse, and with his thirty men liveried in Stamell Clokes well set forth, each having 10 a part of his Present (being most Plate) marched onward to the Kings Palace, where another Duke met him, and told him that the Emperour stayed for him. He answered, that hee came as fast as he could. By the way the people ghesling at the vnpleasingne of his message, cryed Careuke, (that is, Crane-legs) in mockage of him, whereat hee stomed much. The passage, stayes and Roomes thorow which hee was conducted, were all beset with Merchants and Gentlemen in Golden Coats. His men entred before him with their Presents into the Roome where the Emperour sat in his Robes and Maiesty, with his three Crownes before him, foure young Noble men called Ryndes, shining in their Cloth of beaten Silver, with foure Scepters, or bright Silver Hatchets in their hands, on each side of him, the Prince and other his great Dukes and Nobles in ranks sitting round about him. The Emperour 20 stood vp, and the Embassadour making his courtesies, delivers the Queenes Letters, which heerecued and put off his Imperiall Cap, asking how his louing Sister Queene Elizabeth di l. His answer made, he sat downe on a side forme covered with a Carpet, and after some litle pause and mutual view, was dismissed in manner as hee came, and his Dinner of two hundred dishes of dressed meats sent after him, by a Gendeman of qualitie.

I was forewarned by my secret and best friends not to intermeddle in those busineses. Some secret and publike conferences passed, but good note was taken that none of the great Family of the Gedonones were consulted with therein. The King feasts the Embassadour, grants great allowance of daily prouision, and nothing would please him: yea he made great complaints about friuolous matters. The Merchants and the Emperours Officers were reconciled in their accounts, grieuances remedied, Priuiledges granted, and an Embassadour 30 to the Queene resolved on; if Sir I. B. could haue conformed himselfe to the time, any thing might haue bene yielded; yea, he promised, that if his Marriage with the Queenes Kindwoman tooke effect, her issue should inherit the Crowne; for assurance whereof he had a masse of ready treasure presently to be transported with his Embassadour vnto Queene Elizabeth trust. The Clergy and Nobility (especially the nearest allied to the old Emperesse, the Princes wife and her Family of the Gedonones found meanes to crosse all these Designes.

The King much distracted in fury caused many Witches, Magicians, or Wors presently to be sent for out of the North, where there are many betwene Colmagro and Lappia. Three-score of them were brought post to Musko, where they were guarded, dyeted and daily visited by the Emperours great Favourite Bodan Belscoy to receive from them their Divinations or Oracles on the Subjects giuen them in charge by the Emperour. (Note that a great blasing Star and other prodigious sights, were seene a moneth together, every night ouer Musko that yeere.) This Favourite now sought to serue the turne of the rising Sonne, wearied with the wicked disposition of the Emperour. The Sooth-sayers tell him that the heavenly Planets and Constellations would produce the Emperours death by such a day. But he not daring to tell the Emperour so much, said to them that on that day they should be all burned. The Emperour began grieuously to swell in his Cods (wherewith he had offended so long, boasting that he had deflowered thousands of Virgins, and a thousand children of his begetting destroyed) was carried every day in his Chaire into his Treasury. One day (two days before 40 the Emperour his death) the Prince beckoned to me to follow, and I aduenturously stood among the rest, and heard him call for his Precious Stones and Jewels. He then held discourse to the Nobles about him, directing his eye and speech most to Boris Gedonoma, of the nature and properties of his Gemmes: of the World compassing Load-stone (causing the Waytes to make a Chaine of Needles therewith touched) of the Corall also and Turkeffe, whose beautiful colours (sayd he) layd on my arme poysoned with inflammation, you see are turned pale, and declare my death. Reach out my Staffe Royall (an Vnicorne Horn garnished with very faire Diamonds, Rubies, Saphires, Emeralds and other Precious Stones, it cost 70000. der is poyson. Then he points to the Rubie; this comforts the Braine and Memory, clarifieth congealed bloud. That Emerald of the nature of the Rainbow, is enemy to all vncleane-nesse, and though a man cohabit in Lust with his owne Wife, this Stone being about them will burke at the spending of Nature. The Saphyre I greatly delight in, it preferueth and increaseth Nature and Courage, reioyeth the heart, is pleasing to all the virall Senses, so-ueraigne to the Eyes, strengtens the Muscles. Hee takes the Onyx in hand, &c. All these are Gods wonderfull gifts, secrets in Nature, revealed to mans use and contemplation as friends to grace and vertue, and Enemies to vice. I faint, carry me away, till another time. In the afternoon he peruseth out his Will, and yet thinks not to dye. His Ghostly Father dares not put him in mind of appointing in holy forme. Hee hath bene witcht in that place, and often vnwitcht againe.

He commands the Master of the Apotheke, and the Physicians to prepare a Bath for his solace, enquires the goodnesse of the Signe, sends his Favourite to his Witches to know their Calculations. Hee tels them, the Emperour will bury or burne them all quicke for their Illusions and Lyes, the day is comne, he is as heart-whole as euer he was, Sir (they answered) bee not so wrathfull, you know the day is comne, and you know it ends with the Sun-Setting. He halts him to the Emperour, made preparation for his Bath about the third houre of the day. The Emperour therein solaced himselfe, and made merry with pleasant Songs after his vse, came out about the seuenth houre well refreshed, fate downe vpon his Bed, calls Redoune Birken a Favourite of his to bring the Chess-board, sets his men, his chiefe Favourite and others with Boris Federowich Godonow, being then about him. He in his loose Gowne, Shirt and Linnen Hols, faints and falls backward. Great was the stirre and out-cry; one sends for Aquanilla, another to the Apotheke, for Vineger and Rose-water, with other things and to call the Physicians. Meane time he was strangled * and starko dead. Some shew of hope was made of his recovery to fill the out-cry.

Bodan Zielfoy and Boris (to whom the dead Emperour had bequeathed, as the first of foure Princes, to take charge of his Sonne and Kingdome, being Brother to the Successors Wife) goe out on the Terras accompanied with so many of the Nobility his familiar friends as was strange so suddenly to behold. They called out to the Captaines and Gunners to keepe their Guards strong, and the Gates lure with their Peeces and Matches light: wherevpon the Gates of the great Castle were presently shut with watch and ward. I offered my Selfe, my Men, Powder and Pistols, to attend the Prince Protector. Hee accepted mee among his Familiars and Seruants, passing by with a cheerefull countenance towards me, speaking aloud, Be faithfull and faint not Eremisica. The Metropolitans, Bishops, and Nobility flockt into the inner Castle, holding it a day of Iubilee for their redemption, pressing who could first, to the Booke and Crosse to sweare to the new Emperour Fedor Iuanowich. It was admirable what dispatch there was in fixe or seuen houres; The Treasury sealed vp, and new Officers added to the old, twelue thousand Gunners with their Captaines set for a Garrison about the Walls of the great Citie of Mosco. A Guard was giuen mee to keepe the English House. The Embassadour S. I. B. trembled, and expected houely nothing but death from the rage of the Nobilitie and people. His gates, windowes and Seruants were shut vp, his former plentifull allowance taken away. Boris and three others of the greatest Peeres ioyned assistance with him in the Emperours Will for the Government of the Kingdome (viz. Knez Adshyslarke, Knez Iuan Suikoy, and Mekia Romanowich) began to manage and dispose of all affaires: they proclaime the Emperour Fedor in his late Fathers stile throw all the Kingdome, take Inuentories of all the Treasures euery where, Gold, Silver, Jewels, which was infinite; make a furzy of all the Officers and Bookes of the Crowne Reuenues. New Treasurers, Counsellors, and Officers in all Courts of Iustice are made, new Lieutenants also, Captaines and Garisons in all places of charge and importance; most out of the Family of the Godonows, best to be trusted for attendance and seruice about the King and Queene, by which meanes the Protector became strong. He was with great obseruation magnified of all, and so behaued himselfe to the Princes, Nobility and people as he increaseth their loue. After some pause I was sent for, and asked what they should doe with S. I. B. his businesse being at an end, he was not now (said they) to berepent an Ambassadour. I answered, it stood with the honour of the King and Kingdome to dismissh him with honour, and safely according to the Law of Nations; otherwise the Queene whose Seruant hee was would take it ill, &c. They shooke their heads, reulst him, saying he had deferred death by the Law of Nations, practising so much mischief in a State. They would haue sent a message to him by me to prepare his present dispatch with some other terrible words of displeasure. I beought that I might not be the messenger, which somewhat offended them.

The Lord Protector tent for mee at Evening, whom I found playing at the Chess with Knez Iuan Gemikey a Prince of the blood, and taking mee aside said, I wish you to speake little little in defence of B. the Lords take it ill. Goe shew your selfe from me, and pacifie such and such. Your answer was well considered of, but many periwade reuenge vpon him for his ill behaviour. I hope, said I, your greatnesse and wisdom will pacifie their turles. I'do my best (he sayd) to make all well, and so tell him from me. I went to those Noblemen accordingly, which complainyng of their sufferings for his arrogance, willed me to be quiet in the buisnesse. Yet did not I leaue to deale effectually vnderhand for him, intreating he might be lent for and dispatched, being coop'd vp and kept close as a prisoner, and allowances taken from him.

- At last we went forth, attended but with a meane messenger, lead into a with-drawing
 10 Roome, where the Lords vsed him with no respect, charged him with heinous matter practis'd against the Crowne and States would not spend time to heare his answere, rayled on him (especially the two Shalkans great Officers, and some others who had suffered displeasure & beatings from the Emperour through his complaints) saying it were requisite to make him an example, cutting off his Crane-legges, and casting his withered carcase into the River (pointing out of the window) vnder him: but God hath now giuen vs a more mercifull Emperour, whose eyes he should see for Queene Elizabeth sake. But put off your Sword (which hee refused to doe, saying it was against his Order and Oath) they would enforce him else, comming into the presence of so peaceable a Prince, whose soule being clothed with mourning, was not prepared for the sight of Armes. And so hee put on patience, and was brought single to the presence of the Emperour, who by the mouth of his Chancelour commended him to Queene Elizabeth. Wherewith Sir J. B. was conuayed to his Lodgings, three dayes giuen for his departure out of Musco; perhaps hee should haue a Letter sent after him. He had now little meanes, lesse money, and none to supply him but my selfe, who made meanes to get him thirty Casts to conuay his and his Seruants Stuffe, and as many Post-horses; for he could be allowed none of the Emperours charge. I asked leaue of the Lord Protector to speake with him, and to bring him out of the City. Watch and ward was appointed in the streets that the people should not stirre at him. A meane Sinebow (scio) was appointed to conduct him, who vsed him with small humanity, and much against the height of his mind to endure. I with my Seruants and good friends accompanied him wel mounted out 30 of Musco, cauled my Paullion to be pitched by a Rivers side ten miles off, and with my provisions of Wines and Mead, tooke leaue of him and his company. He sadly prayd me to haue an eye an eare to his safety, doubting of some trechery & much perplexed with feare, as were the Gentlemen with him. I procured the Lord Protector to send his Letters after him to the Queene, & a Timber of Sables a gift from himselfe. When he came to Saint Nicolaus aboard the Ship, he vsed intemperate words to the Gentleman that conducted him, for him to tell the Emperour and his Counsell, cut his Letters and Sables in pieces, &c. The Nobility hearing hereof after he was gone laid much blame on me, especially the Shalkans.

- Now was the Government much altered hauing put on a new face, Iustice administred and every man liuing in peace. Mans capacite cannot comprehend how the infinite treasure 40 which the former Emperour left behind him could be gotten together, and much lesse how it should be so soone consumed, and this Kingdome, Pinnet and people so ruined. His standing Reuenues and my Collections out of their owne Records in my Description of the Russe Common-wealth may bee worth reading. The traffique attracting many Nations, Persians, Armenians, Turkes, Italians, Germans, French, Dutch, English, Polesians, which bring store of Gold and Silver Coyne, Precious Stones, Jewels, and Pearles, which are taken into his Treasury for the Commodities of that Countrey, by him taken from his Subjects to serue his turne at easie rates, leauing them their triffige besides for Cloth, Silkes, Veluets, Ounce-gold, Tissue, Cloth of Gold and Silver, Wines, Fruits, Spices, Sugar, Copper, Lead, Tinne, Paper, Indico, Brasil, Calicoes, &c. which that Countrey most needs: This 50 course of traffique and treasure with the surplusage of his Reuenues, amounting yeerely vnto 1300000. Markes sterling, besides all charges for his house and ordinary Salaries of his Souliers. This hath he continued to lay vp neere sixty yeeres, besides the great treasures left him by his Predecessors. neuer exhausted nor diminished. My selfe haue seene many thousand bags rotten, of old Silver and Gold Coyne, and Plate in great barred Chests, piled vp in many Vaults, Sellers, and Stone Houses, and many trustie Merchants continually weighing, numbring, and new bagging vp the same: so that I am confident (hauing conueried much and many yeeres with those Nations) that all the Kings in Christendome haue not like Riches and quantity of treasure.

- Now to adde some thing of his Acts, Conquests, and conditions. Hee conquered Caspian, Asracan, the Nagiers, and Cherou Tartars and many others of that kind inhabiting aboute 60 two thousand miles on both sides the Volga, Southward to the Caspian Sea. He freed himselfe from Tartarian homage. Hee conquered Poltorska, Smolen and many Townes, and Castles Castles seven hundred miles South-west from Musco into the Countries of Bela, Russia, Lithuania, &c. belonging to the Crowne of Poland: as much and as many Townes and Castles Eastward in Lithuania and the parts belonging to Sweethan and Poland, the Kingdome of Siberia also, bringing away the King (whom I saw in Musco) and the adjacent Countries Northward 1500. miles.

He reduced the Ambiguities and vncertayne Rules of their Lawes and pleadings into a more perspicuous and plaine forme of a written Law for every man to vnderstand and plead his owne cause without any Aduocate, and to challenge (vnder great penalty and mulct to the Crowne) iudgement without delay. He established and published one vniuerse confession of Faith, Doctrine and Discipline consonant to the three Symbols or Creeds; professing 10 the Religion of the Greeke Church, deriuing their antiquitie from their Apostle Saint Andrew, and their Patron Saint Nicolas: and in regard of later dissentions in doctrine and Ceremony in that Church, he hath acquitted the See of Musco from that Society, and the Synodals and Oblations * heretofore contributed to that Church, the Patriarch Ieremy resigning the Patriarchship of Constantinople to the Metropolitan of Musco. He vtterly disclaymes the doctrine of the Pope, holding it the most erroneous, maruelling that any Christian Prince would yeeld him any Secular authoritie; which hee caused his Clergie to declare to Fryer Antonius Possennus the Popes Nuncio at the Church doore at Prechibla. He hath built in his time fortie faire stone Churches richly adorned within, and the Turrets all gilded with fine pure Gold without. He hath built and dedicated aboue sixty Monasteries and Nunneries, and endowed them with Bels, Ornaments and mayntenance to pray for his Soule. He built a goodly steeple of hewne stone in the inner Castle of Musco, called Blansfennia, Cathedralis, with twenty great sweet sounding Bels in it, which streue to all the Cathedral Churches standing about it, ringing all together every Festiual day (which are many) and every midnight Prayers.

One deed of his Charity I may not omit. A great Famine followed the Pestilence of the better sort of people. The Townes, streets, & wayes were pestered with Rogues, idle Beggars, and counterfeite Cripples: nor could any riddance be made of them, Proclamation was made that they should relator to Slabida Alexandrisca, to receiue the Emperours great almes on such a day. Out of some thousands that came, seven hundred of the vilest and most counterfeite 30 Rogues were all knocked on the head, and cast into the great Lake for the fish to receiue the dote of their carcases, the rest were disperfed to Monasteries and Hospitals to be relieved.

His Castles & Colonies.

He built aboue 100. Castles in his time, in diuers parts of his Kingdome, and planted them with Ordenance and Garisons. He built 200. Townes in wait and dishabited places thorow his Kingdome to replenish those parts, being a mile or two miles in length called Tams, giuing every Inhabitant a portion of Land and Money, to keepe so many speedy Horfes for his vie and for Polts. He built a goodly strong stone Wal about the Cite of Musco, and planted it with Ordenance and Garisons.

His person described.
His buriall.

He was a goodly man of presence, well fauoured, of a high fore-head, and shrill voyce, a right Seythian, full of readie wit and wisdom, cruell and mercilesse: his owne experience 40 ruled State causes and affaires publike. Hee was sumptuously entombed in Michael Archangell Church, where his memory is still dreadfull, though guarded day and night, they which passe by or heare his name crossing and blessing themselves from his Resurrection againe.

The Emperesse Anna fifth wife to the late Emperour, with her young Sonne Charinich Demetrius, and their Family Nagais were confined to Onglets, to reside in that Castle at the Emperours pleasure with Royall allowance for their mayntenance. New Embassadors were cholen by Boris the Protector, such as he best affected, to illustrate his greatnesse, to bee sent from the new Emperour to all Kings and Princes his Allies. The Coronation was first solemnized, whereof I was an eye and care witness (as Master Hakhigis and Doctor Fletcher: 50 Do courses, in this and other Relations of that State and Common-wealth procured at my hands, declare) My selfe was nominated to bee sent to Queene Elizabeth. The substance of our Embassage was much alike to make knowne, that by the Prouidence of God Fedore Ioannewich was crowned and setled in the Imperiall Throne of his late Father Iuan Vasiluich of famous memory: who thought good out of his tender care of peace to make knowne to their Princely widowes, how desirous he was of their alliance and brotherly amity, promising all correspondence, trade and commerce with them and theirs. Letters also and Commissions to treat of such other matters as fell properly in question for the good of both sides.

Sir I. Horley sent Embassador from the Emperour to Elizabeth.

I was dispatched with extraordinary grace, termes and titles from the Emperour, but especially from the Protector in private and publike, and with Instructions and Commissions aparte. Having taken my leaue of the principall Princes and Officers I set forth well attended 60

ded and accommodated in the reputation of an Embassadour wherefore I came. My journey was over-land from Musca, the twentieth of August, sixe hundred miles to Volska, and thence to Dorp in Liefland, Perna, Libo, endon in Curland, and so to Riga chiefe Citie of that Pruvie: where my Commiſſion was to treat with Queene Magnus (the next heire to the Russian Crowne) ſhe being now in great diſtreſſe and hauing ſmall allowance iſſuing from the Crowne treaſure of Poland. She was kept in the Caſtle of Riga, where by leaue of the Cardinal Regamila very hardly obtained, I ſpake with her, found her dreſſing her daughters head, both of them in old Garments of cloth of Silver. I told her, her Brother (ſo Couſin Germans call) the Emperour Fedor had taken notice of the diſtreſſe wherein ſhe and her daughter liued, and deſired her returne into her native Countrey, there to hold her eſtate according to her birth. And the Lord Protector Boris Fedorowich with due remembrance of his ſeruiſe doth vow the performance of the ſame. I was interrupted and haſted away by the Lieutenant, and got leaue a ſecond time. Shee complained of her ſmall allowance not a thouſand Dollers a yeere, which I ſaid ſhe might remedy if ſhe pleaſed. Shee ſaid ſhe had no meanes to eſcape, the King and State minding to make uſe of her birth and bloud, & knowing their faſhions in Ruſſia, ſhe had ſmall hope there to be otherwiſe dealt with, then they uſe to doe with their Queene Widowes, which is to ſhut them vp in a Hellith Cloyſter, to which I preſerte death. I antwered, her caſe was different, and times had altered that courſe, none that hath a child being thereunto enforced. After other words and promiſe of meanes to effect her eſcape, within two moneths I left with her a hundred Hungarian Duckets, and your Grace (ſaid I) ſhall receive foure hundred more this day ſeven weekes or thereabout. Her Highneſſe receiued them very thankfully, and her daughter (then ten yeeres old) twenty more, and I tooke my leaue. The next day as I paſſed out of the Towne Gates, a Gentlewomanlike Mayden in her pleyed haire, preſented me a curious white wrought Handkerchiefe, in the corner whereof was a little Hoop-ring ſet with Rubies, but told mee not from whom. I hid out of the Cardinals iuriſdiction thorow Curland, Prussia, Meluin, Danzike; whence I ſent one of my Seruants to the Naue with my Letters, Handkerchiefe and Relation to the Emperour and Protector, all ſewed vp in his quilt doublet. He paſt ſo ſpeedily and ſafely, that this Queene and her daughter were ſent for, ſtole away very ſecretly, and poſſed with thorow Linania before ſhe was miſſing. The Lieutenant ſent diuers Horſemen after her but too late, and was therefore diſplaced. At her firſt coming (as I learned after my returne) ſhe was much eſteemed by the Empreſſe and Ladies, had her Officers, Lands and allowances appointed according to her ſtate; but not long after, ſhee and her daughter were diſpoſed into Maydes Monastery within two miles of Musca, among the reſt of the Queenes; whereupon the exclaymed that ſhe was betrayed, and that ſhee had giuen faith to me. But neyther could I be permitted to ſee her, or ſhee mee. This piece of Seruiſe was very acceptable, whereof I much repent me.

From Danzike I paſſed Caffubla, Pomorenia, Statine, Meckelburgh, Reſtok, Wiſmar (where I eſcaped death miraculoſly) Lubeck, where I had honourable enterraynement againe, and 40 from Hamborough arrived in England, had gracious acceſſe to the Queene at Richmond, her Maieſty profeſſing much ioy that a Subject of hers had attained to knowledge, truſt and abilitie for ſo weighty employment from ſo great a Prince. I after tranſlated the Letters, and Maſter Secretary read them to the Queene. I was well houſed, attended, provided, and feaſted by the Muſconie Company: was called againe to Greenwich, and deliuered to her Maieſty what I was to ſay, and what it pleaſed her to enquire of me. In fine theſe ſayd, well ſerue, we haue loſt a faire time and a great deale of treaſure that our Realme might very opportunely haue bene poſſeſſed of, harſhly cenſuring Bones his want of temperance, &c. Such was the Lord Treasuſers good husbandry answerable to Her Maieſties fugality, that though this buſineſſe had bene kept ten yeeres afoot, and the Emperour ſhould vpeld in hope, 50 yet all the charge of Ambaſſadors and Meſſengers were layd on the Merchants both for entertainments, and giſts giuen and ſent, of which the Queene bare the name and countenance, receiuing thence many and rich Preſents, for chat which at times coſt the Company 20000. pounds. The imputations and alperſions caſt on me by falſe ſuggeſtions and ſubornations of Fincha hang-by of Sir Ierome Bones, who firſt faltered, and after the other being remoued out of preſence, confeſſed that he was ſet on by him; I omit, for repaying the courteſie in re-leaſing him when he had bene taken as a Spie, &c.

With much helpe of friends Sir Francis Waſſingbam and Sir George Barnes, prouiſion was made of Lions, Bulls, Dogs, gilt Halberds, Piſtols, Peeces, curious Armour, Wyues, Druges of all ſorts, Organs, Virginals, Muſicians, Scarlets, Pearles, curious Plate and other things of 62 good value according to my Commiſſions. I tooke my leaue of the Queene, receiued her Highneſſe Letters to the Emperour, and Protector with Letters Patents of grace and title for my paſſage with many good words and gracious promiſes, Inſtructions alſo from the Lords

One was committed to the Marſhall, the other forbidden her Maieſties preſence.

Lords and the Company, with some recompence for fauour already done for them in the Emperours Court.

I departed well accommodated in company of tenne good ships, arriued at Saint Nicolas, poited twelue hundred miles to the Musco, came to the Lord Protector, now Ruled Prince of the Prouince of Vaga, who receiued me gladly; sends for me againe the next day, tells me of many strange alterations since I had gone from thence; praëtises of the Mother of Demetrius and that Family, discontents twixt him and his ioynt Commissioners for the Government by the Emperours will. (Hee was now loth to haue any Competitor) you shall heere much said he, beleeue little more then I tell you. On the other side I heard much discontent of the Nobility, dissembling, working on the aduantage, &c. I was brought before the Emperour, the Council sitting in State, and deliuered the accounts of my employment (as did other his Embassadors) with the Queenes Letters. Commandement was giuen to a Gentleman with fifty Huntsmen to attend the speedy bringing vp of the Presents. I had commendation for the seruice done about Queene Magnus.

Boris his bloudy successor to the Throne.

Boris his bloudy the chiefe Favourite to the old Emperour, was now sent to a remote Town and Castle called Cafan in displeasure, as a man feared to sow discontent in the Nobility. Peter Gellanus chiefe Treasurer to the old Emperour and pemptory against Boris, was likewise sent away vnder the conduct of Iuan Voicous a Favourite of the Protector, and on the way to Musco was dispatched of his life. Kneaz Iuan Sufloy a prime Prince of the blood, one in commission for the Government, was commanded to depart the Court and City of Musco to his owne repose, surprised with a Coronels Guard, and not farre off the City was smothered in a Cottage with wet hay and stubble set on fire. Thus were the chiefe blockes removed out of the Godonoues way: many more were quattered, and by degrees had the like measure.

I was sorry to see in what hatred the Protector grew with the people. He tooke me out with him at the Posterne with small attendance besides his Falconers to see his Gentilcons flye at the Craar, Herne, and Swanne (Pricely pastimes for their hardy Hawkes, not caring for their killing, hauing such choyse) but a beggerly Fryer wished him to hast home speedily, all were not his friends. Some five hundred horse, young Nobles and Courtiers, were coming to meet the Protector for honour, to attend him as was said to the Citie. His meaning was that none should know of his going out. He followed the Fryers aduice, ventured the Ford a secret way, and was at the Castle gate before that company could come about. I saw him perplexed and glad that he had recovered the Palace: where Bishops, Dukes, Gentlemen and other Suters attended him, and could not at other times come in his sight in three or foure dayes together, he passing by a priuy way. I prayed him to looke backe (the rather because they should not enuy my palling with him) to shew himselfe on the Terra. He cast a displeasing countenance on mee, yet stayed and went towards them, saluted many and tooke their Petitions, great acclamations were made, God saue Boris Federowich his health. He told them, he would present their Petitions to the Emperour. They answered; Thou most Noble Lord art King, say thou the word and it is done. I recite this because I perceived his liking and ay me at the Crowne.

Horley.

My Presents were now come: the day appointed that I must againe appeare before the Emperour from her Maiesty, with a Gentleman of good esteeme, and was as well mounted as he, attended with twenty men in faire Lineries; my selfe attyred after their fashion, stayed in a withdrawing Room till the Emperour and Emperesse had viewed out of the Palace windowes the Bull, Dogges and Lions: a goodly white Bull all spotted with naturall black dapples, his gorge hanging downe to his knees, washed with Soper and flecked ouer, with a greene velvet Collar studded, and a red Rope, made to kneele before the Emperour and Emperesse, and standing vp looked fiercely on euery side appearing some other strange beasty which they call Brensk: twelue goodly mastie Dogges with Roles and Collars in like fashion led by twelue men, two faire Lions brought forth of their Cages drawne on Sleds; &c. The Emperour being set in his Chaire of State, I was sent for in, my men carrying thie Presents in their hands, most pieces of curious Plate. I deliuered my Speech; the Emperour bid little, shewed good countenance, and the Chancellor whispering in his eare, stood vp, put off his Cap, and said he was glad to heare that his louing Sister Queen Elizabeth was in good health, and therewith I was dismissed in manner as I came. The particulars of the Presents were deliuered in a Schedule to the Lord Treasurer. These followed me Iuan Shamadanoo a Kinsman of the Lord Protector with a hundred and fifty dishes of all sorts of meates for my Dinner from the Emperour, Drinckes, Bread and Spice, sent by one hundred and fifty Gentlemen thorow the streets to my Lodging. I presented the chiefe a cloth of Scarlet garment, and rewarded each of the others. The next day my friends, their Priests, Officers, &c. came (as the manner is) to make merry with that cheere.

The

The Protector spent a whole day in viewing the Prouisions sent him, hee and the Em-presse his Sister liking all, admiring nothing more then the Organs and Virginals; neuer hauing seene or heard the like before. Ready money was sent 4500. pounds, and my choyce of one of three Horses sent by the Maister of his Horse, esteemed worth 300. Markes. Hee sent me by another three thousand pounds in fine Silver Coyne of his free gift, and earnest of his fauour. I was continually remembred with other gifts in bountifull meatur, so that Townes, Monasteries, Officers, Merchants, Natiue and Forreigne made vse of my fauour to procure Freedomes and Exemptions. The Emperour (I might say the Lord Protector) being possessed of so great a Treasure, knew not how to make vse thereof to illustrate his fame. The 10 Persian and Georgian both invaded by the Turke, were Surors for ayde. Hee lent the Persian 200000. pounds for his yeeres gratis, and halfe so much to the Georgian King. Hereupon grew a quarrell betwixt the Turke and the Moscouite. The Protector ambitious of greater Rule, or Title rather, sent Knez Pheodor Forrester in Embassage to the King of Denmarke, about a Match with his Daughter, and Hartique Han, the Kings third Sonne; little was resolved till foure yeeres after. Alphonse, a Moslem Secretary of State was sent to Maxi- milian the Emperour, with great and rich Presents, and offer of ayde against the Turke in Hungary, if he would procure passage for an Army thorow Poland of King Stephen, which the Emperour could not effect, and in hiew thereof, desiring by his Embassadors sent into Russia the lone of 300000. Rials, such hostage was desired for assurance that the effect was 20 to frustrate and proued ridiculous and vnfortunate, the Turke setting the Crimme on the Russe with a huge Army, which cost the Moscouite infinite charge and losse of men. The Pole and Swethen combined also & recovered their ancient Territories, the Russe at that time being employ'd in new Conquests in Siberia, whence Chyiscaloth the Emperour with his Mother and best Murders were brought to the Musca, where they liued with better may nenance then in their owne Country. I saw the King there doe many feats of actiuity on Horseback and Foot. He told me of men of like complexion to me in his Country, taken with a Ship two yeeres before, intending to passe vp the Ob to seeke Cathay.

The discontented Nobility now practised against the Protector's greatnesse, which hee durst not then take notice of. Soone after a practise was discovered to poison the young 30 Prince Demetrius, his Mother and all that Family guarded in Ougless. Also Mekita Roman- uich the Emperours only Vnkle, trusted in the third place for the gouernment in the old Emperours Will with Boris, who could induce no Competitor, (two prime Princes made away) was bewitched, his speech taken suddenly from him. I came to visit him, hee lent pen to paper and writ that hee was bewitched, and by whom, and should not lue. The Protector told me also that Mekita Romanuich was not like to disturbe him long. He dyed soone after, and the silly Emperour his Nephew fearing his turne next, desired he might be shorne a Fryer.

That Nobleman left three Sonnes of great hope, Fedor the eldest (for whom I had made aswell as I could a kind of Latine Grammer in the Sclauonian Tongue and Letters. He was now enforced to marry, and had a Sonne. The Protector being iealous of him, hee also not 40 long after his Fathers death was made dead to the World and shorne a Fryer, made Archbishop of Koissna. His next Brother of no lesse generous spirit, not able to dissemble his dis-contents longer, tooke opportunitie to stab the Protector, though not so dangerously as hee intended, and escaped into Poland where hee and Bodan Besscy, and others at home practised the vicer ruine of Boris and all his Family. Meane while I procured many Priuiledges for the English Merchants with Releases, Payments, Ratifications, &c. The Protector iealous and fearfull, sends Treasure, Silver and Gold Coyne to Solauitzca Monastery on the Sea side neere the Dawgh and Swethen Confinnes, that it might be ready (as himselfe told me) to transport into England, holding that his surest refuge in case of necessity. It was of infinite value, and not pertayning to the Crowne. I was now suspected by the discontented Nobility who shewed me not wonted countenance, which caused mee to haste away hauing spee-50 ded my businesse and Instructions from the Counsell and Merchants.

Rich Presents were sent from the Emperour for the Queene, and Boris sent with secret messages a curious Robe for me of Cloth of Silver wrought without seame made in Persia, with a faire embroydered Tese, wrought Handkerchiefs, Shirts, Towels, &c. brought by his neere Kinsman. I intreated two fauours for a farewell, the freedom of the Lithonian men, women and children, sent before to Nouograd in displeasure: a Catalogue of their names were taken, and they lued by the Letter of Irenia the Emperesse: the other was the liberty of a Noblemans Sonnes of Gilderland. Here Sacarius Gilsenberg, which neyther the King of 62 Denmarke, nor States Letters could before procure; which his Mother well recompensed.
 After rich allowance by the way, honourably attended, and ample prouisions added at Saint Nicolaus, I was shipped in the Centurion, and after five weekes arrived in England, at Rich- ledges with Golden Spread-eagle Scales at them, and account of my whole employment to her good satisfaction and approbation of me. Shee observed the Characters by the amittie they had with the Greeke, and asked if they had not such and such significations, said shee could quickly learne it, and bade my Lord of Ess learne it. When the Ships with the Presents were comne, I had a second audience, her Maieitie much liking to handle the Presents.

After this, I weary of Court Holy-water, was willing to retire my selfe to a private life, but by reason of my skill in those Languages, a more dangerous employment was committed to me. Frederike King of Denmarke had imbarqued the English Merchants Ships in the Sound about Customes, and they sued to the Queene for redresse: likewise diuers in Poland which there had obtained Priuiledges and Protection, had refused to pay Debts to the English Merchants, &c. I was appointed to take Colles in the way, where the Imperiall Dyets was appointed thither to accompany Sir Horatio Palauino the Queenes Embassadour, and Musieur de Freze, the French Kings Embassadour: and thence to the Dane and the Pole. I came to Copenhagen, had access to the King of Denmarke, delivered the Queenes Letters; and after had audience, and propounded what was giuen me in Commission.

The King of Denmarke answered with a sad countenance, Our Sister the Queenes Maieitie of England requires at our hands too great a lisse: wee are possessed of forty thousand pounds, and twenty tall Ships forfeited to our Crowne by the treachery and falshood of her Subiects, &c. But in fine, he made his minde knowne to the Queene by his Letters, requiring an exchange of certayne Ships of the Easterlings * embarked in England, for the freedom of the English Ships and goods. This was beyond my Commission to conclude. And I hast away hauing dined with the King, who bestowed on mee a Gold Chaine. I returned to Lubek, and thence to Danzik, where Master Barker Deputy and other substantiall Merchants, * invited my way by Meluin, where they resided. But I tooke my way by Torne, and came to Warsawia, where Sigismundus King of Poland then held his Court, and after some digests, at last obtained the Merchants Suite against diuers Debtors which had their sought protection. The great Chancellor Zamoisfey, the principall Statesman of that Kingdome lent vnto mee a friendly message, offering also for my solace his Hounds, Hawkes, or any other pastimes for recreation. I was invited and dined with the King, received his Letters Patents, and Dismission, and after feasted by the Lord High Chamberlaine Pan Lucas Obrowski, I also had sight of Queene Anne daughter to Sigismund the Third, and Wife to King Stephen Batore: but priuately, hauing to that end put on one of my Seruants Lincies, which norwithstandiag, I was discovered and had conference with the Queene, who seemed much to magnifie Queene Marie, and no lesse disaffected to Queene Elizabeth for the death of Storie, Campion, &c. which I sayd had bene vnnaturall Subiects, and practisers of Rebellion. Shee then objected, But how could she spill the blood of the Lords Anoynted, a better Queene, &c. which I answered was done by the Parliament, without her Royall consent. Shee shooke her head with dislike, and would haue replied, had not Possuimus the Popes Legate, as they termed him (whose skirts I had before pressed in Muscow, being there the Popes Nuncio) comne in: whereupon I with a Glasse of Hungarian Wine (which I refused till he had taken the same into her owne hand) was dismissed.

On that Evening in which I departed from Warsawia, I passed ouer a Riuer, by the side whereof there lay a dead Serpent (like a Crocodile with foure feet, hard scales, and in length about six or seven foot) which my men brake with Boate-spearres, the stench whereof so poysoned me; that I lay sicke many dayes in the next Village. When I came to Vilna the chiefe Citie in Lithuania, I presented my selfe and my Letters Patents from the Queene, which declared my employment, vnto the Great Duke Ragani, a powerfull Prince and Religious Protestant. Hee gaue me great respect and sayd, Though I had nothing to say to him from that Renowned Queene of England, the Myrrour of all the Queenes that euer reigned, yee he did so much honour and admire her excellent vertues and graces, that he would also hold me in the reputation of her Maiesties Ambassadour: and that it was in his Supreme power and pleasure to allow or not allow of the King his Letters Patents for my passage thorow that great Principallitie, his Inheritance, and differing from the Crowns of Poland. That his Subiects might thinke I negotiated with him, heooke me with him to his Church, heard Diuine Service, Psalmes sung, and a Sermon, the Sacrament also was administered as in the Reformed Churches; whereat his Brother Cardinall Ragani did murmur.

His Highnesse invited me to Dinner, honoured with fifty Halbardiers thorow the Citie, Gunners placed, and five hundred Gentlemen (his Guard) to bring me to his Palace; where himselfe accompanied with many young Noblemen receiued me vpon the Terras, and then brought me into a very large Roome, where were Organs with singing. A long Table was set with Lords and Ladies, himselfe vnder a Cloth of State, and I was placed before him in the middle of the Table, With sound of Trumpets and Kettle Drummes the first Service was brought in, and after Prayer Cyd by his Almoner, I-fers and Poets discourf merrily, Instruments of lowd, and other of lower Mulicke were added: twenty Dwarfes* men and women attired curiously, made sweet harmony with mournfull Pipes and Songs, vjing alfo Dauids Tymbrels and Aarons Bels, as they called them, and danced, deviding themlfelves, man and woman, hand in hand. It were tedious to relate all the particulars. I paffed by Smolenske to Mufco 1300. miles from Vilna. My entertaynment at Vilna, and negotiating with the King of Poland, now made me fufpected to the Ruffian Nobility. The Bifhop of Sufdals Houfe was appointed for my lodging, where I was guarded and attended by meane Gentlemen; the pretence was, left I fhould haue conference with the Polish Embaffadour. Demetrius flait

ther poifoned.

I perceiued many of my good Friends were gone and made away: had warning of many Articles framed againft me, which againft their wils being divulged, I answered fo as I gained reputation thereby. Yet the water which was daily brought mee from the Riuer was poifoned, as alfo my drinke, Herbs and Muske Melons fent to my Houfe; my Landrells was hired likewife to poifon me, which he confefled with the circumftances, I had a Seruant, a Lord Sonne of Danzick, which brake out with Blaynes and efcafed narrowly: my Cooke and Butler both dyed of poifon. I writ to the Lord Protector hereof, but received no anfwere. I muft remone to Towne till the Polish Embaffadour was gone, and the third night after I

30 came to this Towne, I commended my Soule to God, expecting death. One rapped at my gate at midnight, and I with my Seruants well appointed came to enquire the caufe. Alphonafus Nagy Brother to the Emperour (Mother of Demetrius) which were placed at On-glets five and twenty miles off, cryed out and fayd, O sweet Yarema the Chorowich Demetrius is dead, his throat was cut about the fixt houre by the Deaks Sonne one of his Pages: confefled vpon the Racke, by Boris his fetting on: and the Emperrefe poifoned, and vpon point of death, her haire, nayles and skinne fall off; helpe, helpe with fome good thing for the paffion of God. This outcry did not a little astonifh me, till I faw his face ouer the wall. I durft not open my gates, fayd I had nothing worth the fending, yet gaue a little Viall of Balfam (which Queene Elizabeth had giuen me as an Antidote againft Poifons) giuen her by 40 Sir F. Dr.) with a box of Venioe Treacle. Some three dayes before the Suburbs of Mufco, were fet on fire, and 12000. houfes burned, Boris his guard had the fpoyle. It was giuen out that Demetrius his Mother, her Brother and that Family of the Nagies had praifed to kill the Emperour and Protector, and to burne the whole Cite of Mufco. Five desperate Soldiery were labored to indure the Racke, and confefled there that they were the men which fhould doe this exploit. This was publifhed to make the name of Demetrius hateful to the people with that whole Family. The Bifhop of Ornefca, was fent accompanied with five hundred Gunnes; and diuers Nobles and Gentlemen to fee Demetrius buried vnder the high Altar of Saint Iohns in On-glets in On-glets Cattle. Little did Boris thinke that his Ghoft fhould after root out him and his Family. The ficke poifoned Emperrefe was pre- fently thorne a Nunne: all her Allies, her Brother, Vncle; Friends and Officers difperfed in difpleafure to diuers fecret Dens, not to haue communie with men, or for the light.

50 I was hafted away alfo. I had Letters from Boris, he could not doe as he would, but time would worke me more grace, as amply as euer. If I wanted money or prouifion hee would impart of his owne. Some fecrets he had committed to mee, which now made a dangerous impoffion in his memory. I arriued in England; deliuered my Letters to the Queene, which I found much more fauourable then I expected: the Company of Merchants payd me 1845. pounds in ready money for my goods in their hands; a generall releafe paff on both fides, &c. I furnifhed Maffet Hakney and Doctor Flitcher with Intelligences &c.

62 and extinguifhed in blood, the Emperour foone following: as I received by Letters from and thence from my worthy friends, and haue fince had conference with two Embaffadours, and a Fryer of good intelligence. Boris had made away moft of the chiefe and ancient Nobility, and and now remooued the Emperour Theodor, placed his Sister the Emperesse in a Monastery, caueith the Patriarches, Metropolitans, Bishops, and new sprung Nobility, his Officers, Merchants, and other his owne creatures to petition him to take the Crowne vpon him. He was idollously inaugurated accordingly. Hee was of comely person, well fauoured, affable, easie and apt to ill counsell, but dangerous in the end to the gauer, of good capacity and ready wit, about forty six yeeres of age; much affected to Necromancie, made shew of great Deuotion and Religion, not Learned, of a sudden apprehension, very precipitate, subtle, a naturall good Oratour, reuengefull, not much giuen to luxury, temperate in dyet, Heroicall in outward shew, one which gaue great entertaynement to forreigne Embassadors, sent rich Presents to forreigne Kings to illustrate his owne greatnesse. Hee now desired league by his Embassadors sent with Letters and Presents to the Emperour, Pole, Dane & Swethen, which the three last refused but vpon conditions to his losse. To them adhered those which loued him not, and procured his ruine. Hee continued the same course of government, but made shew of more security and liberty to the Subiect. Still fearing his owne safety and continuance, he desired to marrie his Daughter with Hartique Hans the King of Denmarke third Sonne. Conditions were agreed on: time appoynted for the Marriage, but this valorous hopefull Prince on that day whereon he should haue bene married dyed in the Ambase. Not long after he was put to extreame exigents by the Cripple, the Pole and Swethen, all invading the neereit Confinnes.

Boris his ruine,

Badan Belsky the old Emperours Minion (vpon whom hee serued Boris his trusty turne, 30 making him away, and so opening a way to that which Boris aymed at, none being also better able to bring in subiection the aduerse Nobilitie and others) was rewarded with such recompence as usually followeth such treacherous Instruments. Boris and the Emperesse fearing his subtle wit, found occasions and placed him remote with his Confederates, sure as they thought. But he in the time of his greatnesse hauing conuayed infinite Treasure, now vseth it to reuenge, and ioyning with many discontented Nobles, stirres vp the King and Palatines of Poland with the power of Lithuania, and with a meane Army hoping of assistance in Russia, gaue out that they brought the true Demetrius Sonne to Iuan Vasilowich. Boris wants courage to fight, nor withstanding sufficient preparations: hee, his Wife, Sonne and Daughter tooke payson whereof three presently dyed, the Sonne liued to bee proclaymed 30 but quickly dyed.

feit Demetrius

And now the Counterfeit Demetrius was admitted and crowned, Sonne to a Priest, sometimes carried Agnasia to sell about the Country: Married the Palatines Daughter, and permitting the Poles to domineere ouer the Russe Nobility, and to set their courses of Religion and Justice out of ioynt, hauing rooted out Boris his faction and Family, &c. The Russes conspire and kill Demetrius, take him out of his bed, dragge him on the Terras: the Gunners and Souldiers thrust their Knives in his body, hacke, hew and mangle his head, body, and legs, carry it to the Market place, shew it for three dayes about the City, the people cursing him, and the Traytors that brought him. The Palatine & his Daughters were conuayed away.

Susky is crowned and captiued by the Poles.

A new Election was made, two propounded Knez Iuan Mikhelaisky and Knez Vasily Petrovich Susky: this was shosen and crowned: but summoned as a Vassall by a Herald of Armes to yeld obedience to the Crowne of Poland. The Pole strikes the Iron whiles it is hote hauing gotten good footing amongst them, invades Russia, repellesse the Muscovites, takes Susky and diuers Nobles which are carried Captiues to Vilna, chiefe Citie of Lithuania. Nowe the Poles tyrannise ouer the Russe more then before, seize on their goods, money, and best things which they conuay into Poland and Lithuania. But those hidden by Iuan Vasilowich and Boris in secret places, doubtlelesse remayne undiscovered, by reason the parties which had bene therein employed were still made away. The Russe submits to the Pole, desires Stanislau his Sonne to lue and Reigne ouer and amongst them: but that King and State would not herein trust them with their hope of Succellion; nor doe them so much honour, but rule by their Presidents, &c. The Luganie, Nagoe, and Cherem Tartars long seiled in obedience to the Russe, and best vsed by them, now straitened of their wonted Salaries and vsage, hate the Pole, take armes in great numbers, robbed, spoyled, killed & carried away many of them with their rich booties before, gotten: the Russe Nobilitie tooke heart againe and bethinke them of another Emperour. The Sonne of the Archbishop of Rostov: (oppe Patriarch of Moscow, Sonne to Makha Romanowich before mentioned) borne before hee was made a Bishop, Michael Fedorowich is elected and crowned by generall consent of all Estates, God send him long to Reigne with better successe then his Predecessors.

five 4 Fauums worth of Rice, transported from thence into other parts of India, and sold againe to good advantage, if the gaires be good, that ariseth from the sale of Soules.

In this Kingdome lyeth the Towne of Saint Thome, inhabited and governed by Portugals, who notwithstanding must acknowledge some dependency from the Naicke that holds that part of the Country, of whom (after some siege endured by them) they were enforced, about three yeeres since to buy their peace with a summe of money: for their Towne is onely fortified towards the Sea, but to Landwards, no otherwise then with their houses, which are built strong, close, and defensible.

Not farre from Saint Thome lyeth Palecat, a badde Neighbour to the Portugall, since the Dutch possessed their Cattle in that place, for with shipping great and smal, which they constantly kept vpon that Coast, they so scowre it, that a Portugall Frigate stirre not, but in the confidence of her better sayling, nor dares anchor before the Towne, for feare of being fetcht from thence, but if they escape at Sea, either vntime, or by their speed, they presently vnlade, haling their Ships on shoare close vnder the wall, from whence it followeth, the trade of that place is so much decayed, that the Portugall Inhabitants are become much impoverished, wherein, it is worth the obseruation, to consider their malice punished in the effect of it: for the Hollanders (after some experience of the trade in India, finding Commodities of Saint Thome, and that Coast, to be very vendible and to good profit, in the Molucces, Banda, Amboyna, Iaua, Sumatra, and other those Easterne parts) procured from the last King of Bisnagar, free Commerce in his Country, and to that purpose, seled at first a Factory in Palecat, where they left fixe or seuen Hollanders to negotiate their Affaires: but the Portugals of Saint Thome, not brooking any Christian Corriall so neere them, in the same course of trade, came downe with their whole power of Frigates, and landing at Palecat, they assaulted the Dutch Houfe, which was for a time resolutely defended, vntill some being slaine, the rest yielded after promise of life and good quarter, but were carried Prisoners to Saint Thome, from whence with much difficulty some escaped, and amongst them the chiefe Factor from whose Relation I infer this Discourse.

The King (vpon knowledge of this assault, and the Hollanders instant Suite to bee better secured) permitted them to build a Fort, conditionally that the one halfe of the Souldiers should be of his Subjects, which tooke place, and the Fort being finished, it was deuided, and halued betwixt the Gentiles and Hollanders: vntill many differences arising, amongst so different Cohabitants, the King called away his people, leauing the Fort wholly in the Dutch power, which since they have enlarged and strengthened, and now call it Guelaren: where in since the Treaty of 1619, our Nation for the moyette of an oppressed trade, haue borne the vttermost charge of halfe the Garrison, without participation of such benefits as equity ought to eniue, but my affection to that Nation, and the condition of the times, forbids me to aggravate, or adde, to our iust quarrell, for their vniust and euell proceedings in Amboyna.

So that now the Portugals in place of Neighbouring Merchants whom they disturbed, are galled with a Garrison of profest Enemies whom they cannot remoue, for their owne power is not sufficient, and assistance from the Vice-roy they shall not haue, if their present ruines were in question, because they neither assist in person or contribution, the general Affaires of India, but are with their comforts the Portugals inhabiting Bengala, accounted Leuantados del Rey) exempted from their Princes protection.

Onely they haue to their power, incensed some of the Naickes against the Hollanders, who about foure yeates since with fixe thousand men besieged Palecat, but at such distance, and with so little advantage, that an easie composition rayled the siege, and little of that guen by the Hollanders, but from the Natives subsisting vnder their protection ouer whom they pretend no Souerainetie, exact no Duties, nor prescribe no Lawes: contenting themselves in confronting the Portugall, and negotiating their Affaires of Merchandizing.

In fixteene degrees and a halfe lyeth Mufulipatnam, the chiefe Port of the Kingdome of Golebonda, where the Right Worthipfull East Indian Company haue their Agent, and several Factories in that place and Petapoley: first protected and settled by Peter Willemfon Floris, and Lucas Anthonijon, who in the employment of English Aduenturers, arrived there about thirteene yeares since in the Globe of London: since which time, Commerce hath bene continued in those parts, and amongst other their Seruants, my selfe receiued their employment, and from almost five yeares residence in that place, (at the request of the Authour of this laborious Volume) am emboldened to publish such remarkable things as haue fallen within the compass of my obseruation.

It is a small Towne, but populous, vnwalled, ill built, and worse situated, within all the Spring are brackish, and without ouer-flowed with eury high Sea for almost halfe a mile about.

hour. It was first a poore Fisher Towne, from whence it tooke the name it yet retaynes, afterwards the conueniencie of the Road, made it a fir Residence for Merchants, and so continueth (with increase of Trade) since our, and the Dutch Nation frequented this Coast.

The Climate is very healthfull, and the yeere deuided in their account into three different seasons, whereof March, Aprill, May, and Iune they call the hote season; and not without good cause; for the Sunne being returned into their Hemisphere, doth not alone scorch the Earth with his piercing beames, but even the winde which should alswage his fury, adds greater fire, and yeerly about mid May with a strong Westerly gale, brings off the Land a sensible heat; as when a houle is on fire, such as are neere to Leeward can hardly endure; and Nouember, December, Ianuary, and February, they account their cooler times, and are so indeed compared to the former, yet as hote as it here in England in May.

The Earth in some places affords two Croppes of Rice in a yeere, rarely three Croppes, and in most places but one, yet there with very great increase: they sowe other sorts of Pulse, different from ours, and farre vp into the Countrey they haue good Wheate, but not much, for it is little eaten of the Gentiles: Rootes they haue of most sorts which we haue heere, and good store of Potatoes, yet but few Heerbs or Flowres, which defet they supply in their Betele, whose frequent vse amongst them, many haue already discouried. In brieft, it is a very fruitfull Countrey, and occasioned by many of the Inhabitants abstinence from any thing that hath life: all kind of victuall are very cheape and plentifull, as eight Hens for twelve pence, a Goate or Sheepe for ten pence, 40 and for eightene pence or two shillings a very good Hogge, the hiza of fish, and all other provisions in the Towne, but in the Countrey much better cheape, to

All trees are continually greene; Fruitfull.

This Kingdome (as most others in India) receiueith its denomination from the chiefe City or Residence of the King, called by the Natives Golchonda, by the Moors and Persians Hidaraband, distant from Musulipatnam, eight and twentie Gentie leagues, every league contayning nine English miles: and in the common course of trauel ten dayes journey. A Citie that for sweetnesse of ayre, conueniencie of water, and fertility of soyle, is accounted the best situated in India, not to speake of the Kings Palace, which for bignesse and sumptuousnesse, in the iudgement of such as haue travelled India, exceedeth all belonging to the Mogoll or any other Prince: it being twelve miles in circumference, built all of stone, and within the most eminent places, garnished with masse Gold; in such things as we commonly vse Iron, as in barres of Windowes, bolts, and such like, and in all other points fitted to the Majesty of forgeat a King, who in Elephants and Jewels is accounted one of the richest Princes of India.

Golchonda described.

He is by Religion a Mahumetan, descended from Persian Ancestors, and retayneth their opinions, which differing in many points from the Turkes, are distinguished in their Sects by termes of Saaw, and Sunner, and hath bene at large, (and truly to my knowledge) particularized in your Pilgrimage, whereunto I onely adde in confirmation of their mutuall hatred, what in conference I receiued from a Mogoll, one of Mahomets owne Tribe; it wee may beleue his owne Heraldry, who openly professed hee could not finde in his heart 62 to pray for a Sunnee, for in his Opinion a Christian might as easily bee saved as a Chari. King's title, This King (as all other his Predecessors) retains the title of Cornubia, the original whereof I remember to have read in Eusebius. He married (during my being in his Country) the daughter of Adelpha, King of Vizapora, and hath besides her three other Wives; and at least 1000 Concubines of singular honour and state amongst them to have many women, and one of the strangest things to them I could relate, and in their opinions lamentable; that his excellent Majesty our Gracious Sovereign, should have three Kingdomes and but one Wife.

Three Decen Kings or emy to the Mogul King's Revenue, The Cornubia, Adelpha, and Negam Sha oppose the Mogul in a perpetual league of mutual defence, yet so as they yearly Presents proue their best weapons, chusing rather to buy peace then to hazard the event of war against so mighty an Enemy.

Indian Monarchie, His Revenues are reported to bee five and twenty Lackes of Pagodes, a Lacke being an 10 200000, and a Pagode equall in weight and alloy to a French Crowne; and worth there seven thillings six pence sterling; which huge Treasure ariseth from the large extent of his Dominions, his Subjects being all his Tenants, and at a rackt Rent: for this King as all others in India, is the only Free-holder of the whole Countrey, which being divided into great governments, as our Shires; those againe into lesser ones as our Hundreds; and those into Villages: the Government is farmed immediately from the King by some eminent man; who to other inferiours farmeth out the lesser ones; and they againe to the Countrey people at such excessive rates, that it is most lamentable to consider, what toyle and miserie the wretched soules endure: For if they fall short of any part of their Rent, what their Estates cannot satisfie; their bodies must, so it sometimes happens, they are beaten to death, or abetting themselves, their Wives, Children, Fathers, Brothers, and all their Kindred are engaged in the debt, and must Janishe or suffer. And sometimes it happeneth, that the Principall sayling with the King, receives from him the like punishment, as it befell to one Basell Rao (Gouverneur at Mulapattanam, since the English Traded thither) who (for defect of full payment) was beaten with Canes vpon the backe, seet, and belly, vntill hee dyed. Yet hold they not these their Governments by Lease; for yearly in July all are expell'd in sale vnto him that biddest most; from whence it happeneth, that every Gouverneur (during his time) exacts by Tolles taken in the way, and other Oppressions, whatsoever they can possibly extort from the poorer Inhabitants, using what violence within their governments they shall thinke fitt: for in them (during their time) they assigne as petty Kings, not much unlike the Bahanes 30 vnder the Turkish Monarchie.

Castles, 66; Captains or Gouverners, These are (in the Coast and heart of this Kingdome) sixtie six severall Forts or Castles, all of them commanded by Br Nickes, and guarded by Gentiles Souldiers of the Countrey; vnto which Souldiery these is allowed but foure shillings the month, and that also ill pay'd: they are for the most part situated vpon very high Rocks, or Hills, vnaccessible but by one onely way; three of which I haue seene, viz; Cundapoly, Cundanera, and Bellem Cunda (Cunda in that Language signifying a Hill) and in the Towne of Cundapoly, (having occasion to visite the Gouverneur) I was so curious as to require the sight of the Castle, who replyed; that euen himselfe although the Gouverneur of that part of the Countrey, could not be permitted to enterke without the Kings Firman with much trouble procured: from whom I vnderstood that this Castle being of great circuit was divided into sixe severall Forts, one commanding another according to their situation; which being furnished with great ponds of water, store of victuals, as well fruit as others, and large fields to plant Rice in, lodged in their continual 40 40 by 120000 Souldiers; thus much his Relation. What I could see (which was enough to hide a great part of the Hill) was a huge Mountaine, which being apart by nature, had insinuatd Art to make that treate for the King of this Countrey, if a batell lesse or other aduers fortune, forced them to that extremity. For besides the Mountaine it selfe (steep in most places) is walled with a handsome seeming stone wall, with Bulwerkes and Bartlements, according to the ancient Order of fortification; whereto having but one way that admits 50 50 no thought impregnable; not to bee vndermined but by treacherie, skild with our wings, or betrayed but by Famine. And betwixt this Castle and Cundanera, (which is at least five and sixtie English miles) there is a slightly correspondence held by the winged other Torchers, lighting them vp sometimes more, sometimes lesse, according to the order continued betwixt them.

Intelligence by Torchers, Red upon a heart signifieth no mans confidence is pressed with Ceremony or Obedience, onely the Kings Religion is in question; in the authority and quality of the Professors not in substance of Soules; for the Anciene Naturals of the Countrey commonly called Gentiles, aske at least Ten times the usual very great proportion; but in the ceremony of two soules, as I haue formerly mentioned, in they only which are teamed 60 60 with the Kings Religion, the Gentiles make the order of their Religion; the setting down no offence in these Opinions; for Partizes I haue told their Ceremonies and Differences, I forbore to discourse, well knowing, that besides our neerer Neighbourhood, with Turkey and Babaria, your Pilgrimage hath an ply delineated both their beginnings and continuance.

The like consideration, might silence my purposed Relation of the Gentiles, who differing little in Habit, Complexion, Manners, or Religion, from most of the Inhabitants of the myne of India, have already (from abler Penes) past your approbation, and the Prefect: so that, Nisi dictum est quod non sit dictum prius. Yet encouraged by your request, I add to that Treasury this Myte of my Observation, submitting all that dislikes, or appears superfluous, to your suppression.

The Gentiles in the Fundamentall points of their little Religion, doe hold the same principles which their Learned Clergie the Bramenes, have from great Antiquitie, and doe yet maintayne, but with an Impiety faith, not able to give an account of it, or any their customs, only that it was the custome of their Ancestors.

Religion of the Gentiles in those parts.

Concerning God, they doe beleue him first to have bene onely one, but since to have taken to his assistance, diuers that haue sometimes liued vpon Earth, vnto whose memorie they build their Temples, termed Pagodes, and stiling them Demi-gods or Saints, direct most of their Worship to such of them as they stand most particularly affected vnto, supporting their Deities, with most ridiculous Legendary Fables of Miracles done by them in the likeness of Apes, Oxen, Kites, or the like, many yeeres since, past all memory, or beliefe.

They hold the Immortalitie of the Soule, and the transmigration of it from one body to another, according to the good or bad quarter it kept in the last Mansion, from whence followeth much abstinence from killing or eating any thing that had life.

20 Their difference in Washings, Meates, Drinkes, and such like; arise rather from the Tradition of the Fathers, enioyned to their Posteritie, then in point of Religion: as we read of the Rechabites, who from their Fathers Iniunction, were commended for their constant continuance in their customes.

1er. 35.

Their morallitie appears best in their conuersation; murder, and violent thefts, are strangers amongst them, & seldom happen, but for coozenage in bargaining, causas emptoris. Polygamy is permitted, but not generally practised, vntill in case of the first Wiues barrennesse: Adultery is not common, but punishable in women, Fornication venial, and no Law but that of modesty restraines the publike action.

Their morallity

They are diuided into diuers Tribes or Linages (they say fortie quatre) all which according to their degrees, are knowne each to other, and take place accordingly, wealth in this point being no prerogative, for the poorest Bramene will precede the richest Committy, and so the rest in their severall Orders.

Their Tribes forty four.

The Bramene is Priest vnto them all, and weareth alwayes three or foure twisted threds, ouer one shoulder, and vnder the other arme, and in his forehead a round spot whereon there sticketh cornes of Rice dyed yellow in Tammericke: they are very good and ready Accountants, and in that Office, much employed by Moors of greatest Affaires, writing and keeping their accounts in Palmite leaues, with a Pen of Iron; and if in that Generall Deluge of Pagan Ignorance, there remaineth any knowledge of Arts or Learning, these preferre it, and entirely to themselves, without participation to other Tribes, involved in verball Traditions; or concealed Manuscripts, and are indeed indifferent Astronomers, obseruing exactly the course of the seven Planets through the twelve Houles, and consequently the certaine 40 hour of Ecclesies, and other Astrological Predictions, wherein they haue gained so good credit, that none eysither Gentile or Moore, will vndertake any great Journey, or commence any important businesse, without first consulting with his Bramene, for a good houre to set forward in; from whence, I haue knowne it happen, that a Moore which came Governour to Musulpatnam, hath attended without the Towne ten dayes, before he could find a fortunate houre, to make his triumphant entry into his new government; and of this Tribe they forget not to tell you, there are two Kings, the Samorine King of Calicut, and the King of Cochin, both vpon the Coast of Malabar.

Superstition.

50 The next 4 Cast in account is the Fungans, who is of the Bramenes dyet in all particulars, eating nor killing any thing that hath life, abhorring Wine, but drinking Butter by the pint, contenting themselves with Milke from the Reverend Cow, and such Pulse, Herbs, Roots, and Fruits as the Earth produceth (the Onion only excepted) which for certaine red veins in it, resembling blood finds fauour in their mercifull mouths; and these also in an inferior degree, haue some Priestly power ouer such, as by wearing sanctified Stones tyed vp in their haire, are buried when they dye, all others are burnt. If these be of any Trade they must be Taylers, and such many of them are, but more profest Beggers, and no wonder, for the constancy of that Countreys fashion, and the little or no Needleworke belonging to the making vp of a Garment, cannot finde all of them worke if they stood affected to vnder-
60 take it, but other worke, then Taylours worke, they may not meddle withall.

The Fungans; d. casta signifying a Tribe.

The next Tribe is there termed a Committy, and these are generally the Merchants of this place, who by themselves or their Seruants, trauell into the Countrey; gathering vp Callicoes from the Weauers, and other Commodities, which they sell againe in greater parcels,

The Countreys.

Iustice, the hateful executioners, and are the basest, most stinking, ill favoured people that I have seene, the Inhabitants of Cape bona Esperanza excepted, who are in these particulars vnparalled, and so I leave them, adding onely one word of the Porters who carry the Palamkeenes, a Litter so contrived every way, as to carry a man, his bed and pillowes, which eight of these Porters will carry foure of those leagues in a day, which are 36. of our miles, supporting it on their bare shoulders, and running vnder it by turnes, foure at a time, from which continuall toyle, aggravated by the extreme heate, their shoulders are become as hard as their hooves; yet this their education makes easie to them, for when their children can but goe alone, they lay a small sticke on their shoulders, afterwards a logge, which they make 10 them carry, with proportionable increase, vntill Roman Miso like they are able to run vnder a Palamkeene, and in that sometimes perchance on Oxen.

But all these thus distinguished, are in Religion one body, and haue their Pagodes or Idoll Temples common to all, but not of all equally affected: some inclining in their deuotions to one Saint, some to another, of which Pagodes I haue seene many, some of them for the materials and structure, worth the gazing vpon, and may well bee (as they report) the ancient works, of great Kings: within they are very darke, as hising no other lights but the doores, and they stand alwayes open, and proue in some places the best Receptracles for Trauellers;
 one small Roome onely referred, which the Brahmens that keeps it, will with small intreaty vnlOCK, and shew a Synod of Brazen Saints gilded, the tutelar Saint of the place, being seated in molt eminence, vnto which the Heathens themselves performe very little adoration, wel knowing their lubtances, and wanting those distinctions, which some Christians find out 10 to coozen themselves withall, onely once a yeere on their Annuersary day, they keep their Festiuals, and to some of them repaire many thousand of people (as I my selfe haue seene) some for deuotion, and they fast 24. houres, wash their bodies, and burne Lamps within or as neere the Pagodes as they can get, some to see their friends, children, or kindred, which will not faile to meet them in such a generall liberty: others for profit (as Pedlers to a great Faire) the Whoores to dance, Puppet-players and Tumblers with their exquisite tricks, one whereof I will mention, with the admiration of such as saw it, or vnderstanding shall reade it. A Tumbler fetching his run, did the double Sommerfel without touching the ground with any part of his body, vntill he fel againe on his feet, keeping his body in the aire, vntill hee turned twice round, a strange actiueity, and with me and others which saw it, shall not loose the wonder it carried with it. Others bring charmed Snakes and Vipers in baskets, which they 30 let loose, and with their hands put in againe, piping vnto them, and receiuing their attention: very many Beggars there be, and they practise severall wayes to moue compassion, for such as haue not naturall defects, as blindnesse, lameness, &c. Some lie vpon: Thorns with their naked bodies, others lie buried in the ground all but their heads, some all but their hands, & diuers other such tricks they put vpon the poore peoples charity, whose reward is for the most part a handful of Rice, or a smal piece of money that may be the halfe part of a farthing.
 About midnight the Saint is drawne forth in Procession, handsomely carred and well clothed with much clamour of Drummes Trumpets, Hoboyes and such like, that Country Musicks, and very artificiall fire-works, wherein they haue a singular dexterity, followed without order or distinction, of place, sex, or person, & hauing circled their limits, they draw him back againe, and there leaue him without guard or regard, vntill that time tweluemonth come againe. One Saint they haue, (and none of the least neither in their account) whom they expresse by a plaine round stone, not much vnlike the block of a high crowned Hat, and their reason is, because the incomprehensible subsistence of this Deity, admits no certaine shape or description: they liken it to him which hath the likenesse of nothing, building thus a Temple 40 (as those of Athenes an Image) to the vnkowne God. Foure Feasts in the yeere they celebrate to the Sea, and in the Sea, many people at those seasons resorting to the appointed places, washing their bodies in the salt waues, and receiuing the Brahmens benediction, who being with them in the Sea, poure water on their heads with his hands, mumbling certain Orisons ouer them (they know not what) then takes their reward, & apply themselves to the next cōmers.

Where the great Pagodes are, there are commonly many little ones, which they report to be the worke of one day, or no long time, the Founder after some dreame, or Satanicall sug-50 gestion, vowing not to eat vntill it should be begun and finished, and to some of these the Bramenses perlwade the people, there belongs some miraculous power. I haue seene the Image of a man in black stone, standing vpright, not aboue a yard high, vpon which if a whole bushell of Rice should be cast, it would all stick vpon the Image, and not one come fal to the ground, and this the country people had rather beleue then part with so much Rice to practise it.
 Another before whom if a man should eat out his tongue, it would presently grow againe, yet 60 had they rather venter for a blister in the relation, then the whole tongue in the experimen.

These two I haue bin with, a third I haue seene at distance as I trauelled that way, whereof they report, that whatsoeuer Milke, * Sbarbul, or faire water, is brought thither by the Deuill-Saint.

Another Saint they haue (or rather Deuill) for in their opinion it is a maligne Spirit, and brings vpon them such diseases as befall them, especially the small Poxe, which fury the better to expresse, they forme it a great angry woman, hauing two heads, (no doubt) as many tongues, with foure armes, yet is she hospitable to strangers, for in her house twolishmen formerly mentioned, I went purposely to behold. It happed vpon a day (it seemes) marked in their Calender for her seruice and this exploit, to which purpose, they haue a long beame of timber, placed on an axletree betwixt two wheels like to the Brewers beames by which they draw water, and can so let it downe & rayse it vp, vpon the vpper end whereof are tied two hooks, vnto which the Vow obliged patient is fastened, hauing first with a sharp Knife two holes cut thorow the skin and flesh of each shoulder, thorow which the hooks are thrust, and a Sword and Dagger put into his hands: he is lift vp, and drawne forward by the wheels at least a quarter of a mile, thus hanging in the aire, and fencing with his weapons, 20 during which time the weight of his body, so reareth the flesh and stretcheth the skin, that it is strange it yeelds so much, yet it is tough enough to hold them: and after this manner were foueteene drawne one after another, not once complaining during the time of their flight, but being let downe, their wounds were bound vp, & they returned home with fowre faces and soare bodies, a sufferance surely not inferior to a self-whipping, no lesse meritorious, no better grounded. They haue al of them their Penates, or household Gods, which the chiefe of the Family (as the eldest Brother) keepees alwayes at his house, for which they once a yeere make a Feast, but the kindred being assembled eat it vp. In Marriage it is the childrens dute to attend vpon the Parents, care who finding in their owne Tribe, and as neere as they can in their own Kindred (no degree of Consanguinity hindring but brother and sister) a fitting wife 30 for their sonne, he (though of full age) submits his consent without feeling her, accounting it vnreasonable to recompence his Parents care and trouble in his education, with distrust of their proceedings in this point, or to imagine his owne iudgement more, or their circumspection lesse: They giue no portions with their daughters, but rather take, for the Bridegroom or his Parents, mult giue Earrings, Bracelets and other Jewells (according to her quality) vnto the Bride, two or three wearing clothes vnto the mother, with some present to the father, and then beare the whole charge of the wedding, from which large expence it sometimes happens, that want keeps many a long time vmarried, vntill their endeuours in the world hath supplied them with meanes to defray the charge, but this not hindring the richer sort, they commonly matirie their children very young, the husband fve yeeres of age, the wife not 40 about three yeeres, and many such couples haue I sene put together, wherein, the Parents conceiue they haue done an act of wonderfull prouidence, in disposuig of their children in their life time, so endearing them to others care, if they themselues should leaue them; yet this young couple are presently separated, vntill the man being 12. or 13. yeeres of age, and the woman 10. or 11. they meet againe, and become so well acquainted, that many are mothers at 12. yeeres of age, and some I haue heard no Virgins at nine: to proceed, of what yeeres sceuer they be, whether thus young or full growne, they are both in one Palamkeene (with most of their friends about them) carried about the most publike places of the Towne, with Musick, Fire-works, and the dancing company of the Whoores, who before euery great mans house, make a stand, participating their sports, and from thole houles receiving gifts, if 50 from them they haue any dependencie or acquaintance, then proceed, vntill their progresse being ended, they returne home; where the Bramene attends them, and separating them a cloth hong betwixt them, he mutters (none heares) what Orisons, whilst the marrying couple are taught to tread vpon one another bare feet, so mingling legges, and making thete first short steps, an introduction to their future better acquaintance: the teat being finished which lasteth three dayes at the least, the Kindred departing, the Bride carried backe againe, and if shee bee young referred to more maturity, howsoeuer she mult backe againe for some time, for when she once departeth from her friends, thesedith alwayes with her Husband, at his Fathers house if he be liuing, if not at his eldest brothers, if hee himselfe be not eldest: for seldome doe brethern deuide themselues, but all of them (though many) liue together in 60 owne Family, bringing their gaires whatsoeuer it is vnto the common stocke, cherishing with an admired duty their old indigent Parents, and liuing together in most commendable vnitie. If the husband dieth, the wife may not marry againe, and which is most vnreasonable not the young ones though neuer knowne of man, who happening to be widowes in their infancy, must not onely continue so, but be made the drudge to the whole Family, not permitted to weare their Jewels, good or cleane clothes, or vpon occasion to goe abroad (at least vpon pleasure) & this with most of them, together with a reuerend respect they beare to the reputation of their house, mortifies the after a strange manner, yet some it cannot containe, but they flie out, & forsaking their fathers house, brand it with a lasting obloquy, by their looser liues, keeping themselves at distance, for if conveniently their kindred would poyson them.

Infants.

- Their young children they neither christen, circumsise, nor vse other ceremony vnto, but giuing them different appellations in their infancy, which are commonly the names of their Idols, they are knowne by them with the addition of their Trade, Tribe, or some defect or quality, most eminent about them: They come into the World without much trouble to their mothers, for they are vp againe about their businesse in three or foure dayes, some the same day: they are brought vp with as little charge, for many vntill they be seuen or eight yeeres of age soule not a clowt (as cheape as they be) but being young tumble in the dust, and growne stronger walke still stark naked, and if they bee foule, two or three pails of cold water (poured vpon their heads) runnes downe their bodies, and makes all cleane againe, and thus are most children brought vp, vntill they bee in some measure capable to begin to practise in their fathers profession. The best mens children may bee better lookt vnto, but stark naked (ynlesse vpon some Festivall) is the best and generall habit. Full growne men and women are devoutly and civilly clothed, the women all ouer as you haue heard of
- 10 The Whoores; the men most of them from the middle downwards, and on their shoulders a loose white Callico cloth in vse like our Sommer clothes, sometimes a coate close to their bodies vnto the middle, from thence downwards to their ankles full of cloth like to a paire of bales, their haire (long as womens) bound vp, and ouer it a Turbant, in their eares Rings of Gold, with small Pearles, and about their neckes a chaine of Ginetra, or Silver, for few can attaine vnto Gold. They are not black but tawny, or rather a Walofoot colour, some much whiter then other, as some wainfoot is newer or browner then other, but many of them very well fauoured & straight limbed, and in their acquaintance and conuersation kind and affable, amongst whom our Nation hath (during the time of their Residence with them) found much good respect, and little affront or injury. All Mechanicke persons (whereof the multitude consisteth) worke in their severall Trades, for the same salary, or little difference. The Blacksmith, and Goldsmith, makes Iron nailles, and chaines of Gold, for three pence a day, binding themselves, and is great wages to a master workman, their seruants are paid with one penny, and some lesse, the like of all other Trades and persons, for wee are serued faithfully and officiously in our houses for a Riall of eight a moneth, without allowance of diet, and the Porters which carry the Palamkeene haue no more, yet out of this all pay somewhat to the Gouvernour where they liue, or dos his worke gratis, from whence it is little wonder they liue so poorly, yet the plenty of this Country, and their contented courter diet, affords them a living vntill they die, then some are burned, and their ashes cast into the next River, others buried sitting crosse-legged; in either of which kind, I next relate my owne sight of two
- 40 womens voluntary sufferance, yet vnresolued whether their loue to their dead husbands be more to be admired or pitied. It is amongst these Indians a receiued history, that there was a time, when wiues were generally so luxurious, that to make way for their friends, they would poyson their husbands; which to preuent, a Law was made, that the husbands dead the wiues should accompany them in the same fire, and this Law stands yet in force in the Island of Baly not far from Lana: but from this necessity of dying, there ensued so great a reformation, that the succeeding age abolished the rigour of this Law, and the dead mans wife was onely adiudged to a perpetuall widowhood as it is at this day. Yet are there some few left, that in pure loue to their deceased husbands, die voluntarily in solemnizing their Funerals: beleeuing their soules shall keepe company in their transmigrations. Of the two which
- 50 I haue seene, the first was wife to a Weaver, who being dead, and by his profession to be buried, she a young woman (about 20. yeeres of age) would needs goe with him, and in this order. She was clothed in her best garments, and accompanied with her nearest Kindred and friends, seated on a greene banke by a great ponds side, there enterayning such as came to looke, and take leaue on her, with Bettele (a herbe which they much eat) meerely accommodating her words, actions, and countenance to the Musicke, which flood by, and plaid no dumps, but in the same measure and straine they were occasioned at wedding, newes hereof being brought to our house, three of vs took horte, and posted a mile out of Towne to be partakers of this spectacle, but coming into her sight, before we came at them, they fearing by our speed we had bin sent from the Gouvernour to hinder their proceedings, hastened to her death, and was then couering with earth when wee came in, first sitting downe by her husband, embracing his dead body, and taking leaue of all her friends, they standing round about the graue, with each of them a basket of earth, buried her at once. Yet after we came in, one of them stroke vpon the Graue, laying his head close vnto it, and calling her by her name, and told vs the answered, and expressed her content in the course she had taken. Over whom there was erected a little thatch cover, and her Kindred not a little glorified, in being allied to so resolute and loving a wife.

The name of one of their Idols.

Is an Officer amongst the Mame; not much unlike to the Sheriff, of London.

The other was a Campawares wife, and she after the same solemn preparation; fetching her run and crying all the way, Bama Narina, Bama Narina; leapt into the pit where her husband lay burning, upon whom her by-standers friends, threw to many logs, that she felt not so much fire for the well. Vnto whom I adde a third, a Goldsmiths wife; whose husband being dead and the willing to accompany him, came attended with her friends and kindred vnto the Cornwall, who was then with me at the English house, with much importunity desiring his consent, all-gding her husbands death and the few friends she had left behind; I 10 whereinto the Cornwall replied, that hee himselfe would provide for her at his owne house, diswa'ing her by what other arguments he could vie from so desperate a course but the neglecting them and his offer, he also denied her request, and she departed discontent, vntering these words, that he could not hinder her to dye by some other meaner, and within a short time after I heard she had hanged her self; & this hapned in Musulpatnam, where the Officers being all Mabumetans, restraints the Geniles especially in these cruel & heathenish customes.

A fourth I haue wholly by Relation, yet from an English Factor of good account in that place, who travelling in the Country about such affaires as were imposed vpon his performance, and being well attended according to the customs of that Country, esch'd not far out of his way a concourse of people vnto whom he made, and being come neere hee was enforced by his Seruants that it was a woman about to burne with her dead husband: he presently drawing his Sword rode in amongst them, whereupon they all fled but the woman herselfe, whom he perswaded to liue, promising to secure her against her friends, if their importunities had wrought her to this course: but she besought him not to interrupt her, it was her owne most earnest desire, wherein we did constantly persist; whereupon he put vp, and her friends came in, and presently in his sight with the like ceremony & duty formerly recited; she became the same ashes with him, to whom she had bin one flesh. And here abruptly in the ordering and imperfectly in the Relation, I leaue them & their customes, intending only to touch at their marine trade, & the commodities of that country transported to other parts.

silly Goat-head keeping his flock amongst those mountaines, stumbled (by chance) vpon a stone that shined somewhat bright, which he carelessly tooke vp (not much valuing) sold it to a Committy for meal's Rice, the Committy againe for no great profit, and so forward untill it came to those owners which knew the worth, who questioning the last seller, traced out from one to another the true originall, and making further triall thereabouts, found in the bowels of the earth a plentifull myne; whereof the King being aduertized, hee tooke order for the safe keeping, and rumour thereof being blazed, Jewellers of all the neighbouring Nations resorted to the place, and some store of Diamonds began to be dispersed and expold to sale: Infomuch that Sir Andraes Socory Gouvernour of the Port, Guide in Tallicat, Sir Adolfe Thomas a free Merchant, and my selfe resolu'd to make a Voyage thither, to seee at least the place, and order of it: so that after foure dayes trauell (thorough a desolate mountaynous Country) we came at last to the place, and found it distant from Musulpatnam about twelue Geniue leagues, which is 108. English miles: where we harboured our selues in a handsome Hogstie, and according to custome address'd our selues to visit the Gouvernour, who was a Bramene, named Ray Raw, and lay there for the King, as well to receive his profits, as to administer Iustice to the Rabbement of different Nations that frequented this place, from whom we receiued indifferent good respect, with the sight of certaine faire Diamonds appertayning to the King, and amongst them one of 30. Carraets, pointed, but not perfect: and after knowledge of our severall qualities, and our purpose only to see the Mine, he dismissed vs, and we next day went thither (distant from the Towne about two English miles) where by their owne reports, there worke not daily fewer then 30000. soules, some digging, some 50 filling baskets, some lauing out water with buckets, others carrying the earth vnto a certaine square leuell place, whereupon they spread it foure or five inches in thicknesse, which being dried by that dayes Sunne, some of them the next day with great stones in their hands, bruisse the clods of earth, and gathering from thence the peble stones, throw them, by and sifting the rest, they find the Diamonds amongst the duil, sometimes none, as it hapned whilst I lookt on, sometimes more, sometimes lesse, according to the earth they worke in, which they well know (some say by the smell) others more probably by sight of the mould, howsoever that they know it is most apparant, seeing that in many places wee found the ground only broken and not further sought into, in other places digged 10. or 11. fathome deepe: the earth is reddish, with veines of white or yellowish chalker, intermixt with Peble-stones, which being deepe digged, comes vp in small clods, and those laid in the Sunne become hard, but are easily pounded with stones (as formerly) of which earth I tooke a small piece, and yet 60

These

These Mynes are not (as with vs in Europe) carried vnder ground and supported with Timber, but digged right downe in square large pits, whether it be that all the Earth affords more or lesse profit, whereas ours onely run in vynes, or whether they want props or iudgement to take this course, I cannot determine, but am sure that in freeing of the water, and bringing vp the Earth, they goe the furthest way to worke, for in place or pulles, and such like deuices, they with many people setting one aboue another, hand vp from one to another vntill it comes to the place it must rest in, and from hence procede: h the vie of so many people, seeing that besides the Earth, the place where ouer-night they wrought dry, is next morning a fathome deepe vnder water.

- 10 Such as is is thus imperfectly described, the King then rented it vnto one Marcando, of the Cast of the Goldsmiths for three hundred thousand Pagoda a yeere, reseruing all Diamonds of about ten Carracts to himselfe: Hee againe rents it out to others by square mea use according as they agree, in which course some gaine, others lose as in all other Aduentures. The King to assure himselfe of the great Stones, keeps his Gouernour there, publishing extreame penalties against such as shall conceale them, but neyther the terror of them, nor his many Spies, can so watch such as there attend such hazards, but that I haue heard Diamonds of forty Carracts haue escaped their Guard, I haue seene two of neere twenty Carracts apiece, and diuers of ten, eleuen, and twelue, but very deere prized.

- It is situated at the foot of a great Mountayne, not farre from a River called Christena, a place naturally to barren, that before this Discouery it was hardly inhabited, now peopled with a hundred thousand Soules consisting of Myners, Merchants, and such others as leue by following such concourses, sufficiently furnished with all provisions brought thither from the Country round about, but at excessive rates, occasioned by the many exactions rayed vpon them in their passages thorough seuerall Gouernments and Villages: The Houses are very poore, not as intended for continuance, but onely the present occasion, for in Anno 1622 the Myne was shut vp, and all persons restrained from frequenting the place; the reasons I am imagined to be their care to keepe the Commodity in request, not to digge more vntill those already found were dispersed, others affirmed, the coming of the Magnus Embassadour to this Kings Court, with his peremptory demand of a Vyle of the fairest Diamonds, caused this cessation, vntill that pretence, and some competent Present should content the Magnus: for since I came from thence, I heare it was opened againe, but almost exhausted, and very few found.

d Or Tribe:

e A Vyle is three pound English weight

In this Country is also much Christall, and many other sorts of transparent soft Stones of little value, as Garnets, Amatists, Topasses, Aggats, and such like.

Likewise great store of Iron and Steele; transported into many places of India, bought in the place it is made for two shillings the hundred of Iron, and three shillings Steele, but being brought vpon the backs of Oxen fifteene dayes iourney, before it cometh to the Port it becomes much dearer, yet is sold for five shillings, and eight shillings, but eyther Gold, Siluer, Tinne, Copper, or other Metals this Country produceth not.

Iron & Steele;

- 40 Bezar Stones in some plenty, are taken from the Goats in one onely part of this Country, for which and their skins they kill so many, that the flesh is most throwne away, and their mawes onely searcht into, where they finde two, three, and sometimes foure small Bezars some long, some round, all of them growing vpon a stalk or kernell, as is easily perceived by such as are broken, such as are greater come from other Countries, the best out of Persia, and are said to be found in Apes, all of all sorts so well knowne, and much vsed in India, that they cannot be bought there, to yeeld profit in England, proportionable to the time and Adventure. Of these Goats this conclusion hath bene experimented, foure of them haue bene taken from the place of their breeding, and transported fifty or a hundred miles, of which two haue bene immediately killed, and in those haue bene found perfect Bezars, a third repriued for tenne dayes, and then slaine: some few of Bezars remayned, but apparently walled, the fourth liuing but a moneth after, there will be neyther Bezar, nor signe of any that was was, from whence they conclude with great probability, that it is some Herbe, Plant or Tree, peculiar to that place, whereof the Goat feeding the Bezars are formed.

Bezars how they ken out of Goats.

- Callicoes of all sorts, are in this Kingdome as cheape and plentifull as in any other part of India, but different in their making, and easily distinguished from those of other Countries. The Painting of this Coast of Choromandel famous throughout India, and are indeed the most exquisite that are seene, the best, wrought all with the Penkill, and with such durable colours, that notwithstanding they be often washed, the colours fade not whilst the Cloth lasteth, & this hapneth principally, by a Plant which groweth onely in this Country called by them Chay, which dyeth or stayneth a perfect red, with them in as great account Callicoes.

Painting and durable colours,

- 62 as Scarlet with vs, and is the Kings particular commodity. Indico is also made in this Country in some plenty, in forme like to that sort which is called Labore Indico, whereof the Dutch haue bought store, and transported it for Holland and

and continue so to doe, but our Nation vpon good experience of the condition and value of it, content themselves with such as is made in the Mogals Dominions, and laden from Surat.

They haue within few yeeres planted store of Tobacco, and much of it is exported to Mocha and Arrecan, and not a little drunke amongst themselves: It is but weake, yet sure more care in curing and making it vp would helpe that fault, they onely dry the leaues in the Sun, and vye it so, without further lophification.

These are the generall Commodities of this Countrey, which are dispersed in some measure through the World, but are best knowne in Indian Traffique, and produce constantly certaine profit in their exportation to other parts, to which purpose they build great Ships, and good ones too, considered in their burthen and materials, but not comparable to ours for beautie, conueniencie, or defence, some of them not lesse then 600. tunnes, substantially built of very good timber and Iron, whereof we haue had vpon some occasion good experience, in careening the Globe, Salomon, and Clawe, in the Riuer of Narsoparpetta. With these their Ships they traffique ordinarily to Mocha in the Red Sea, to Achyne vpon Sumatra, to Arrecan, Pegu, and Tannassery, on the other side the Gulfe, and to many Ports alongst their owne Coasts, as farre as Zelan, and the Cape Comorins.

Voyage to Mocha and Mecca,

To Mocha they set sayle in January, and returne in September or October following, and thither the King sends yeerely a proportion of Rice, as an Almes to be distributed amongst the Pilgrimes which resort to Mocha and Medina, where their Prophet Mohomets Shrine is visited with much deuotion. He sendeth also an Aduenture, the proceed whereof is inuisted in Arabian Horses, which are returned not about fixe or eight in a Shippe, whereof they make great account: For in this Countrey there is no Race of good Horses.

Tobacco they send in great quantities, many small Rotans to make Launces, certaine sorts of Calicoes proper for Turbants, Iron, Steele, Indico, Benjamin, and Gumme, Lacke. For which they returne some few watered Chamblets, but the most part ready money in Sultrances or Rials of eight.

In September the Ships for Achyne, Arrecan, Pegu, and Tannassery set all sayle, for it is to be vnderstood that alongst this and all other Coasts of India, the windes blow constantly trade fixe moneths one way, and fixe moneths another; which they call the Mohons alternately succeeding each other, not missing to alter in April and October, onely variable towards their end, so that taking the last of a Monson, they set sayles, and with a forewinde arriue at their desired Hauen, and there negotiating their Affaires, they set sayle from thence in February or March following, and with the like fauourable gale returne in April vnto their owne Ports.

To Acheene they export much Steele, and some Iron, diuers sorts of Calicoes, both white and painted, and of late times, when the Myne was first discouered, store of Diamonds, which were sold to great benefit, from whence they returne Benjamin, and Camphora of Barouffe: Pepper of Priamman and Tosso, Brimstone, and all sorts of Porcellane, and China Commodities, if to be had, to sell againe to profit.

To Arrecan they send store of Tobacco, some Iron, and few sorts of painted clothes, and returne from thence some Gold, and Gumme Lacke, but most part Rice which they sell about Pallecat, and that Coast of Narsinga.

To Pegu they export much Siluer in Rials of eight, Cotton yarne, and Beethyles dyed red, with seuerall sorts of paintings, & bring from thence the perfect Rubies & Saphires which are dispersed through the World, much Gold, the best Gum Lack, with some Tin & Quicksiluer.

To Tannassery they carry red Cotton yarne, red and white Beethyles, paintings of seuerall sorts besetting that Countrey weare, and landing them at Tannassery carry them from thence to Siam fourteene dayes iourney ouer Land, from whence by the like conueynance, they bring all sorts of China Commodities, as Porcellane, Sattina, Dimasques, Lankeene, Silke, Lignum Aloes, Beniamin of Cambeia, and great store of Tinne, and a wood to die withall called Sapan wood, the same we heere call Brail.

Alongst their owne Coast they trade with smaller shipping, lading Rice and other graine where it is cheapest, selling it againe on the Coast of Bisnagar to great benefit, taking children in exchange, which cost not them about three or foure shillings a childe, and they sell againe in Musulmanam, and other places for forty shillings. And thus much shal suffice to haue written of this Kingdom, wherein I haue been the more prolix, because my own knowledge fortified with almost fve yeeres experience, assureth me of the truth of what I haue written.

Where this Countrey endeth, the Kingdome of Bengala beginneth, subsisting at this time vnder the Monarchy of the Great Mogul, which he ruleth by his Governours, disposed into seuerall Prouinces, whose powerfull Neighbourhood, causeth the King of Golconda to keepe constant Garisons, which with the aduantage of Riuers and Deserts, secureth him on that side of his Kingdom. In this Countrey we are more strangers, the Coast is too dangerous, and our shipping too great, to aduenture them amongst so many shelles and sands, yet

are we informed by such as comes from thence, and confirmed by the price and abundance of such things as that Countrey produceth, that it is the most plentifull of all the East: For once a yeere there ariseth at Mulapatnam, a Fleet of small Vessels from thence, of burden about twenty runnes, the planks onely sowne together with Cairo (a kinde of Cord made of the rinds of Coconuts) and no Iron, in, or about them. In which Barkes they bring Rice, Butter, Sugar, Waxe, Honey, Gumme, Lacke, Long Pepper, Callico, Lawnes, and diuers sorts of Cotton-cloth, Raw Silke, and Moga, which is made of the bark of a certaine tree, and verye Quiles and Carpets stiched with this Moga; all which considering the plenty of the place whereunto they bring them, should come hither, as we say of Coales carried to New-castle, yet here they tell them to contented profit. Many Portugals decayed in the re-10 eibres, or questioned for their liues, resort hither & liue here plentifully, yet as banished men or Out-Lawes, without gouernment, practice, or almost profession of Religion; to conclude, it may truly be spoken of this Countrey: as it is abusiuely of another; Bengala bona terra, mala gens: It is the best Countrey peopled wth the worst Nation, of whom this repute runnes currant in India, the men are all Theeues, and the women Whoores. Here the famous Ganges disimboqueth into the Sea, fructifying it seemes the Countrey, but little sanctifying the Inhabitants, whereof I can speake very little, as hauing alwayes liued at great distance from it, onely I haue heard it is full of Crocodiles, and so are most Riuer within the Gulfe, where I haue seene many of immenle bignesse, which the Ferrimen that passe men and cattle ouer 20 those Riuer, know how to charme, and then with safety ferry ouer the Passengers, in the bodies of one or two Palmito trees ioyned, and swimme ouer the Cattle; the order of which charming hauing once seene, I thought good to insert. Being at a Riuer side and ready to passe, they elpied a very great Crocodile, shewing himselfe aboue water, and swimming downe the streame in our way, whereupon the Ferriman entring the Riuer to the calues of his legs, he stands vpon one of them, muttering to himselfe certaine words, and withall tying knots vpon a small Coard he held in his hand, to the number of seuen, which Coard he left hanging on a bush thereby, and confidently posits vs and our Horses ouer, the Crocodile lying all this while still in our sight, not able (as he said) to open his iawes; so hauing ferried vs ouer, he made haste to returne and vntie the Coard; affirming, that if the Crocodile should 30 be starued by the power of this Charme, his Charme would from thenceforth lose its power and effect.

Arrecan borders vpon Bengala, and participates in its plenty, from whence there commeth yeerely shipping to the Coast of Choromandel. The King is by Religion a Gentile, but such a one as holdeth all matters and drinks indifferent; he marteth constantly his owne sister, and giueth for reason the first mens practice in the ioyance of the World, affirming that no Religion can deny that Adams Sons married Adams daughters, he is very kind to Strangers, giuing good respect and entertainment, to Moores, Persians, and Arabians, which liue in his Countrey professing publickly the practice of their Mahometan Superstition. Hee hath also diuers times invited the Dutch and English to resort vnto his Countrey, but the Dutch 40 by good experience, hauing had sometimes a Factory there, the English (not by their example) but true knowledge of the little Trade and lesse benefit, auoyd his importunity; yet continue good correspondence with him and his people, as knowing it a plentifull Countrey, and not inconuenient to supply themselves with many necessaries, if difference with other Nations should enforce them to that extremity. Betwixt this King and the Mogull there is continuall Warre, both by Sea and Land; defense on the King of Arrecan part, securing his owne Countrey that bordereth vpon Bengala: From thence confronting in small skirmishes the opposite party, but any see of great battle, I haue not heard of to haue bene fought betwixt them. In which warres he giueth for good entertainment to strangers, that I haue knowne diuers Hollanders, that hauing expired their couenanted time of seruice with the 50 East Indian Company, and so purchased their freedome, haue gone to serue this King, and receied good countenance and content in his employment of them.

Pegu borders vpon Arrecan, and is a most plentifull and temperate Countrey, yet hardly recovered from the desolation where with warre, plague, and famine, had within few former yeeres infected it, which is most visible in the vast Countrey, the Cities being alwayes first and best replenished, and that all other places may the better be so, it is death to export a woman from thence) and certaine profit to bring them. The King is a Gentile by his Religion, agreeing in all points of opinion and practice with the Kings of Arrecan, Tamassery, & Siam, all of them improbably receiving their Rudiments from the Chinese, who without question sometimes commanded those Countries; their vicinity, resemblance in Physiognomy, 62 and conformity in many customes, being my best reasons to goe along with these thus farre, that are of opinion; the Chinese sometimes Monarchised as farre as Madagascar.

which this hath suppressed, and hath in his time recovered from the King of Syam, what hee had enforced from his Predecessor, amongst others the town and Kingdom of Zangomay, and therein an Englishman named Thomas Samuel, who not long before, had bene sent from Syam by Master Lucas Anthonison, to discover the Trade of that Country, by the sale of certain goods sent along with him to that purpose, which Thomas Samuel, together with all other strangers was by the King taken from Zangomay, and carried to Pegu, where not long after Samuel dyed, the King relying upon what he had by Inventory, with purpose (as by the sequel) to give account thereof to the lawfull Proprietors. The Kingdom of Pegu beginning to bee better established, Merchants of divers Nations began to repair thither againe about their negotiations, where some of Musulipatnam by conference with Moores, 10 that were Samuel's associates, understood his death, and the Kings taking his goods into his hands, with the probability of recovery if sought after, which they making knowne to the English at their returne to Musulipatnam, it happened that Master Lucas Anthonison who employed Samuel from Syam to Zangomay, was then Agent at Musulipatnam, who apprehending this encouragement, consulted with his assistants, and resolved to send two English with a Letter and Present to the King, and some small adventure, to bear the charge of the Voyage, and make tryall of the Trade, which tooke place, and they embarking at Musulipatnam the tenth of September, arrived at Siriam the Port of Pegu, the third of October following, whose entertainment I give you in their owne words, as I finde them written in their Letters to Musulipatnam.

The King bearing of our coming sent foure Gallies with Presents to the Ambassador and unto us, sending us word that he did much reioyce at our coming into his country. These Gallies having 20 scores of a side, with eight Noblemen in them, caused our Ship to come to an anchor before the town of Siriam, the 7. of October the King of Pegues Brother being chiefe Governour, sending two Noblemen aboard of our Ship, writing our names & our age of yeeres & the cause of our coming, we assuring them that we were messengers sent from Musulipatnam by our chief Captain, having a Present & a Letter unto the King, which when his Highnesse shall be pleased to receive, shall understand the effect of our business, and the cause of our coming. The tenth day of October we were sent for on shore by the King's Brother who sitting in a large house of Bamboson, in great state bedecked with Jewels in his ears with Gold Rings, with rich stones on his fingers, being a white man and of very good understanding, demanding of us the question the Noblemen before did, and we answering him as we did before, because that our speeches should be found alwayes as one: we gave him at that time a fine 30 for a Present, to the intent that he might speake and write to the King his Brother in our behalfe, that we might have access unto the King the sooner, that our business might have effect. The eighth of November the King sent for us, and the King's Brother provided for us a Beate, with six men to come, and also a Nobleman with us to Pegu, to be our Guard, having Narlarcan and Hodges Immael with us, unto which Nobleman we gave a Present, for in this place there is nothing to bee done or spoken, or any business performed without Bribes, Gifts, or Presents. Arriving in Pegu the eleventh of November, having our Present with us, Bany Bram sent his men unto us, writing our names as before time, they also bade us choose any ground where we would for to build us a house, but at our owne cost and charge as all other mens custome is. Our House being finished, straight order was given 40 that we must not walke any where out of our house to speake with any man untill the King had spoken with us, and our Present delivered. The King sent us a Present of vittuals, with two Noblemen with it, which was some grace to us, though it was not of much value, and our comfort is, that all men report that the King is very well pleased at our coming into his Country. The seven and twentieth of December, the King sent for our Present, and sent two Horses for us, and being come to a gate of the Towne, to say for his coming, when hee came out, hee sent for us. What speech or conference he had with us, Narlarcan can certifie you, but it was to no purpose, concerning our business, nor could we get name to move the King in our business, for none of his Subjects dare move the King in our business more then he demands. The next our Letter was sent for, and interpreted by a Portugall a slave to the King, but one that speaks Pegu. We had much trouble with him about the true understanding of it, being not written in Portugall. The next day we delivered that Present you sent to Bany Bram, who gave us many faire speeches like to others, but we have found them all to no purpose. The Country is far from your Worships expectation, for what men sooner come into his Country, he holds them but as his slaves, neither can any man goe out of his Country without his leave, for hee hath watch both by Land and Water, and he of himselfe is a Tyrant, and cannot eat before hee hath draine blood from some of his people with death or otherwise. For the business of Thomas Samuel and the Mallayor, they had a falling out some 12. months before hee dyed, and hee took all the Companies goods into his hands, and the Mallayor had Narlarcans in his hands, and coming to Pegu hee fell sick by the way, and dyed in short time after hee came to Pegu, but before his death 50 the Mallayor was called for to give account what men were indebted to Samuel, and the Pegues & Bermantes that were indebted paid it to the King, but the Moores that were indebted said, when the English

English came they would pay them; we went with others to Nichefa, and requested him to move the King in our behalfs for our dispatch, who returned answer; came we to demand our goods, and the English had never come to trade in the Country? when our Ships came he would give all the goods, and what the English could demand to give them content. In another Letter the first of March, we had word sent us, the King would not let us go until some English Ships came to Pegu. For the money we brought with us, it is all spent, and we are here in a most miserable estate, and know no way to help our selves. For the King hath neither given us any of our goods, nor leave to recover none of our debts, nor taken our Cloth, but we are like left sheep, and still in fear of being brought to slaughter. Therefore we beseech you and the rest of our Countrymen and Friends to pity our poor distressed estate, and not to let us be left in a Heathen Country, slaves to a tyrannous King. Though the King gave us nothing, yet had he but given us leave to come away, we could have certified your Worship of means to help to have recovered all the money and goods we came for. Lead and Time here is none to be sold, but if we receive any money, we do mean one of us to go into the Country to buy some if any profit may be made of it. The Coast of Pegu is cleere and water enough on the Bar for any Ship; and for Pilots, there are many to be had in Mafulipatnam, that know the Coast very well, it is intreat you for Gods sake to be mindfull of us, and to pity the poor estate we are here in, and send some Ship to release us, and we shall be bound to pray for your Worships good health and prosperity.

This was the substance of their advice delivered in their owne words, which might be true at that time, for then indeed they were enforced to stay; but not long after the Ships departure, they found good sale for their Cloth, and it should seeme better went for the money; for before the Ships came againe in October following, they had consumed their Capitall, and taken up besides what their credit could supply, for which they could give no other account, but that most was lost at play, and the rest profusely spent, whereof the Right Worshipsfull East Indian Company are most sensible, and my selfe at that time in that place had some reason to be acquainted withall, but leaving them namelesse according to the obscurity of their qualities, and irregularity of their proceedings. The King restoring most of the same goods Samuel dyed possessed of, at the instant of the Ships departure, and not before, left their ryot should have consumed all, he then enforced them to depart toward Mafulipatnam, that could have been well contented to have stayed behind, where they arrived in 30 April, A. N. 1619, bringing with them a Letter from the King, written upon a Palmite Leaf, signifying his desire to give free Trade and entertainment to the English Nation, if they would with their shipping repaire vnto his Country, and with all he sent as a Present a Ring set with a Ruby, two Mats, two Beetele Boxes, and two narrow pieces of Damaske, all worth twenty Nobles or thereabouts, and so ended this negotiation. The Rubies and Saphires which are brought from hence, are found in the Kingdome of Aua, subiect also to this King, and much esteemed in all parts of India.

Tannassery lyeth next to Pegu, a small Kingdome, and tributary to the King of Syam, for which place this is but the Port, and that only to the Inhabitants of this Gulfe. For we find a way with our shipping into the River of Syam, where the Right Worshipsfull East Indian Company haue at this time their Seruants, to whose abler relation I leaue the description of those Parts, adding onely from the credible reports of our owne, the Dutch, & that Nation, the strange increate of the Swine of that Country, amongst which here are found no Boares, yet haue they Pigs according to the custome of other Swine. And one Sir Drisif a Dutchman of good account, & another that liued long in that place, assured vnto mee the truth hereof, both in that Countreys beleife, and his owne experience, for at his coming from thence, he tooke certaine Pigs, which he kept aboard the Ship, & within six months they farrowed Pigs, yet not a Boare amongst them. And heere I take leaue to repose, hauing made this light discouery of the Countreys coasting this Bay of Bengall, which I could not more exactly performe, hauing taken my station in Mafulipatnam, Such as it is, I submit it equally to all mens iudgement or censure, and rest: Pleaded whosoever be otherwise.

Worthy Sir:

As I haue begun, and proceeded herein by your Instigation, I present it to your acceptation, if any thing be worth your account, I dare iustifie the truth of it: if nothing, I shall neuer grieve at the suppression. In brisfe, I wrote it for you, and dedicate it to you, and am only sorry it comes vnseasonably. My Voyage into India, remarkable in a Carracks losse, and Captaine Iosephs death, my Employment at Surat, Cambaia, and Amadera, from thence at Calicut vpon the Coast of Malabarre, at Priaman and Tecoo vpon Sumatra, and then to Bantam and Iacatra vpon Iaua, would afford more matter of discourses, but I haue chosen Mafulipatnam, from which Countre I haue drawne 62 these rude lines, yet strait ones, and parallel to the truth: so that although, none shall please to sayle by my Compass, yet am I sufficiently contented in hauing kept within compass, and so I rest, a true louer of you and your elaborate Volumes.

To the Reader.

That which the Angell had foretold of Ishmael, hee will bee a wild man, his hand will be against every man, and every mans hand against him, and that his seed should not be numbred for multitude; is in this History manifested to have beene fulfilled to the utmost. Yea, that which Saint Paul saith; that God himselfe hath the promises of this life, and of that which is to come, we see fulfilled in Abraham (the Father of many Nations) and in his two Sonnes, Ishmael made a great Nation (never did any Empire extend so farre) But my Couenant will I establish with Isaac, and in

Compare those Locusts, 1704.9. with this Saracenicall history, which though it may be applied in part to Papists, yet is literally more manifest in many things of these.

Isaac shall thy seed bee called. Ishmael hath the greatest earthly Empire, yet is in spirituall bondage withall Agars Children; but Ierusalem which is above is free, the mother of vs all, which are the seed of the faith of Abraham, which is the Father of vs all, which (as Isaac was) are the Children of Promise. But as then hee that was borne after the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the spirit, euen so it is now, in this Historie from the beginning of the Muslim Empire declared. The bondwoman and her sonne shall one day be cast out of the house; for the Seruant abideth not in the house for euer, but the Sonne abideth euer, If the Sonne therefore shall make you free, yee shall be free indeed. The Earth is a small thing for God to giue; he giueth it to Ishmaels seed; his owne haue Himselfe their portion, in the Sonne to redeeme them, in the Spirit to sanctifie them, in the Father to provide for them the best things here, and Heaven it selfe with 40 God himselfe in Trinity and Vnity to be their portion for euer. Envy not their lot to those, but pity and pray for them that God may open their eyes: which how they are mist with shewes of deuotion, dazzled with lightnings of armes, and blinded with night and Hell, this History sheweth from Muhammed their first Seducer to the end of their Asian Chalfine. Our Stories, I confesse, are full of Mahomet and Saracens, but empty for the most part of things therein most remarkable: whilst partly want of Arabike Books and Letters hath bindred vs from meanes of knowledge (without that Key wone can enter this Muhammedan Magazine) and partly rash Zeale hath transported both 50 Greeke and Latine Authours to say any thing of these * Locusts, Mahomet and his Abherents, without indgement sometimes, and very often without truth, whereby we haue had passionate Inuectiues and crude Collections, instead of the Muhammedan or Islam History. God needeth not mens lies, nor pie fraudes, to support his Truth: and the way to ouercome euill is not with euill but with goodnesse. The iustice of God scourging the world with the Saracenicall Sword for their vnjust contempt of the Gospel of Peace, is seene in this Dragon-tooth seed of Muhammedans, the Alphabet of whose Religion is written in bloody Letters of forced faith. The hypocrite of Muhammed their Founder and other Prophetickall Pretenders ambitious of Soueraigntie, with their 60 vices are best gathered out of their owne Authors, which though they stile their memory happy or glorious, yet in relating their Arts and Acts doe sufficiently declare their impiety and impurity before God and Man. Shewes of Religion in bodily exercises, (mere carcasses only) Almes, frequent Prayers (if gestures and words be Prayers, and Prayers were not the scope of their Prayers) their externall iustice in many things; their Learning in Philosophie, Mathematicks and Poetry; the length of an Empire in such space of time and place; this, inclusively from the East Indies, to the Westerne Ocean without any interruption; (taking in also Spaine and part of France and Italy with Sicill, and the Easterne Empire tributary) that, from Muhammeds time to the end of this Story, yea still in the Mogoll, Persian and Turke, with the Tartars and many Princes of lesse note continuing in a larger extent; the beginning, growth, height, declining and fall of this Empire; the advancement hereof with the Sword, which exposeth to slaughter, or imposeth Tribute, their divisions into two Empires, the Abasian Family ruling ouer Asia and Africa, the Ommian in Europe; and after into a third which held Africa, and in time also possessed Egypt; the rising of Lay Princes, and degeneration of Chalifas to a kind of meere Ecclesiasticks; and their fall by division of this triformed Cerberus into a multisforme Dragon in manifold States and Kingdomes: These in a succinct narration, by one which descended of Christian Progenitors, was versed in Christian Stories as well as his last professed Islamisme; with more likelihood of truth and fullness of satisfaction to the Inquisitiue Reader, then any, then any published (if I be able to iudge) by any, by all Latines or other Westerne Writers; Erpennius hath beene cited, and I abridged out of him, conferred also and illustrated with Mirkond a Persian and Muhammedan his History set forth in Spanish by Pedro Teixeira, and Abraham Zacut a Jew published by Ioseph Scaliger. The Author by birth an Egyptian hath bene exall in relating the Times and Acts of all Egyptian Countenours, which with other things too long for an abridgement; and not so pertaining to the generall knowledge of this Historie of their Religion and Empire, I have omitted: yet scrupulously rendering those things which I thought fitting for that my scope, or satisfaction of any (not exceedingly curious) Reader. I confesse, had the Booke come to my hand in time, this (as the other Translation of Sir Ierome Horley and Master Methold) had bene published with my Pilgrimes; yea, that Muhammedan part of my Pilgrimage was passed the Presse before this came to my hand; although euen for Religions sake this is not vnfit here. And for Religions sake I have bene Religious in keeping the foot-prints of their Religion in the Phrases used by the Authour, of Muhammed or any other of his Sword-saints; stiling his memory glorious, others happy (indeed odious and pestiferous) because the Authour so speaketh, in other things also obseruing his words, euen as Saint Luke mentioneth Heathenish Names and Denotions of Mars, Castor, Pollux, Iupiter, Mercury, or other prodigies of Ethnike Superstition. Let their Shewts and Denotions in a false Religion prouoke vs to emulate the Truth with greater Zeale; lest our lukewarmnesse also cause vs to be spewed out of Christs mouth, for withholding the truth in vnrighteousnesse; the true cause why one Age brought into the World those hypocriticall Chalifas, and these Vicars, the one by Muhammeds Midwifery gladioris, and the other by that of Phocas, ore gladij, those with a forcing Temporall Sword, these with a forged Spirituall, made of the Keyes turned into Picklocks to set the World in so manifold combustions; whiles one seeks a thousand yeeres together to thrust the Church out of all the World, the other to bring all the World vnto their Pontificall, Pompificall, Cacolicke, not into the true Catholike Church, in the communion of Saints. And if the Saracenicall and Papall History were well knowne, the mysteries of S. Iohns Apocalypse might receiue greater light then that want hath yet permitted. So vsfull is this kind of knowledge to generall Learning, and so (the summe of all) Diuinity.

40 Having read the History of that learned and famous man, Muhammed Abugiasar Son of Giar's the Tabarite of happy memory, and seeing the narrations and allegations very prolix, being also read the abridgement thereof by the learned Kemaluddin, and many other Briefes: I gathered a History out of them, contracting the words, but retaining the things and order, omitting no case or exploit of moment: beginning with the beginner of Islamisme of glorious memory, rehearsing his birth, genealogy, and all till he fled to Medina, and after that his warres, victories, and fortune till his death. I proceed in order with the orthodoxall Chaliph's observing the course of times and yeeres, adding the Kings of other Provinces and the occurrences of their times, according to the computation of the Hegira, unto the Reigne of Sultan Rucnaddin the Holy King of happy memory.

50 He first Emperor of the Muslemans was Muhammed Abulcassim of glorious memory. Muhammed Abulcassim (hisn Muhammed "Abugiasar) first manifested and observed the Religion of Islamisme:
hee was Sonne of Abdalla, which was the Sonne of Abdulmutalib, the Sonne of Hashim, the Sonne of Abdmenaf. His Mothers name was Emima, the Daughter of Wabeb, Sonne of Abdmenaf. Now Muhammed of glorious memory was borne in the stonie Valley of the Cirie of Mecca, early on a Munday morning the eighth of the former moneth Rab, in the 882. yeere of Alexander the Great. His Father dyed two months before he was borne, his Mother when he was sixe yeeres old. His Grandfather Abdulmutalib brought him vp till he was eight yeeres old, and then dyed aged 110. yeeres, after which 60 he was educated by his Vncle Abutalib. When hee was fortie yeeres old he was called (to the Prophetical office) on Munday the second of the former Rab, in the 922. of Alexander the Great; which was the twentieth of the Raigne of Cosroes Sonne of Hormisdan, Sonne of Nasferwan. The first that beleueed in his Prophesie was Chadigia his Vncles Daughter; the next was his seruant Zaid Sonne of Haruth, and after him Ali the Sonne of Abutalib, all of happy memory. After them were added Abubeker with five others, (all which were called by him to Islamisme) viz. Otfman Sonne of Affan, Zubeir Sonne of Awam, Abdurrhman Sonne of Aufi, Saad Sonne of Abuwaccas and Oberdalla Sonne of Algiarab. These nine were the first which entred Islamisme.

Hij doctrine.

In the foure and fortieth yeere of his age he manifested his vocation 1 for before hee only inuited men priuily to Islamisme. And publishing his vocation, he commanded to beleue in God alone and him to worship and adore; he destroyed Idolatry, commanded Circumcision, established the Fast of the moneth Ramadan, the five Prayings, Cleannesse, Pilgrimage to the Temple of Mecca; that Bloud should not be eaten, nor that which dyeth alone, nor Swines flesh. And those which obserued not these things, he vexed with warre and fought against them. The Christians also came to him both Arabs and others, and hee received them into his fidelity, giuing them a writing of Securitie. So also the Iewes, Magi, * and Pagans and others which performed to him oath of fidelity, obtained of him free libertie, but on condition to pay tribute and poll-monie. He commanded also to beleue the truth of the Prophets and Apostles, and of the Bookes sent to them. Also that Christ the Sonne of Mary is the Spirit of God, and his Word and Apostle, and he approved the Gospell and the Law of Moses. The Coraisites would not consent touching these things, but resisted him valiantly and defied him. But his Vncle Abutalib assisted him, and forbade that any man should approach to him with a Sword. 20

His enemies.

In the fifth yeere Omar the Sonne of Alcutab of happy memory beleueed and confirmed the other Muslims with his faith: they were then 39. and himselfe was the 40. In the eighth yeere the Coraisites writ a Decree that the children of Hafsem should not make league or be mixed with the children of Abutalib, and hanged it in the Temple of Mecca. In the tenth yeere Abutalib dyed, addited to the Religion of his (people) aged somewhat aboue eightie, and the Coraisites were confirmed, and their power and hope increased. The same yeere the Prophet of glorious memory made an expedition to Tajifa, and invited the Inhabitants to Islamisme, but they yielded not to him, and when hee had stayed there a moneth, he returned to Mecca. This yeere also he married the Daughter of Abubeker the Iust, and 30

His two wives. Ayia & Sewda. The conversion of Medina.

Sewda the Daughter of Zamaa.

In the thirteenth yeere certaine of Awam and Charax, viz. seuentie three men and two women came to him, which were sworne to him concerning Islamisme, and of these hee appointed twelue Doctores, after whose returne to Medina, Islamisme was spread amongst the Inhabitants thereof, and they became his helpers. The same yeere he commanded his to remove to Medina, and they all went thither except Abubeker and Ali which remained with him.

The History of the departure to Medina.

In the 14. yeere Mubammed of glorious memory removed to Medina, hauing with him Abubeker the Iust, and Amar the Son of Kamra the Seruant of Abubeker. And Abdalla the Son of Artac guided them. But Ali remained behind with his leaue three dayes to dispose his businesse, and then came to him. He entred Medina on Munday noone (others say on Thursday) the twelfth of the former Rab. and abode with Chalid Abub Sonne of Zaid till hee built the Temple and Houle into which he then entred. And from this yeere is reckoned the computation of the Hegira, which was the 54. yeere of the age of Mubammed of glorious memory. 40

* The Hegira or flight of M. fell out on the 16. of Iuly, A.D. 622. Fatima D. of M. married to Ali his Vncles Sonne. A.D. 62. which began Iuly 5. 623.

His flight skirmishes which after grew to great battell. A.D. 63. which began Iune 24. A.D. 624.

The first yeere of the Hegira, Ali the Son of Abutalib married Fatima. The same yeere Mubammed of glorious memory gaue a white Banner to his Vncle Hamza (this was the first Banner which he gaue to any) and sent with him thirty Muslims; but hee performed little. In the second yeere was fought the second Battell of Badra, and the greatest, in which diuers valiant Leaders of the Coraisites were slaine; on Friday the seuenteenth of the moneth Ramadan. For he had heard that Abusofian the Sonne of Haruth was going into Syria with many packes, in which were monies of the Coraisites, for the spoile whereof he went, But Abusofian with his got to Mecca. The Muslims were three hundred and nineteen in number, the Infidels betwixt nine hundred and a thousand, and the Muslims ouercame, and slue seuentie of the vnbeleueers, and tooke as many. But of the Muslims only fourteen were slaine. There were other Battells also this yeere. 50

In the third yeere of the Hegira he besieged the Iewes in their Forts fiftene dayes, and they yielded: hee captured them and spoiled their goods. The same yeere hee sent a band of men to slay Caab Sonne of Abrafas a Iew. And that yeere was fought a Battell on Saturday about the midst of the moneth Sawal, and the Hill neere Medina was taken. The number of the Infidels was three thousand footmen, and two hundred horsemen, three thou. 60 thousand Camels and fifteene women. Their Captaine was Abusofian Sonne of Harib. The Mullims were a thousand, the first had the better, but after the Infidels, which lue 70. Mullims, amongst which was Hamza Sonne of Abdummalib. This was an unlucky day, in which M. of glorious memory was also present in the Battell, and was wounded by Ochab the Sonne of Abumugid, and lost one of his right foreteeth, and was hurt on the lower lip. Abdalla, also the Sonne of Stebab wounded his forehead: his vpper iaw also was wounded, and two of his foreteeth fell out. Of the Infidels were slaine two and twentie.

M. wounded.

A.H. 4, which began June 13. 625.

A.H. 5, June 2; 626.

In the fourth yeere happened the Battell of the Iewes, Sonnes of Nadir, which leauing their fortifications went out of their limits and came to Chaibar, and some of them went into Syria. Mundir Sonne of Omar the Saadite pursued them to the Well of Muauia with 70. Medinans, and slue them all, but Caab Son of Zeidi: which escaped. The last Battell of Badra was fought this yeere. In the fift yeere was the Battell of Fessa or the Dike. Many Nations were gathered together, the Corasites, and the children of Fessa or the Dike. Many Nations were gathered together, the Corasites, and the children of Fessa, of Nadir, of Gafsan, and of Selim: their Leaders were Habb Sonne of Abiab, Salam Sonne of Abnlbakik, and other Iewes. And Iseph Sonne of Harib came to lead the Corasites and their followers with ten thousand men. Ouer the men of Gafsan was Abbas Sonne of Hafan the Karatite and others. Selman the Persian was author of digging the Ditch. The Infidels besieged them about twenty dayes: after which Naim Sonne of Majud the Gafsanite embracing 10. milime procured the disioyning of those Nations, and the breach of league twixt them and the Iewes: They fled thence, sixe Mullims and three Infidels being slaine. In this yeere happened the Battell of the children of Coraid, against whom Mahammed went forth and besieged them five and twenty dayes. They were forced to yeld to Saad Sonne of Maad, who counselled to slay all the men, and to make captiue the women and children: so that sixe or seuen hundred were beheaded, and buried in the Market place of Medina, the Mullims sharing their wives, children and goods. Saad dyed of a wound before gotten at the Dike-battell.

In the sixt yeere was ordaind the Prayer for obtaining health, in Hadita, and many Battels were fought, amongst others that of the children of Mustalak, whom he met in Safan. With them was Ginevira daughter of Harib, whom M. of glorious memory married, in reed of dowry freeing diuers of her captiued Kindred. This yeere also was fought the Battell of Haditia, a place neere Mecca, in the way to Giudda. After that peace was made betwixt him and the Corasites that for ten yeeres they might plow, and it was free for euerie man to take part with them, or with M. on condition that if any Corasite without leaue of his Captaine fled to M. he should bee sent backe; but if any of M. his followers fled without leaue to the Corasites he should not be sent backe to him. If M. with his Souldiers should passe that way, he might stay three dayes; hee should see no other Armes but those which Trauellers vse, and that also in the Scabberds. This truce was made by Sabulum Sonne of Omar the Amirite, and written by Ali Sonne of Abutalib of happy memory. In that yeere he was inaugurated vnder a tree which after perished, carried away by ouerflowing of waters, as was reported.

In the seuenth yeere M. of glorious memory, tooke to him a Pulpit. And it is reported, that his Wife said to him, I haue a workman to my Sonne, shall I bid him make thee a Pulpit? He answered yea. And he made him a Pulpit of wild Tamariske, or as others say, of white Tamariske; it consisted of two steps and a seat. Before this Pulpit was made, when he prayed in the Temple he leaned on a prop of wood. This Pulpit remayned to the Reigne of Muauia Sonne of Abusofian, which added fixe steps to it, and it was not altered after. Orsman Sonne of Affan first covered it with a Carpet. This yeere also was fought the Battell of Chaibar and M. tooke many Forts and possessed their Riches. Hee strictly besieged two Castles, Wauia and Selalma, that they were forced to sue to him to spare their liues, and to let them remayne in their Countrey, which he granted, on condition to pay yeerely halfe their Dates, and to be at his pleasure cast forth. The Inhabitants of Badra hearing this concluded on like conditions, to which he yelded. The Iewes also remayned vnder the same league vntill the Raigne of Omar Sonne of Abutalib: who after that he vnderstood that M. of glorious memory, had said in his sicknesse, that two Religions might not concur in Araba, he cast them thence. The same yeere Zenaba Daughter of Albaris a Ieweise brought him a poysoned Sheepe, of which eating he said, this ioyn tells me that it is poysoned.

In the eight yeere he tooke Mecca. For the Corasites had broken their league, and M. went against them with ten thousand Mullims til he came to Marwuttahran, and his Vncle Abbas Sonne of Abdummalib came to him with Abusofian, Sonne of Harib, and beleued. And he said, He which shall enter the house of Abusofian shall be secure, and he which shall shut his doore shall be safe. And he entred Mecca without Battell, and all the people thereof beleued, except a few which he slue. It was taken the one and twentieth of Ramadan.

The Battell of Honania a famous Valley was fought this yeere. For when the Hawazines had had vnderstood that Mecca was taken, they assembled to Melis Sonne of Auf, the Tekians adjoyning themselves with their wives and goods. M. went out against them with twelve thousand men, and the victorie at first was with the Infidels, but after the Mullims prevailed, which put them to flight and spoyled their goods, which were fixe thousand Ekine, foure and twenty thousand Goats, forty thousand Sheepe, and foure thousand ounces of Silver: 90. of the Tekians were slaine and but foure Mullims. The captiues and spoiles were gathered together at Giaran, whither hauing besieged Tajifa and left it, he came and was sought to by the Embassadors of the Hawazines for the restitution of their wives, saying they were his Ants; whereupon he gave them the choise of their wives and children, and of their wealth. They chose their wives and children which hee deliuered. The same yeere Melis Sonne of Auf, came to him to Giaran and beleued, whereupon hee restored him his goods. He set ouer Mecca Gaiat Sonne of Asid.

A.H.9. April 30

In the ninth yeere was fought the battell of Tebur, and M. made peace with the Prince of Dauma and the Prince of Eila on condition to pay him tribute. Hauing staid ten dayes at Tebur, he departed to Medina, in the moneth Regieb. And that was his last warre in which Oisman Sonne of Affan bestowed a thousand pieces of Gold on his Army. This yeere the Tajfians embraced Islamisme, ouer whom he set Oisman Sonne of Abulafi, and he sent Abusofian to destroy their warlike prouisions.

In the tenth yeere the Arabes came to him very frequent, and men embraced Islamisme, and his word was confirmed. The same yeere Musuleima the false Prophet rebelled, which said he was his fellow Prophet, and was followed by his friends the children of Hanifa, of Jamama. The same yeere M. of glorious memory went on Pilgrimage to Mecca, into which he entred the tenth day of Dulhuggia, and when he had taught men and instructed them in Religion, he returned to Medina.

In the eleuenth yeere appeared the false Prophet Aswad, the Abite in Arabia Felix, and said he was a Prophet, and tooke Sanaa, Naxran and the Countrey of Tajiff; and when he grew famous, Fir Dailam slue him in his house. The same yeere Muhammed of glorious memory dyed. For hauing returned from his Pilgrimage to Mecca, and staid at Medina till the eight and twentieth day of the moneth Safar, he began to be sicke; and he commanded Abubecr to pray with the people, and they prayed seuentene Prayers. Hee was of very good wit, of a pleasant voice, visiting and intertaining his which visited and entertained him, liberall to the poore, lauding the Great men, conuersing with the meane, and not repelling any Sutor without his request or a kind answer. His Scribes were Oisman Sonne of Affan and Ali, Sonne of Abutalib. Sometimes also Vubarat Sonne of Caab and Zaid, Sonne of Thebn writ for him, Muanias also, Cbalid, Alau and Chantal. Abdalla Sonne of Abusferb writ likewise for him, which Apostated from Islamisme to the Infidels, but Oisman in time of victory sued for his pardon, which M. granted, hauing before determined to shed his blood. Zubeir Sonne of Awan and Giehem Sonne of Safuan writ downe his Almes; Hadihu Son of Semal his store of Dates; Mugirai Son of Seicab and Husein Son of Iaman his Iudicials and Imperials; Abdalla Sonne of Akam answered to the Letters of Princes. Muhammed dyed according to the Arabian computation in the yeere of the Sunne from Adam 6123. nine moneths and fourtee dayes; ten yeeres of the Hegira (reckoned according to the course of the Moone) and seuentie dayes being past; that is nine yeeres of the Sunnes course, eleven moneths, one day lesse; 3614. dayes in all; the first of which was Thursday, the last Munday.

to Christians.

The Histories of the Christians write that he was gentle toward Christians, and when some of them had come to him and desired security, hee imposed tribute on them, blessed them, receiued them into his tuition, and commanded Omar to say to them, we haue their soules in the same account that we haue our owne soules, and their riches as our riches, and their chances as ours. The Author of the Booke Alimbadab writeth this, and from him the famous man Abuhanifa citeth it, treating of a Muslin killing a Christian. And when a certaine great man, a Christian, came to him, hee role and did him reuerence, and answered to one questioning it, When any principall man of any people come to you, honour him. Hee said also, Doe good to the Copbits of Egypt, for they are of kinne to you. He which opposeth a

- In the first yeere * of the Hegira, Siabir the Persian tooke Ancyra from the Romans and the Ile of Rhodes, capturing the Inhabitants. In the second Cesroes Sonne of Hormisdas persecuted all which contradicted his Religion thorow his Kingdom, imposing grieuous tributes, and destroying all the Temples of Syria and Mesopotamia, carrying away all their Gold, Silver and goods, euen to the Marble, into his Countrey. In the third yeere, Siabir beat downe Constantinople, but departed frustrate. The same yeere, Cesroes oppressed the Romans, and caused them to forsake the Orthodoxe Sect, and to become Iacobites. For his Physician named Ionan, a Iacobite, perswaded him that so long as they were Orthodoxe * they would incline so the Romans. He therefore decreed that they should either bee slaine or else become Iacobites, which they all did. In the fift yeere of the Hegira, Cesroes was deprived by his Subjects for his tyrannies after he had reigned thirty eight yeere, and his Sonne Kobad set in his place, called also Syroes, the Sonne of Mary Daughter of Mauritius the Roman Emppour which carried himselfe well, and was renowned for iustice: but after eight months Raigne he and most of his people perished by Pestilence. His Sonne Ardysir succeeded, and after five monthes was slaine. In the sixt yeere Siabir not of the Royall race, obtained the Persian Soueraintie: whereupon a woman of Royall blood laid waite and slue him when he had reigned two and twentie dayes. Cesroes Nephew of Hormisdas succeeded, who after three monthes was slaine at Choroslan. After him Turana Daughter of Cesroes 20 raigne a yeere and halfe. In the fourth yeere of the Hegira Siabir had subiected himselfe to Heracius, because Cesroes on some complaints, had written to Marzuban, to entrap and kill both him and his Sonne the Commander of the Army, which Letter and Carrier being intercepted by Heracius, and by him presented to Siabir, he and the other Captaines libelled themselves to Heracius, who thereupon invaded Persia, and writ to Chosro King of 30 Harari to helpe him with forty thousand Horsemen, promising him his Daughter in marriage: Thus Heracius preyed in Syria, Egypt and Armenia, against the Cities and forces of the Persians there. Cesroes made Marzuban, (called also Zurabbar) his Generall, who marched into the Prouince of Mauid. Heracius had at Ruha three hundred thousand Horsemen, and from the tract of the Harari forty thousand were coming to him, which slayed in the Prouince of Adertigiana by his command till hee came thither. Having subdued Armenia, he went to Ninus. Zurabbar and hee fought a great battell, and the Persians had the worke, about five hundred thousand of them being slaine, with Zurabbar himselfe. Hereupon Cesroes forsooke Machura and Medajin, Cities presently possessed by Heracius and burned, enjoying the Kings treasures. After this Syroes Sonne of Cesroes got out of Prison and slaying his Father succeeded him (as before is related) Heracius came to the Village Themamin, which Noah of holy memory builded after he passed out of the Arke, and that he might see the place of the Arke, he ascended the mountaine Giudi, which is high ouer all those lands; Thence he passed into Amida, where Syroes made peace with him, conditioning to restore to the Romans all which his Father had taken from them. Heracius returned to Ruha, and 40 commanded the Christians to returne from the Iacobite Sect to the Orthodoxe, which they did. Ardysir hauing succeeded, Cesroes was slaine by Siabir, against whom Marzuban gathered forces, and the Persians were diuided in two parts: Siabir was slaine and Cesroes succeeded, and when he was slaine, Turana, to whom Gushasped Sonne of Cesroes his Vnkle succeeded, who being depouled, Azurmis daughter of Cesroes obtayned, which after a yeere and foure monthes was poysoned. Perchozad Sonne of Cesroes succeeded and was shortly slaine. In the tenth of the Hegira, the Sonne was so eclipsed that the Stars were seene by day.

- Abubeer* the Iust or Abdalla Sonne of Oisfan Abucabaf, Sonne of Amir, Sonne of Omar, 50 Sonne of Caab. His mothers name was Asna daughter of Sachar, Sonne of Amir, Sonne of Omar, Sonne of Caab. He was created Chalifa the same day on which the Prophet dyed. The men of Medina assembled to inaugurate Saad Sonne of Obad, one of themselves, and some of them said, let vs haue an Emperour of vs, and make you an Emperour of you O Fugitiues. * But when Abubeer of happy memory had prayd God and celebrated, he laid to them, O men of Medina, take whether of these you will, and laid hold on Omar and Abu-berid. But with multiplied cries and words Omar said to Abubeer, stretch forth thy hand that we may sweare fealty to thee, which hee did, and both the Medina men and fugitiues sware to him, Alicony and the Hafsemites excepted, which would not by striking of the hand approve his Empire; which yet at last, seeing themselves forsaken, they did. The same 60 yeere (Heg. 11.) the Arabians rebelled and some refused to pay tribute, and Musilema the false Prophet prospered. Taliba also the Sonne of Chirwaler said he was a Prophet, and was followed by the Afidiites. Newes came also of the death of Aswad Ihsa a false Prophet, which which was Abubecr his first victory. He chased also the Abrites and Dibans, and returned to Medina. Hee sent to warre against the Rebels, and delivered eleven Banners for eleven Traitors, Chalid Sonne of Walid was sent against Taliba, and his Complices the Garitanes, Tajites, and Aledites, and overcame them. Thegiagis also daughter of Harith professed herselfe this yeere a Prophetesse amongst the Taalabites, and went to Musfelema, and was married to him, but when he had staid with him three dayes he returned home. Abubecr sent Iktima Sonne of Abugabl against Musfelema, with others. They met in Iaman. The Muslims were forty thousand, which had the worke at first, but after preuayled and slue Musfelema with ten thousand of his followers: the rest returned to Islamisme. He sent Alana against the Rebels of Bahrain, who chased them, forced some to returne, and slue those which continued in their Apostasie. Alana passed also the Sea, and slue all the Inhabitants of Darina.

In the twelfth yeere Abubecr writ to Chalid to goe to Irac, who made a peace with them, and the Inhabitants of Sawad on condition of tribute, which was the first tribute brought to Medina. He fought many battels and slue a great multitude of Infidels, and got innumerable spoylees.

In the thirteenth yeere Abubecr sent forces into Syria, and sent Amir into Palestine, Iesid and others into Balcaa, and the higher Syria, and Chalid Sonne of Said to Teimaa. Chalid fought a battell in Syria, with Mahan a Roman Commander, and chased him to Damascus; where the Romans in the Sapphire Valley slue his Sonne with many others. Abubecr sent Muani with fresh supplies, and made Chalid Sonne of Walid ouer the Souldiers in Syria, and commanded him to goe from Irac thither which hee did with nine thousand. This yeere Bosra was taken the first of the Cities in Syria. The same yeere died Abubecr of happy memory. On Friday the three and twentieth of the later Giumad, having enioyed the Chalid Alchittab two yeeres, foure monethes and nine dayes, aged sixty three, and Omar the Sonne of Alchittab prayed for him. He was buried in the house of Aijfa. He was abstinent, deuout, and regarded not the goods of the World. He is reported to haue taken three Staters out of the treasury for wages, and to haue said to Aijfa of happy memory, See O Prophetesse what hath accrewed to the wealth of Abubecr; since I haue bene ouer this Empire, and repay it to the Muslims. And she saide: And whatt they had payed all his substance, the value of all was but five Staters. Which when it was told Omar, he said, God haue mercy on Abubecr, for he hath compelled his Successors to vndergoe labour. This Abubecr first gathered the Alcoran out of Tables. For when the Muslims in Iaman were crossed, he feared lest some of the Alcoran might be lost, being only in mens memories, and in sheets betwixt Tables; and he called it Mulhaf. Euerie Friday hee distributed that which was collected in the Treasury to his Captaines according to their places: first to the Souldiers, and after to the learned men, and to such as had by their labour merited any thing. The Persians in the eleventh yeere of the Heg, came to him about the slaughters of their Kings and seditions, and desired Saadeh Sonne of Cesrees which had fled from Sirees, and made him King ouer them being fiftene yeeres old. But their affections and assemblies were differing, and the Prouinces, Townes and Villages warred on their Neighbours, and were deuided amongst themselves. In the thirteenth yeere happened a great Earth-quake thirty dayes, and a great Pestilence followed. The Muslims that yeere besieged Gaza and chased the Romans, which they signified by Letters to Abubecr who was then dead. God haue mercy on him.

Omar Sonne of Alchittab, Sonne of Nokail, Sonne of Abdullaziz, Sonne of Riab, Sonne of Cart, Sonne of Ramah, Sonne of Adi, Sonne of Caab, Sonne of Lua, Sonne of Galib, was designed Chalifa on the day of Abubecr his death, and by his command. In this thirteenth yeere Omar of happy memory sent Abuobeid Sonne of Musad against the Persians, whom he overcame in Hira, slaying many Infidels; but in a second battell he was slaine with many Muslims. After that was the battell of Buwaibic, in which the Infidels were overthrowen.

In the fourteenth yeere Damascus was taken by Chalid Sonne of Walid, forcefully entering (after seventy dayes siege) at the Thomas-gate, and Abuobeid with conditions of peace at the Custome-gate. Omar sent Saad against Irac which had many battels with the Persians in Cadis: the Persians were a hundred and twenty thousand, the Muslims thirty thousand. They walked about by *Omar*s command Bosra and Cusa.

In the fiftenth yeere, the Romans assembled to the number of two hundred and fecty thousand Infidels, and the Muslims were thirty fixe thousand which preuayled, as in many other battels this yeere. Emissa became tributary, Kinnasrin was taken.

In the sixteenth yeere Omar went into Syria, having made Ali Gouverneur of Medina. He made agreement with Ariene Prince of Ramla, and sent Amru and Sergil to besiege Ierusalem, to whom Omar granted security and imposed tribute; Having subdued Palestina he sent Amru into Egypt. This yeere Saad wanne Medajina, Colrose, and with his Muslims possessed the treasures of Colrose: and are said to have found 3000 Millions of gold. And they found a house full of Camphora which the Muslims tooke for Salt, and vied it in linen, which made their bread bitter. They found the Crowne of Cosroes, and garments wrought with gold and gemmes, and diuers armes, and the hanging of a gallery which Said rent and made thereof a thousand drammes, each dramme being ten Staters. They found also a silken Carpet sixty Cubits long and as many broad, wrought with figures and gemmes like flowers: on the border was the resemblance of the earth set with herbs and flowers, as in the Spring, made of gold, silver and gemmes. Omar rent it and diuided it to the Muslims. Ali sold his share of it (none of the greatest) for twenty thousand. This yeere was fought the battell of Gialul with the Persians, whose last King Saxdegird died to Farjan. This yeere Omar of happy memory returned to Medina.

In the euentienth yeere of the Hegira, the King of Romans besieged Emissa, and Omar sent Abubrid forty thousand men for succour, which chased away the Romans. Omar the same yeere went into Syria, and subdued it. In the eighteenth yeere Amru the sonne of Alah besieged Misra and tooke it. It was gouerned by Macnac, which conditioned with Amru that euery Egyptian should pay an Egyptian peece of Gold, and to entertaine three dayes euery Muslim which passed that way. And the tribute imposed on them yearly amounted to twelue millions of gold. After that Omar went to Marbut where were many Romans, and expelled them, as also at Cumferie, and then besieged Alexandria. That yeere was a yeere of destruction through haile which spoyled the ground and killed cattell. There was a Pestilence which killed five and twenty thousand Muslims there, and diuers of the chiefeest.

In the nineteenth yeere Heraclius died, whiles Amru besieged Alexandria, which was taken in the twentieth yeere after fourteene moneths siege. The same yeere Amru compassed Misra with a wall, called Fustata, that is, the Tent, because his Tent was there pitched before he went to the siege of Alexandria: and a Doue hauing hatched her young therein, hee said, it is unlawfull for vs to kill in the moneth Mubarram, and gaue his Captaines charge therewith.

In the one and twentieth was the Nubawendik battell betwixt the Muslims and Persians, wherein the Generall Nueman was slaine, and Hodajsa succeeded, which after turned the Infidels to flight. Mugir possessed Aderbigian quietly, and Amru Sonne of Said, got Ainerwad and Harraan and Ruha; Asa Sonne of Isa got Raca, Nafsin and the parts adioyning; Abumasa also tooke Ahwaz and Seiwaz. The same yeere Chorasán was wonne by Nueman before the battell abouesaid.

In the thire and twentieth yeere Omar of happy memory was slain by Abubulus seruant to Mugir a Persian by Nation, and by Religion a Magus, because he iudged against him, complaining of too much tribute exacted. Whiles Omar was at his morning Prayer, on Wednesday the three and twentieth of Dulbiggia, hee stabbed him in three places, one of them vnder his Nauill whereof he died. And Abdurrahman Sonne of Auf prayed with the people. Omar was carried to his house, and he commanded Sabib to pray three dayes with the people, and secretly assigned the Empire to sixe persons, to Ali Sonne of Abulabb, Otfman, Said, Abdurrahman, Talba and Zubeir, of happy memory. Hee made his Sonne Abdalla a Counsellour only, without any place of command. He dyed the sixe and twentieth of Dulbiggia and Sabib prayed for him (or in his stead.) He was buried in the house of Aijsa. Hee was browne, bald, tall, iust, pious, abinent: hee first reckoned the computation of yeeres 50 after the Hegira, and subscribed Letters: hee first was called Emperour of the faithfull. Hee first vied the similitude of the Ant and her burthen. Hee first assembled men together vnder one Prince in the moneth Ramadan. His Scribes were Abdalla, Zeid and Almal, and Ali: his Iudges, at Medina, Iezid, at Cufa Abumasa: his Portor Iezid: his Seale, that of the Prophet. He reigned ten yeeres of the Moone, and 178. dayes, 6136. yeere of the Sunne being complet. He distributed euery Friday the treasure to his Captaines according to their necessitie; not, as Abubacr, according to their dignity: saying, that the Worlds goods were given to repell the Worlds evils.

The Christian Stories tell that when Omar had taken Ierusalem, he wrote them this letter of security, In the name of the mercifull mercy-shewing God, Of Omar Son of Alchictab, to the people of the Citie Aelia granted securitie of their persons, wives, children, goods, and Temples, that they be not destroyed nor vnoccupied. At the house of Prayer he would not pray in the Temple, but alone, at the Steps before the doore: & writ then a priuledge that no Muslim should pray pray at the steps but alone, & that no assembly should there be made for publike Prayers. He prayed also at Bethleem at the Arch where Christ was borne, and writ a Priuledge that no Muslim should pray there, but one after another without publike assembly. When Alexandria was taken Ammar writ to Omar, I have taken a Citie containing foure thousand Baths, twelue thousand Herb-sellers, foure thousand tributary Jewes, and foure hundred * Ieffers. Omar writ to him to make a Riuer from thence to Calenna for carriage of Corne, & thence to be transported by Sea to Medina; which he did, and it was called the Emperours Riuer. Ammar tooke Barca and Tripolis: he writ to the Patriarke of the Iacobites, Beniamin, a letter of Security, whereupon he returned with great ioy, hauing bene absent from his See thirteene yeeres. When Heraclius was dead, Constantine his Sonne reigned fixe monethes, and was killed by his stepmother: Heraclius succeeded and was soone depoeled. Constantine followed.

OTSMAN Sonne of Affan, Sonne of Abulaz, Sonne of Ommia, Sonne of Abdujannas, Sonne of Abdumenas, Sonne of Cuda, was the fourth Emperour of the Muslims. His mothers name was Arwia Daughter of Kerir, whose mother was Bifa Daughter of Abdumutalib. Abdurrabman renounced the right which hee had with the rest which were designed, on condition, that he might chuse the Emperour, wherewith all were pleased but Ali, which after yielded. He named Otsman.

In the foure and twentieth yeere Mugra tooke Bir and Hamsan, and Muanis tooke many Cities of the Romans.

In the seuen and twentieth yeere, Abdalla Sonne of Said Gouvernour of Egypt invaded Africa, slue the King and possessed his State. Muanis also tooke Cyprus. Otsman sent Abdalla and Said into Chorsan, promising the gouernment to him which first came thither. They tooke many Townes, and Abdalla returned not till he had drunke of the riuer Balcha.

In the one and thirtieth yeere, Isandgyrd the last of the Persian Kings lost his life, and their glory vanished, and their Kingdomes were possessed by the Muslims. That yeere also Abdalla Sonne of Said invaded Nubia, and the King made peace, promising many captiues.

In the two and thirtieth yeere, Abbas Sonne of Abdalmutalib dyed, one of the chiefe of the Corasites; and if he passed by Omar or Otsman, they would alight off their horses to doe him honour. Abdurrabman Sonne of Aufdyed that yeere, who gaue to euery man of Badra five hundred pieces of Gold (which were a hundred) and his goods were diuided into sixtene portions, euery of which contayned eighty thousand peeces of Gold.

In the three and thirtieth yeere, Salman the Persian dyed aged, two hundred fifty sixe yeeres, others say, three hundred and fifty. Anus 35. many aculations were laid against Otsman, for bringing backe to Medina Hakem, whom the Prophet of glorious memory had expelled, for depoeing Said, and substituting Ocba which was a drinker of wine, and an adulterer, for giuing to Merman his Kinsman five African talents, that is, 504000. pieces of Gold, &c. he had borrowed ten thousand Staters, which he repayed vpon sute of Law, and after would haue borrowed againe, but the Treasurer refused and declared it to the Muslims, Otsman on Friday prayed in the Temple before the people, and said, O God, I saks thee to witness, that I am truly penitent. Yet the stirres encreased, and many assembled to depoe Otsman, who sent to them to Medina to appeale to the Law of God (so they call the Alcoran) and the doctrine of his Prophet. At last, Abubekker sonne of Abutbeer killed him; in his bosome was the Alcoran, on which fell one drop of blood; hee reigned twelue yeeres lacking eight dayes. He was faire, long-bearded, much in fasting, prayer and meditation of the Alcoran: he left five hundred millions of Staters, one hundred and fifty thousand pieces of gold. His promotion of his Kindred caused his depriuation. His Seale was inscribed, I beleeue in God the Creator and Administrator.

Ali the fifth Emperour, was sonne of Abnalsib, the Sonne of Abdalmutalib, sonne of Hakem, sonne of Abdumenas, sonne of Cuda. His mother was Fatima Daughter of Asid, Son of Hakem. He was created Chalife the same day that Otsman was slaine. An. 36. Zubeir and Talba went to Mecca, to frustrate the choise of Ali, and said they required the blood of Otsman. And Aijfia was at Mecca when Otsman was slaine, and hearing of Ali succession, enuied men against him, saying, Otsman was slaine wrongfully: By God I will require his blood. Ali answered, where is the mother of the Dog! alleging that he gaue charge to slay him, and called him Infidell. She replied, They conuerted him and then killed him, Aijfia, Talba and Zubeir went from Mecca with a great Armie, and tooke Basra. Ali from Medina with twenty thousand, fought with them being thirty thousand, and slue Talba and Zubeir, and put to flight Aijfia Souldiers. Seuentie hands are related to be cut off from the bridle of the Camell on which Aijfia rode one after another, and the Camell stucke with Arrows like a Hedgehogge, his legs cut off, and Aijfia taken, Ali sent her to Medina with seuentie women in mens habit. Hauing thus overcome the people of the Camell, he went to Cufa, and there

Note the cause why Iacobitisme persecuted with other Heresies in the E. st. partly because the politick Infidels thus secured themselves by diuersion of religion against the Romanes guard; the circumcised Muslims (assuaged the politick Infidels) thus secured the circumcised Captiues Bir atowine on the Riuer Euphrate. An. 37. they had ninety battells in a hundred and ten dayes ; to euery of which Ali pre-strong night, in which night were slaine seuentie thousand on both sides. And when day appeared, Amrus warned Muani that they should lift vp their Alcorans on their Speares which they did and cryed, This Book of God be betweene vs and you : whereupon the men of Irac threatned to kill Ali, if hee would not listen to the Syrians according to the iudge-ment of Gods Booke, and so Muani escaped. At last both sides agreed to chuse an arbitrator which should arbitrate according to that Booke, which were chosen Amrus and Abnmusfa, and both parties bound to stand to their agreement. They agreed to depose both Ali and Muani, and chuse Abdalla Sonne of Omar. Ali was deposed accordingly, but when Amrus should haue done the like to Muani, he refused. Abdalla Son of Wabab had also tor-sent to Medina by Muani, and entred it; the Inhabitants acknowledged Muani. Thence he went to Mecca, then to Aliaman, and slue two of Ali his Sonnes with many others which followed the part of Ali; after which he returned to Mecca, and slue at Tajji, Iamam and Medina thirty thousand. At last Peace was concluded betwixt them, that laying aside armes, Ali should enioy Irac, and Muani Syria. That yeere three Chawarigians agreed to kill in diuers places on one day Ali, Muani and Amrus also : Hagag wounded Muani with a poysoned Sword, but he was slaine and Muani escaped, Amrus another of them mistooke and killed Charigia the Lieutenant of Amrus Sonne of Alai in steed of him, and was therefore taken and executed. Abdarrabman the third wounded Ali on the forehead as he went to morning Prayer, on a Friday the seuenteenth of Ramadan, whereof he dyed three dayes after : and was buried in Tahaf, where now is the place of his buriall. Some say he was buried at Cu-ta, and some say the place is vnknowne. Ali commanded to feed his smiter (for hee was taken) and vsf him well ; and if he recovered, to spare him; if hee dyed, to ioyne him with him that he might accuse him before God. He reigned fve yeeres three moneths lesse, aged sixty three. He was browne, short, great-bellied, long-bearded and neglected things of the World, feared God much, much in Almes, iust and lowly, witty, defender of the true Religion, learned in speculatiue and praeticke Sciences, bold, liberrall. The inscription of his Seale was, Only to the strong God dominion.

enjoyed the place nineteene yeeres and ninetie foure dayes, Obeid Sonne of Sarib liued in his time, a man three hundred yeeres old.

Iezid was created Chalsfa the same day. He writ to Walid Gouvernour of Medina, to apprehend Husein Sonne of Ali and Abdalla, which fled to Mecca, and abode there refusing the Oath to Iezid. The Cusans sent to Husein, and promised to sweare to him. Husein going either with fifty horse and a hundred foot, was set on by the band of Obeidalla sent thither by Iezid. He on the Friday set before him the Musfuf, and admonished them. But they rushed on him, and slue him and all his company, and carried away their wiues and children.
Iezid commanded his head to be set vp at Damascus on the gate. The same yeere Abdalla

Sonne of Zubeir vsurped the Empire at Mecca, whiles Iezid followed his wine and dogges contemning Religion. Iezid let ouer Chorasán Selm, which tooke Naislbur and Chouarasma, and Bchara then ruled by Chatumia a woman, who promised the King of Saida marriage if he would assit her against the Mullims, who thereupon came with 120000. but was slaine in battell, and enriched the Mullims with spoyles. They went to Samarcand, the King whereof bought his Peace with much money. A.63. the men of Medina deposed Iezid, who sent against them Muslim, who spared them three dayes, and then entered and spoyled them three dayes, shedding their blood, and carrying away their goods. Yee the Prophet of glorious memory said, He which spoyleth my City, my wrath remaineth on him. A.64. Muslim went to Mecca against Abdalla, and dyed in the way. Hafsin succeeded in his place, layd siege to it, beate the house with Engines of battery and burned it. This sieg continued till newes came of Iezids death. His Sonne Muawi prayed for him: (or in his stead) heereigned three yeeres nine moneths, Anno mundi 6175.

Muawi Sonne of Iezid the third Emperour of the house of Ommia, was created Chalife the same day, and reigned forty five dayes and then dyed. His Seale was inscribed, The World is deceit. Abdalla Sonne of Zubeir was inaugurated at Mecca, when there had beene no Chalif two monthes. The Iracans, Egyptians and some Syrians sware to him. Merman of the house of Ommia raised a party at Damascus, and preuayled in battell against Dabas which stood for Abdalla, slue him and chased his followers. Hee held Syria, entred Egypt, and after many fights obtained it, sent an Army against Abdalla which got the better,

An.65. the Cufans made an vpror to reuenge the death of Hufsin, sixteene thousand being assembled vnder Suleman, which was slaine in battell by Obeidalla, and his followers chased. This yeere also Muchtar Sonne of Abuobeida, came to Cufa, and incited them to reuenge Hufsin of happy memory, for which the Gouvernour imprisoned him: Merman dyed of the Plague in the moneth Ramadan. Some say that his Wife prysioned him, others that she laid a Pillow on his face and sate thereon, Abdulmelic Son of Merman prayed k for him. He was Chalifa ten moneths, or 298. dayes.

Abdulmelic was inaugurated the same day, holding the Mulbas in his bosome. The same sixty fifth yeere hee enlarged the Temple at Ierusalem, and men began to goe thither in Pilgrimage: and hee forbade Pilgrimage to Mecca, because of Abdalla Sonne of Zubeir. Hee would haue perswaded the Christians of Damascus to yeeld him the house next the Cathedral Church, but they shewed the Charter of Walid, whereupon he offered them much money and liberty to build another like it where they would, but they refused & he left them.

A.66. arose Muchtar Sonne of Abuobeid at Cufa requiring the blood of Hufsin, to whom the Citizens sware and besieged Obeidalla, who obtained security of Muchtar, pretending that hee would call to the Empire Mubammed Sonne of Hanifa of happy memory: intending indeede to draw it to himselfe, having before done much spoyle on the Citizens. The same yeere the horsemen of Muchtar and Obeidalla had a cruell battell, and Obeidalla men ranne away. Then Muchtar sent to Ainwerd seven thousand horse vnder Ibrahim against Obeidalla, after whole departure the people of Cufa mutined against Muchtar, and had well neere slaine him, inso much that he sent backe for Ibrahim, who set vpon them with his Army, and slue two hundred and fifty of them which had warrd vpon Hufsin, and persecuted the rest wth death and exile. The same yeere Abdalla, Sonne of Zubeir cast Mubammed, Sonne of Hanifa, with seuentene of his house into Prison, and threatened to put them to death except they sware to him in such a space. Mubammed meane while sent to Muchtar, who sent him 150. horsemen which entred Mecca, crying, reuenge of Hufsin, and came to the Well Zemzem. They brake the Prison, and brought forth Mubammed, and received new supplies from Muchtar, and terrified the Sonne of Zubeir, whom Mubammeds company, being foure thousand, would haue assaulted, but hee permitted them not. An.67. Muchtar sent Ibrahim with seuentie thousand against Obeidalla, which slue 10300. of Obeidalla men; and tooke Singiar, Nasbin and Dara. Masab Son of Zubeir in his brothers name Gouvernour of Basra went that yeere with a great Army to Cufa against Muchtar, and after a great battell put him to flight and destroyed him and his in the moneth Ramadan. Masab having thus obeyed Irac, invited Ibrahim to obedience, which hee performed. Hee set Mahleb Sonne of Abusafa ouer Maasil, Melopotamia, Aderbigiana and Armenia. An.68. the Azrakæans came out of Persia into Irac (a Chariizen Nation) entred Medajin, tooke Ahwiz and the Countrey subiect to it. But Masab sent Mahleb which slue many of them, and after that Omar which fought with them at Naislbur and overthrew them, and they went backe to Isfahan and to Caymania, whence with increased forces, they returned but were forced backe by Omar, having before slaine the women and children.

Anno 69. Abdulmelic Sonne of Merman went from Damascus to make warre vpon Abdalla, Sonne of Zubeir, and substituted Omar Sonne of Saad at Damascus in his place, which

presently rebelled, and fortified himself: whereupon Abdulmelic returned and besieged Damascus. Omar sent to him and obtained security, but, when he came to him, he slue him, and quieted his partakers with distribution of money. Anno 71. Masab was slaine by Abdulmelic in battell, and he entered Cufa, and his Empire was established in Irac, Syria and Egypt: only Egiaz remayned in the haul of Abdalla. Sonne of Zubair, whom Hagiagi Son of Isephoone after besieged and slue at Mecca, which hee also tooke after seven moneths siege, and battered Caab the fortification of Abdalla with Engines, and threw into it balls of Pitch and fire to destroy the houles. When Abdalla teared the house (or Temple) left it should fall, he entered his owne house: his mother encouraged him to goe forth, if hee died, he should die a Martyr: he answered, O mother, I feare not death but dismembred. A sheepe, said she, when shee is killed, feedeth not the slaying. Hee is said to have drunke a pound of Muske, and then going forth to be slaine, and his head fastned on the gate: and his crucified body smelled of Muske many dayes. The same yeere Abdulmelic made his brother Mubammed, Sonne of Merman, Gouverour of Aderbigiana, Melopotamia and Armenia, who sent a hundred thousand against the Harari, which were all slaine. Mubammed much molested, went with forty thousand, and overthrew the Harari, and burned them in their Temples. He sent also Musluma to the Gate of Gates: where he besieged eighty thousand Harari, of whom he slue many, and the rest beleueed. The Azrakeans did and suffered much harme and change. Anno 74. Hagiagi was made Gouverour of Medina, who went to Mecca, and destroyed all the fortification of Caab: and Anno 75, was it touer Irac. He came to Cufa, and sent helpe to Mableh against the Azrakeans and chased them.

Anno 76. Salib, Sonne of Margi and Stahib Charisjean conspired, Salib was called Emperour of the faithfull by his followers. They spoiled Melopotamia, and increased in power, and often overthrew the Armies of Hagiagi, having but small forces. With a thousand hee went to Cufa, and overthrew Hagiagi, which came against him with fiftie thousand, and had the spoyle of his Tents. But in a Sea fight Salib ship funke, and he said, ben God disposesh any thing, it cometh to passe, and rising againe out of the water, he said, This is the power of the strong, and wisd God. He was drawne out with Nets, and his head sent to Hagiagi: his heart they cut in lunder, and found it hard and compact like a stone. Mableh went against the Azrakeans which withstood Carru (their Gouverour) and slue many of them. Carru fled to Tabristan whose King was Albid a Magus (that is, of the old Persian Religion) and obtained leave to enter his cuntry, which having obtained and settled his affaires, hee sent to Albid, demanding that either he would embrace Islamisme or pay tribute, which he refused. Whereupon he made warre on him, and chased Albid to Raijs, who got helpe of the Mullims, and Carru was slaine. The same yeere Coines of Gold and Staters were stamped with Arabicke Letters (for before the Letters were Roman, and the Staters also Persian) the inscription was, God is the Lord, Anno 81. Mubammed, Son of Hansa of happy memory died. But many of the vulgar beleue that he still liueth in the Mount Radwa, and will one day appeare and fill the Earth with Iustice, as it is now filled with iniquity. Of this Sect was
D. Hamirau, which after met with a true man, who instructed him of the vanity thereof.

Anno 82. Hagiagi had sent Abdurrahman, Sonne of Mubammed against Zenit King of Turkes with a small power, secretly animating the Turke against him, purposing to destroy him; which hee revealed to his followers, who thereupon depoled Hagiagi, and sware to him: He compounded with the Turke, and returned to warre on Hagiagi. Hee obtained aide of Abdulmelic, out of Syria. Basra and Cufa sware to Abdurrahman, and his Army was a 100000: Hagiagi and he made 81. fights in 100. dayes. Abdurrahman fled and was taken at Sahan, which Zenit hearing besieged Sahan and freed him. Hee assembled sixty thousand men, against whom went Said, and overcame them. Abdulmelic, Anno 86. made Walid partner of the league, and dyed after hee had reigned one and twentie yeeres and fiftene dayes. Walid his Sonne prayed for him. He was very courteous, and called Sweet-stone. Hee dreamed that he had pissed foure times in the chiefe Temple: consulting with Said, Sonne of Musabbib, he told him that foure of his children should reigne, which came to passe in Walid, Salemman, Iezid and Hisfem. His Seale was inscribed, I beleene in God our Saviour. In his time Simon Syrus was the Iacobite Patriarke of Alexandria, to whom the Indians sent to ordaine them a Bishop and Priests, which he refused till the Gouverour of Egypt commanded him; and then the Legate went to another which did it, whence arose great stirres.
After him was Alexander which endured hard times. Abdulmelic, brother of Abdulmelic, the Gouverour of Egypt exacted tribute of the Monks, of each a peece of Gold. This was the first tribute exacted of them. After his time Afama was more cruell, killing and spoyling the people, and branding the Monks with an Iron Ring in their hands, which round marke they which wanted had their hand cut off, of whom was a number innumerable. And whosoever trauelled without a Paffe, should pay ten peece of Gold or be slaine, which was exacted of a woman whose Paffe was in her Sonnes hand, whom as hee drunke of the Riuer, a Crocodile carried away, and the neuerthelesse was forced to sell her clothes and begge that payment. But Asama was taken and died by torment of his iron collar and wooden fetters in the way, at the command of Omar the Chalfi. But the persecution of Christians continued till the Raigne of Hysiam. He writ for their liberty in their Rites and Priuiledges (Iezid his Predecessor had razed their Croffes and Temples) and commended them to Abdalla, whom he sent Gouvernour. But he when he came into Egypt exceeded his Predecessors, doubled the tribute, and caused their persons and beasts to bee numbred, and branded the Christians with the figure of a Lion, cutting off euery mans hand which was found without it. Hysiam therefore depofed him, and sent him into Africa, where he did likewise; whereupon the people rebelled and slue his Sonne, whose heart and inwards they threw at the fathers head.

Waldig was the thirteenth Chalfi, sixth of the house of Omrnia, Sonne of Abdulmelic, Sonne of Merman. Hee was furnamed Abulabbar, Hee was created Chalfi, on the day of his Fathers death. In his time were achieved great victories. His brother Adnissima invaded the Romans, and tooke many captiues. Catibaz Sonne of Muslimas, oppugned the Land of Baikend and Mauranahar, belieged Bochara, wonne Sogda, Fargan and Bagrat. And when the Turkes were assembled, the Muslims assaulted and tooke their chiefe City, and got great wealth. Catibaz, Sonne of Muslima made peace with the King of Chouarazma, and hee built therein a Cathedrall Temple, and set a Pulpit therein, thence preaching on the Friday, and prayed with the Muslims: he burned also his Idols; they were fastned with nailes of Gold weighing fifty thousand drammes. Their tribute imposed was two thousand pieces of Gold yearly. After this hee went to Samarcand and tooke it. Mubammed Sonne of Cassim conquered India, and the Land of Sind (or Indus) and Rue the King Dabar. The same yeere, Waldig commanded the Temple of Damascus to bee builded, and the Church of the Christians consecrated to Saint Iohn, to be pulled downe. He offered for the same forty thousand pieces of Gold which they refused, and therefore hee destroyed it, and gaue them nothing. Twelve thousand Masons were employed in that building: but Waldig died before it was finished. Four hundred Chifti, each containing fourteen thousand pieces of gold were bestowed thereon. In it were fixe hundred golden chaines of Lampes, the brightnesse wherof hindered men from praying: which after were coloured with smoke, and remayned to the time of Omar, Sonne of Abdalla, who put them in the Treasury, and hanged iron chaines in their stead.

Corrah Sonne of Sierid, was made Gouvernour of Egypt in the ninetieth yeere, a man manifestly impious, which entered the Cathedrall Temple of Mithra, with Russians and Gamesters, and with them sate in the Chancell in time of Prayers.

Anno 93. Taric conquered Spaine and Toledo: and brought to Waldig the Table of Salomon, Sonne of Dauid, made of Gold and Silver, hauing three borders (or rowes) of Pearles.

Anno 94. a great Earthquake lasted forty dayes at Antiochia, and ruined the Citie. The same yeere dyed Zainulabidin, Sonne of Husein, Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abutaleb, which was Religious and Deuout, and performed a taske of a thousand kneeling euery day, for which cause he was called ibe Prayer. He left children Zeid and Mubammed Abngiasar of happy memory.

Anno 95. dyed Hagigi, which is said to haue slaine 120000 men, besides those which hee slue in warres: and fifty thousand dyed in his Prisons, besides thirty thousand women. Eightie thousand hee slue when hee was full. But his Dominion passed as if it had not bene, and happy is he which death good. The same yeere Waldig cast out of Damascus, Ali, Sonne of Abdalla, Sonne of Abbas and commanded him to reside at Homaim, where hee got about twenty Sonnes. Anno 97. dyed Corrah, Sonne of Sierie, Gouvernour of Egypt, which builded at Misra the olde Temple: Waldig also dyed hauing reigned nine yeeres and eight moneths. He married and put away many wiues; hee is said to haue had sixty three, and spent much on women and buildings. Hee built the Temple of ibe Prophet, and the Mansions adioyning; and Omar the Gouvernour of Medina was set ouer it. Hee first built a Hospitall for sicke and strangers. His Seale, O Waldig thou shalt dye and giue an account. A.M. 6206. and twenty nine dayes past.

Suleiman his brother was made Chalfi the same day. Catibaz Gouvernour of *Choras*an inuited the Chorasans to depose him, which refused and slue him. Suleiman placed Iezid, Sonne of Mableh, which obtained many victories, tooke Taberistan and Georgia, slaying and spoyling innumerable Infidels, and imposing tribute on the rest. Suleiman sent his brother Muslima, against the Romans which lay before Constantinople, a Seed time and Haruest. Asama writ that the measure of Nilus at Hulwan was false, whereupon hee commanded that measure to be builded in the lland betwixt the Riuer of Fustata and Gijza, Anno 97. which which still remaineth. Anno 98. Muslima conquered the City Sacaliba, and made himselfe Governour of it. Suleiman builded Ramla, and made Iob his Sonne partner of the league, and he dying, Omar Sonne of Abdulaziz, Suleiman died, Anno 99. and Omar prayed for him. He was tall, leane, slender, halting, many-wiued, and a Glutton, euery day eating about a hundred pounds. Hee was poisoned by procurement of Iezid, and finding himselfe like to die, he told Muhammed Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abdalla, Son of Abbu, that the Empire would come to Abdalla, that is, Saffab his Sonne, and gaue him the Writings of vocation, and taught him what course to take.

Great glutton.

Omar Sonne of Abdulaziz, Sonne of Merwan obtained the Chalifate the same day. Hee tooke away the malediction of Ali of happy memory. For the Kings of the house of Ommia from Muau hitherto, were wont to curie him in their Pulpits, in the end of all their Prayers. Muau had foretold it should be so, swearing By God it shall not be omitted till a little one prone hoary; and when it shall be abolished, neglect of the Law shall be admitted. Omar abolished that Curie, reading the Verse which becometh, God commands Iustice and Beneficence, and men went out of the Temple saying, the Law is neglected. He was Chalif two yeeres five moneths and foure dayes. Hee was Iust, Daunt, Religious, preferring his Religion before worldly things. He had a Roome locked, wherein they hoped to finde money, but found nothing but a garment which hee vied to put on, and a line to beare him vp in his Prayers. Sate was made in his time for the Temple in Damascus by the Christians, but because their Cite was partly taken by the Sword, partly by composition, the Church of Saint Iohn was left to the Muslims, the rest to the Christians, whereof Omar gaue them a Charter, together with all the Monasteries and the Temples without the City in Gouta, on the Hill, and the rest, to enioy and vie them without molestation of the Muslims.

Iezid Sonne of Abdulmelic, was created Chalife on the day of Omar death. Iezid Sonne of Mableh rebelled, and went to Cusa with many followers, but was slaine in battell by the aduerse Army, and his head sent to the Chalif. Muau his Sonne succeeded in quarrell, went to Balora, and by Sea to Cundabil, into Sindia. But Cundabil forbade him to land, and Muslima sent an Armada by Sea vnder Halal, which overthrew them. Omar Sonne of Habib sent and invaded the Turkes, tooke Mulabar, and pursued their King from Towne to Towne to Ardebil, in the Countrey of Alerbigian, where was fought a great battell, and Gierrab the Commander with many Muslims were slaine. Iezid died, Anno 105. having reigned foure yeeres and one moneth. Hee spent much on Wines, Playes and Spectacles. Hee had two women Habab and Salem, whom hee much affected. Habab died, and hee kept her till she stunk, and when she was buried tooke her vp againe, and not long after died.

Hifam Sonne of Abdulmelic, was made Chalife the same day, the five and twentieth of Siaban, Anno 113. Muslima tooke Townes of the Turkes, many captiues and rich spoyles. Muau and his brother Suleiman, sonnes of Hifam went one on the right hand, the other on the left, and Constantine the Roman Emperour met them with an Army, which was put to flight by the Muslims, and Constantine taken, Anno 117. Ali, the Grandfather of the Abassian Chalifs dyed, leaving two and twenty children.

Hifam 17.

Anno 121. Zeid Sonne of Hufaim, Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abntalib, sought to make himselfe Emperour, and the Citizens of Cusa sware to him. But Omar Sonne of Ioseph resisted, slue, crucified and burned him. Muslima invaded the Romans, and tooke Catannan. Merwan tooke and wasted Serirdehes, and forced the Prince to Tribute. Anno 122. dyed Muslima Sonne of Abdulmelic, a wife and valiant Prince beyond any of the children of Ommia. Anno 125. Hifam dyed, having reigned nineteene yeeres, seuen monethes and eleuen dayes. He well ruled and obserued the things which passed his hands, but was couetous, enuious, and spoyled his Subjects, to needlesse expences. He had Curtaines, Vests and Wardrobes which none had before him: his Vests are said to be six hundred Camels lode: hee left a thousand paire of Breeches, an' ten thousand Shirts. He had seuen hundred Vests. But when hee died, Walid Sonne of Iezid had not to wrap him in, for all his Wardrobes were sealed vp, and none permitted to enter; so that a seruant of his was faine to shroud him; an example worthy wise mens obseruation. Anno 120. Abnacbaill in the yeere of Dioctlesian 460. was made Patriarch of Alexandria, and continued three and twentie yeeres. In his time Merwan the Chalif set Abdulmelic, Sonne of Moses a Jew turned to Islamisme ouer Egypt, who demanded money of the Patriarch, and after imprisonment, permitted him to begge with his Bishops thorow the Prouinces: They returned into Egypt, the one and twentieth of the moneth Tuba, on which night was so great an Earthquake that many Cities buried their Inhabitants in the ruins, and many ships were drowned in the Sea. It went through all the East, and in one night ruined six hundred Cities, and killed innumerable men and beasts. When the King of Nubia named Citracus vnderstood what had happened to the Patriarch, hee went toward Egypt with

Thus saith Said, Sonne of Butric in his historie, and also, that the Orthodoxe had bene without a Patriarch ninetie seuen yeeres, from the time of Omar the Conquerour, till this Cosma, which was an vnlearned man, not able to write or reade, a Needle-man. Walid 18.

Walid Sonne of Iezid, Sonne of Abdulmelic was created Chalife the same day his Vncle Hysiam dyed, and was slaine Anno 126. for his manifest infidelitie and impietie: his two Sonnes were imprisoned, and after slaine. He reigned one yeere two moneths and two and twenty dayes. He was an excellent Poet, but applying all his thoughts to wantonneffe. He made him an iron Tombe, which in his Pilgrimage hee determined to set vp in Cash. Hee tocke with him to Mecca hounds in cages, and wine. Hee deflowred a woman of his in his drunkenneffe, and promised that shee should pray in the presence of men, which shee did with her face couered. He filled a pond with wine and water, and sent for Maahad the Singer, to sing whiles hee bathed and dranke therein. After Walids death the Regions were embroyled, the Chawasians multiplied, and the Kingdome of the children of Ommia weakened by reason thereof.

Iezid 19.

Iezid Sonne of Walid, Sonne of Abdulmelic, Sonne of Merwan, was the twelfth Chalife of that house. Emessa rebelled vpon the death of Walid, and put to flight Iezids Army. Suleiman Sonne of Hysiam spoyled Naama, and went to Damascus the people of Palestina shue their Gouvernour. Merwan Sonne of Muhammed rebelled, pretending the reuenge of Walid, and Iezid gaue him the gouernment of Mesopotamia, Armenia, Mautil and Aderbigiana, on condition to sweare to him, which hee did at Harran. Iezid dyed that yeere of the Plague, hauing reigned fwe moneths. His brother Ibrahim prayed for him. He diminished the Souldiers stipends, was prone to the Sect Cadritica: was after digged out of his graue, and crucified by Merwan.

Ibrahim 20.

Ibrahim Sonne of Walid his brother, was the same day made Chalife, Anno 126. but Anno 127. Merwan fought to get the Empire, pretending the reuenge of Walids death, and ouerthrew Suleiman, which came against him with a hundred and twenty thousand, and caused men to sweare to Walids children, then remayning in Prison, whereupon Merwan caused them at his returne to Damascus to be killed, their names were Hakem and Ostuman. Vpon pretence that Hakem had said that Merwan should succeede if he and his brother were slaine, Merwan was made Chalif, and Ibrahim after sixty nine dayes Raigne deposed, which liued till, Anno 132. and then was slaine. He was called Himar-vilgidzira, the Affe of Mesopotamia, because he could net flee in the time of battell. Anno 127. the Emiffens rebelled but were ouer-throwne, and their wals rased, and 600. of their citizens crucified. Damascus deposed his Gouvernour also, and those of Basra created Suleiman Chalife, but Merwan ouerthrew him in battell, and slue 30000. of his men. At Cusa, Abdalla fought the Chalifate, but was chased thence to the Mountaines. Merwan was slaine, as shall after appeare. He was a Glutton, and when a sheepe came to his hands, he could not forbear, but would thrust his hand and sleeue into the sheeps belly, and take out the Kidneyes to cate them, & then to change his garment: of such garments greased with the fat of the Kidneyes, he is said to haue left about 10000. Hee was politike, valiant, magnanimous and prudent. But fortune being crosse, great spirit and wisdom preuaile not: as it is said, Fortunes approaching comes fastened with ten fetters, but going backe shee goeth by no chains can be holden.

Lib. 2.

THE first Prince of the children of Abbas was Muhammed Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abdalla, Sonne of Abbas in the 100. yeere hee dyed A. 125. and left twelve Sonnes. The calling happened to him in Chorasau, and succeeded to his Sonne Ibrahim. He sent Abumusslim surnamed Abdurrahman, into Corasau, and writ to those which followed his Sect to obey him. He deliuered the Letters to Suleiman, and presently published the vocation of the Hafsemides, and tyed a Banner on a staffe or Speare nine cubits long, sent from Ibrahim, which they call Tallum. And hee and all of that Sect put on blacke garments on the day of the greater Feast. And Abumusslim prayed the Prayer of the Feast before Prayer (time) without conuocation or saying vp, contrary to the course of the children of Ommia. Thus Abumusslim encreased, and Nasr Gouvernour of Chorasau vnder Merwan decreased. Like seeing these beginnings, writ to Walid, Sonne of Iezid,

I see amongst embers sparkes of coles, we to these if they burne.

Sleepes or wakes Ommias? Speake li No, my maxed verse doth murre.*

But finding no helpe Nasr fled, and Abumuslim spoyled his Army: and set Cabtabas ouer the Army, who fought many battels with Nasr, and slue and tooke thirty thousand of his men. Nasr died, Anno 131. Merman tooke Ibrahim and slue him, who had before commanded his brother Saffab Abulabbas to goe to Cufa, and writen to his followers that hee should be Chalifa after him.

Anno 132. Cabtabas ouerthrew Iezid, Gouernour of Irac vnder Merman, and passing ouer Euphrates very early, the Riuer being encreased he was drowned, and Humid his Sonne commanded the Armie. The same yeere at Cufa, Mubammed Sonne of Ali the Cyprian called the Hailemites to the Empire. The men of Cufa (ware to Abumuslim Son of Halab, which was also called Mubammed the Counsellour of Religion. The same yeere Saffab and Abugiasar Almanfor came to Cufa, and had lodgings assigned them by Abumuslim the Counsellour which concealed the same forty dayes, minding to transference the Empire to the house of Abmalib.

Abdalla Saffab Abulabbas Sonne of Mubammed, Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abdalla, Sonne of Abbas, Sonne of Abdulmutalib, Sonne of Hafsem, was the three and twentieth Chalifa, and first of the children of Abbas. One saluted him Chalifa, and the people (ware to him: which Abumuslim seeing saluted him also, which Humid laid was done against his will. Being inaugurated, he ascended the Pulpit in blacke garments, and made a speech to the people. He sent his Vncle Abdalla against Merman, which put him to flight, innumerable numbers of his Souldiers being slain and drowned. Abdalla pursued him from place to place, and pitched his Tents in Iordan. He assembled many of the children of Ommia, pretending to take their Oath of Fealty, and when about eighty of them were together, he let a Souldier by each of them with a club in his hand, and at a token giuen they were all killed. Then did he cause them to be drawne and laid in order, and spreading a Carpet ouer them, fate thereon with his followers, and called for victuals and did eate, hearing their groines till they were quite dead. Abdalla said, For the day of Hulein and for nothing else. Damascus was forced, Walid the Gouernour killed, and the Cite put to the spoyle three dayes. Merman fled into Egypt, and was there taken and killed by Salib, which sent to Saffab his head, who therupon fell downe in adoration, and gaue ten thousand pieces of Gold to the poore, saying, Prayse to God which hath deliuered to vs the Asse of Mesopotamia. This was done after one hundred and thirty one yeeres, and threecore and threene dayes of the Hegira; 624.1. of the yeere of the Sunne, and sixty three dayes.

O Cruelty!

Abumuslim the Authour of the vocation with others, laid wait for Abumuslim, Son of Halat the Counsellour, and slue him by command of Saffab, because hee sought to rayle the the Abulatabites, Saffab promised securitie also to Iezid, Sonne of Omar, but after sent one to slay him, for seeking to preferre to the Empire Abdalla Sonne of Hafsem, Sonne of Hussein, Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abmalib. Saffab now established, set Abugiasar Almanfor ouer Arderbigiana, Armenia and Mesopotamia, Isab his brother ouer Manzil, his Vncle David ouer Higiaz, and Aliaman; his Vncle Isa ouer Cufa, Sefian ouer Basra, Mubammed ouer Persia, Manfor ouer India and Sinde, Abumuslim ouer Chorasan, Abdalla his Vncle ouer Syria, and his Vncle Salib ouer Egypt, who ruled it by his Lieutenant Abaun. Abdalla returning from Ramla to Damascus digged vp the children of Ommia, and burned them: and to the corpse of Hafsem at Rulaf, he gaue a hundred and twenty blowes till his flesh was disperied, which then was gathered together and burned. A. 136. Saffab died after he had reigned foure yeeres and nine moneths His brothers Sonne Isa prayed for him. Hee gaue to Abdalla Sonne of Hafsem, Sonne of Hussein two Millions of Staters, the first of the Chalifas that had giuen so great a summe. He was the first also which tooke a Counsellour, for the children of Ommia had 50 none but Scribes. When Merman fled into Egypt, in the yeere of Dioctlesian 467. the Christians suffered much aduersitie. He burned Misra with the Corne and prouisions therein, and went ouer with his into a Nunnery, where eying a beautifull Damsell, hee tooke her to his Tent to deflowre her, Shee to saue her Virginitie, told him of a precious Oyntment which she had, which would make the appointed part Sword-free. But how, sayd he, shall I know that? he offered the trial on her selfe, and so he cut off her head, rather embracing death then pollution.

The Egyptians reckon from this yeere because of the multitude of Martyrs then slain; & call it the yeere of the Martyrs. Abugiasar 53.

Abugiasar Almanfor Sonne of Mubammed, brother of Saffab succeeded, and was made Chalifa in the Pilgrimage to Mecca, ouer which his brother had set him; in a place called Sisfa, that is, sanctu, and Our Empire, saith he, by Gods grace shall be famous. He tooke the oath and finished his Pilgrimage, Anno 137. Abdalla sought the Empire in Syria, and Almanfor sent against him Abumuslim the author of the vocation, and after many battels Abumuslim preuailed, and Abdalla fled into Irac, he to Basra, his brother to Cufa. and almes, but much ruled by women, one of whom Lamee would sit in iudgement. None had iudged the place so long. In his time ceased the Pilgrimage, when the blacke stone was carried away. He is said to haue giuen away about seuentie Millions of Gold. He gaue Munhammed Abulmansur Kabir Billa, was the fortieth Chalifa, and the nineteenth of the Abbasides, created after his brothers death at Bagdad. Hee tortured Muladmir's mother hauing reigned one yeere fise moneths and seven dayes, and Ahmed Sonne of Muladmir

Ahmed Abulbasen Aradi Billa was the twentieth of the Abbasides. Anno 322. dyed

50 hundred Generations. He had three Sonnes Ali Abulbasen, Hafse Abual, and Ahmed Abulbasen, which serued the Souldiers. We haue before shewed how Ali Abulbasen Amaduddaula serued Mardawig, tooke Isfahan and Hamadan. He tooke Cazeron and increased in power. After that Letters came from Cabir, wherein he offered to Mardawig, Raija, Nareab, Zangion and Abhar on condition to lease Isfahan, from which Wafmakin brother of Mardawig had driuen Amadudaula, which he accepted: but hearing of Cabir's deposition, detayned it still. Anno 323. Mardawig was slaine by his Seruants in the Bath, and so God deliuered the Muslims from Mardawig, a man vnjust, bold and addicted (they say) to Paganisme. Abutaber the same yeere spoyled the Pilgrimes. The same yeere *Hafse perours, and committed to him the administration of the Kingdome, and commanded him to preach in his Steed in the Pulpit, and gave him a banner. From that time the dignity of a Counsellour grew out of vie at Bagdad, and continued but a name, the power remaining with the Emperour (or Commander.) An. 325. There were many Princes; for whosoever could possesse himselfe of any City, stiled himselfe King. Basra, Ahwaz and Wasit were in the hands of Abu- Abdalla the Baridite, and his brethren. Persia in the hand of Amaduddaula, Sonne of Boia the Dailamite, and of Wasmakin brother of Mardavain, Mausil, Diarreb and Diarbeer in the hands of the children of Hamadan. Egypt and Syria in the hand of Muhammed, Sonne of Taug. Only Bagdad remayned with the Chalifa, and the Sonnes of Rajje, the tributes were abolished, the Kingdome decayed and robberies increased. The money was caried into the Treasuries of the Emperours, which disposed thereof at their pleasure Arradi went to warre vpon Abuabdalla the Baridite, who agreed with him for 36000. pieces of Gold, to pay thirty thousand every moneth, Basra was taken by the Sonne of Rajje, and Abutaber the Caramite made peace with him on condition to pay him out of Bagdad 120000. pieces of Gold. Abubecr tooke also Ahwaz, whereupon the Baridite sought helpe of Amaduddaula, who sent his brother Abmed Mumuddaula with him to take Ahwaz, which he did, An. 326. Abmed Sonne of Musla the Counsellour had his hand cut off, and his tongue cut out for counselling Arradi to attack Abubecr, and to employ Iacham the Turke, when his right hand was to be cut off, This band (said he) whereby I haue ministred to three Chalifas, and wherewith I haue written out the Alcoran, is cut off like the band off a Thiefe. This Sonne of Musla was Authour of this excellent writing, and first brought the torreigne Writing of Cufa to the vie of the Arabs. The Sonne of Bawab added somewhat and brought it to perfection, Iacham the Turke came to Bagdad and took it, chasing away the Sonne of Rajje which had enjoyed the Imperiall Dignity one yeere ten moneths and sixteene dayes. Iacham was vested by Arradi, and stiled Emperour of Emperours. Anno 327. Iacham with the Chalifa went against Nasiruddaula and besieged Mausil, but was forced to accept five hundred thousand pieces of Gold to haile backe to Bagdad, where Abubecr had renewed some broyles, with whom he compounded and gaue him the way of Euphrates, the Prouince of Kinnasrin and Awafim. That yeere they againe went on Pilgrimage by the way of Euphrates, which from the yeere 219. the Caramites had hindred, Abutaber now for five and twenty thousand pieces of Gold, promising not to molest them, An. 328. Abubecr tooke Emissa: ouerthrew in battell Abumammed Sonne of Taug, Prince of Egypt and Syria, but was againe deprived of his victory by his Souldiers ouerhauling to the spoyle: at last, hee got all Syria except Ramla, which remayned with the Sonne of Taug on condition to pay Abubecr 140000. pieces of Gold yeerely. An. 329. dyed Arradi of the Dropsie and immoderate lust. He was the last of the Chalifas which preached on Fridayes, which did penance with the Penitents, disposed of monies, armies, gifts, had seruants and Kitchens. They which succeeded after him vntill Mulassi, had nothing in Irac and other Prouinces but the title. He reigned six yeeres, ten moneths and ten dayes.

Ibrahim Abu- Isbac Molessi Billa Sonne of Muhtader was created Chalifa the day of his brothers death, but held only the bare title. Iacham in hunting was killed, and Molessi committed the administration of the Kingdome to Cutelm, and eighty dayes after to Abubecr Son of Rajje. An. 330. the Biradites fought to possesse Bagdad. Molessi fled to Mausil with Abubecr. Saisuddaula ministred vnto them, as did also Hasan Abumammed Nasiruddaula, which title Molessi then gaue him. Hee sent his brother Ali Abubecr against the Baridites, who expelled them from Bagdad and took the Citie. Nasiruddaula lue Abubecr and succeeded in the government. Abdalla Abulcasim Anstaci Billa Sonne of Mulessi was the 2. Abasian Chalifa, and in all the 4th. He vested Buzun. The same yeere 333. Saisuddaula took Aleppo and Damascus. Casur was sent out of Egypt against him, and when their Armies were pitched ouer against each other, Saisuddaula men on a Friday said, It is not lawfull to fight to day, and disperied themselves; Casur took the occasion and wanne the field with all the baggage.

An. 430. = began the Princes Salghucides. Muhammed Abutalib Togrulbec was the first in inaugurated of them. His brethren were David, Ghacarbec, Fir and Arslan; the Sons of Michael, Sonne of Salghuc, Sonne of Dacac a Turke, who first of that Race embraced Islamisme, and was much employed by the Turkish King in his warres. His Sonne Salghuc after his Fathers death was made chiefe Commander of the Turkish Armies: but the King suspecting him sought to slay him, whereupon he fled to Haren King of Ghabia, and of him obtained an Army to invade those Infidels, but was slaine in battell being a hundred and seven yeeres old. His Sonne Michael with his children abode in Mauranahar. Many Turkes acknowledged none other Commander. When Mahmud Sonne of Selwaktin King of India passed over the River Ghaizon to helpe Warareban King of Mauranahar, hee cast Michael into bonds, for refusing to goe with him, promising to set him in Chorasan to keepe it against the enemies: but tooke with him *Michael*s Souldiers, which stayed in his Countrey. Masud succeeding his Father Mahmud expelled them by an Army: the remaynder of these Turkes after *Michael*s death followed Togrulbec, who overthrew the Army of Masud, and pursued them to Tuw, which Towne hee tooke, the first Towne which came into their hands, wherein they fortified themselves. Thence they went to Nasibur and tooke it. King Masud fled into India, and forsaking Chorasan stayed there a long time. The Salghucides subdued Chorasan meane while, and when Masud returned they overthrew him: whereupon Cajm Bismilla exhorted them to keepe the Region of the Muslims. They overthrew Masud a second time, and their Empire was established. An. 431. Masud overthrew Togrulbec, who returned, An. 432 and chasing away Masud, enioyed all Chorasan, killing innumerable numbers of men.

An. 433. Muazzuddaula the Mardasite possessed Haleb, where Nasr Sonne of Salib, Sonne of Madaid had ruled eight yeeres, who was slaine by Busekin, the Darwaan in battell, who after came to Haleb and tooke it. This Darwaan was a captive Turke, which comming with Merchants into Syria, was bought by Darir the Dailamite, and given to the King of Egypt, where by degrees he was promoted to be Commander of the Army. Masud King of Chorasan, India and Mauranahar was slaine, and Muhammed his brother succeeded, but was slaine by Mahmud his brothers Sonne.

An. 447. the Salghucides began to rule at Bagdad by this meanes. A certaine Turke, Ruslan Abulharib Aniaffir called the Basafaraan grew great in Irac, and they prayed in Pulpits in his name, neither remayned any thing but title to the Boijte. Whereupon Cajm writ to Togrulbec for aide, exhorting him to come thither, which he did. The Basafaraan writ to Muftanfir Billa Lord of Egypt, and prayed in his name at Rahab; he helped him with money. Togrulbec tooke the Boijte Melacrabim and his Prayer = ceased, with that Empire which had continued one hundred and twenty seven yeeres. He called some of his followers in presence of the Legate, and bade one young man to kill himselfe, which he did: another he commanded to throw himselfe from a high Tower, whereby also hee was broken in pieces. Then said hee to the Legate, I haue 70000. Subjects thus obseruant, and let this be my answer. This answer caused the King to leaue him, and filled him with care. A Note of the Authours Parentage.

IN the time of Biamrilla on: Tijb a Syrian Merchant, a Christian came into Egypt and abode at Alcabir. His Sonne Carwijn was a Notarie, and followed the Court, got a Sonne which he called Abultijb, which also proved a Notary of note at Elcamir, and served the Arabike Senate. He had five Sonnes, of which foure were made Bishops, but Abulmecerim the youngest delighted in Husbandry and breeding of cattell, and had above a thousand Hives of Bees. Hee married the Sister of Simcon a Notary which served Ioseph Saladine, Anno 569. and after betooke him to a Monasterie in the mids wherof he inclosed himselfe in a place which he had builded, and therein lived above thirty yeeres. Macatim had three Sonnes, the second of which Abulasser Elamid was the Father of the Chronicle Writer. Macarem succeeded Simcon when he became an Heremite, in his Notaries place in the Court under King Abubectr Elaadil Seiffuddin Sonne of Iob, and dyed, Anno 636. A continuation of the former Storie out of Mirkond the Persian, and Abraham Zacuth a Jew to the end of the Chalifa's.

IN Mustafirs time Bagdad was ruined by the overflowing of Tigris, whereupon it was removed and new builded on the East side of the River, where it stands more commodiously then before. It is remarkable, of five and twenty *Chalifa*s since the foundation that none dyed therein. The Astrologers had threatned, saith Zacuth, a flood next to that of Noah; then said one of them, there were seven Planets in conjunction with Pisces, now but sixe; whereupon they feared the low situation of Bagdad, and stoped the water-passage. All the Ismaelites which went on Pilgrimage on devotion to their Sanctuaries were most of them drowned. The Chalifa honoured that Astrologer with Royal Vests, Toledo, Sicilia and some Cities of Africa were recovered from the Saracens by the Christians, Mustafis King of Egypt dyed. Elamir Babaschn five yeeres old succeeded, Abulazala the Visir governing.

The Tartars made prey of Turon and Agem. Natzar dyed, Anno 622. and Taher his Sonne enioyed the place nine moneths. In this time flourished in Egypt Rabbeu Mose, Sonne of Maimon of Corduba.
- Muistetz* succeeded, a iust Prince and Almeiguer, which built many Schooles. The Tartars ouerranne Asia, Russia, Polonia and vexed Germany; another Army invaded Syria. Baba professed himselfe a Prophet sent of God, and gathering rude multitudes to him, filled Asia with slaughter and empienesse, till hee was slaine by Gyabbedus King of Gunia. A briske continuation of the Saracens in Spaine, out of Rodericus Toletanus and others to the failing of the Ommian Race and Empire.

- The Saracens did not so extirpate Christianitie in their Conquests, but that such as would bee subiect to their Tributes and Exactions might enioy their consciences: whereupon not only Asia remained in great part Christian till the Tartarian Deluge, and some also till this day in Nestorian, Armenian, Iacobite, and other Sects, but euen in Africa, where blacke darknesse most preuailed on mens bodies and soules, some Christians continued, and doe to this day thorow so many Saracenical Generations. In Marocco in the times of Ferdinand the holy, and of Iohn the first, diuers Christian Families were found, and in Tunis also when Charles the fift in the former age conquered it, about eight hundred yeeres after the first conquest by Muhammedans. Their course (as is in Turkie now) is by degrees, with discountenance, disgrace and oppression of their persons, and exaltation of their owne, which rather vnrippeth then renteth asunder, and vattieth then with Sword of extremest Persecution choppeth in sunder that knot of Christian Religion: herein the Westerne Antichrist being the more dangerous enemy to Christian veritie, as more in shew pretending, but more eagerly and irreconcilably with open warres, tumultuous Massacres, and direct-indirect workings and vnderminings seeking to extirpate the contrary profession. Brethren false out are the most implacable enemies. In Spaine also so few Arabians could not people so large a Countrey, but a deluge of African Grashoppers leaped ouer that Sea with them, and although 700000. are said to haue bene slaine in that first Spanish Inuasion, yet the rest enioyed their Churches and Deuotions still, with Tributes. In Toledo they had seuen Christian Churches left them, with Iudges of their owne Nation and Religion. These Christians were called Musarabes of Musfa the first Conquerour, and Arab-African Commander which sent Taric thither, whose Lyturgie is extant, yea still obserued for antiquities like in the great Church of Toledo. Musfa or Mura is reckoned the first Arabian Gouverneur in Spaine, who being reuoked by Wald Abdalaziz Sonne of Musfa was by his Father left to gouerne Spaine, who married the wife of Rodericus the Spanish King, and by her persuasione crowned himselfe King, whereupon the Arabs killed him at his Prayers, and Ayub succeeded in the Goernment, who remoued the Courts from Siuill to Corduba. But the Chalipha elected him, and placed Alisib, who seuerely exacted on the first conquerours of Spaine (Musfa hauing by *Taric*s complaints incurred disgrace, and dying of griefe) that what payles those Ispunges had sucked, he squeezed out of them, & made them to vomit again their sweet morsels.
- Zama* succeeded three yeeres in the Spanish Goernment, who made a Booke of the Reuenues of Spaine, and of Gallia Narbonensis also. For hee passed into France, placed a Ommian Family possessed himselfe of Spaine, after which it was separated from the Asian Chalifate, and became a Kingdome, and these Ommians called themselves Emir el musulmans.

This was An. H. 142. In the yeere 149. he began the Mezquit at Corduba, the chiefe of all others in his Dominion. An. 171. hee dyed and was buried at Corduba. He left eleuen Sons and nine Daughters, Isef the eldest succeeded, and warred on his brother Zulema, whom he put to flight. He tooke Toledo. Zulema sold all his challenge in Spaine, and passed the Sea to Barbary, as did Abdalla also another brother. Isef, An. 177. sent Abdelmelic with a great Army into France, which spoyled and subdued Narbone with so great a part of the Countrey, that Isef perfected with the fifths of those spoyle the Temple of Corduba which his Father had begun. The Christians also of Narbone carried earth thither from their owne Countrey. He built the bridge at Corduba. He was munificent and iust. He pro-

Renegadoes, and two thousand Eunuchs; he personally iudged poore mens causes, and was liberal in almes. He ouercame in battell Zulema and Abdalla his Vncles, slue one and subjected the other. He dyed, An. 206. leauing nineteene Sons and one and twenty Daughters. Abderramen his Sonne succeeded. He recovered the Townes which in late Schismes the Christians had gotten. An. 229. fifty ships and fifty four Gallies arrived at Lisbon.
The next yeere a greater number of ships came and besieged Siuill, and often fought with the Arabs, and spoyled their Dominions with fire and sword, carrying away euery thing of value, and killing very many. Abderramen had a great battell with them, but neither part preuayled. An. 236. Corduba was paued, and water brought thither in pipes of lead. Abderramen dyed, An. 238. leauing five and forty Sonnes and two and forty Daughters, Mahomet his Sonne succeeded, who much preuayled against the Christians, slue many, and An. 245. tooke Toledo by composition. Sixty Norman ships that yeere burned Gelzirat, Alhadia and the Mezquits, and thence proceeded into Africa, and there committed many spoyle, after which they returned and wintred in Spaine, and in the Spring wen home. An. 273. Mahomet dyed, and left thirty four Sonnes and twenty Daughters, of which Almundir succeeded, and dying two yeeres after, Abdalla his brother reigned five and twenty yeeres. After his death Abderramen Sonne of Abdallah succeeded, An. 300. and reigned fifty yeeres. He called himselfe Almunacer Ladivella, Sonne Albacam succeeded, An. 350. whom they surnamed Almuzacabilie, that is, Defending himselfe with God, An. 366. Ifen his Sonne succeeded. He entruled himselfe Almubayville, Labouring with God. He being vnder cleuen yeeres of age, Mabomet Ibne Abenhamir was made Protector or Regent, in their stile Albagib, or Viceroy which ruled all, and of his fortunate victories was called Almazor, two and fiftie times he led armies against the Christians. His Sonne Abdelmalic succeeded in his Office, An. 393. and held it fix yeeres and nine moneths. The King was little more then titular. After him Abderramen his brother, who forced Ifen to nominate him his Successor, and was soone after slaine. Then followed diuisions in the State. Ifen being shut vp and reported dead, by Mabomet Almahadi which domineered. The Earle Sancius helped the aduerser faction of Zuleman, and flue of Almahadi part 36000. Neither could Ifen bee accepted whom Almahadi now brought forth, but Zuleman entred Corduba and possessed the Throne, which Almahadi in a great battell recovered, Anno 404. but lost it soone after with his life, and Ifen was restored. Alhameri was made Albagiber Viceroy. The Countrey was spoyled and neere Corduba, almost dispeopled by Barbarians, Zuleman also and Almahadi Sonne in diuers parts doing much harme, against whom Ifen hired Earle Sarcim, restoring fix Castles to him which Almazor had taken. Zuleman wan Corduba, and Ifen fled into Africa. Now was all in combustion, Ali, Alcazim, Hyahye, Casim, Mahomet, Abderramen, Mabomet, Hyahya, Iru, Ifen, successiuey starting in and out of the Throne; so that the Kingdome of Corduba failed, and every man made himselfe Master of his charge, and vsurped what he could. The Ommian Race sayling, the Almorauides of Africa, An. 484. possessed the Kingdome, Ioseph Sonne of Tissiebin, being called to helpe one against the other, and taking all into his owne dominion. He made Morocco his Seat Royall. Alh his Sonne succeeded, and Tessiebin his Sonne was deposed, An. 539. The Almoades extinguisht the Almorauides. After many changes and channes the Realme of Granada was erected, which continued about two hundred and fifty yeeres vnder these Kings successiuey, Mabomet, Ali, Albamar, Mir Almasu, Aben Azar, Aben Lenin, Ismael, Mabomet, Ioseph, Laqun, Mabomet, Mab, Guadix, Ioseph, Balua, Ioseph, Aben Azar, Mab, the little Ioseph, M. Aben Ozmam, Ismael, Muley Alboracen, Mab, Boabdilm, Muley Boabdilm expelled by Ferdinand and Isabella, A. 1492.

A Relation of the Kings of Barbary after the ending of the Egyptian Chalifas, to the present Xeriffian Family, taken out of a Spanijh Booke of that argument.

- Abilbac* 1. Abilbac was the first King Merin in Fez. He had Sonnes Abucar and Iacob Bucar, the which Iacob was Lord of Ramatto, and Abilbac left his Kingdome in his life time to his Sonne Bucar.
- Bucar* 2. Bucar had for Sonne Tabia. This Bucar overcame King Abitolader, and dyed in the battell, and he said Tabia was King vnder protection of his Vncle Iacob which was Lord of Ramatto.
- Tabia* 3. Tabia dyed a child without issue, and the said Iacob Bucar his Vncle. remayned King, which afterward raised himselfe to be called Muley Xeb, which signifieth old King. This King built new Fez, which is called the whito Cite, hee overcame Budebaz King of Marweccos, and sometimes was Lord of Tremesen, Tumbé, and Sojumenza, and in the yeere of our Lord 1264. he entred Spaine, being called by the King of Granada. Hee had three Sonnes, Abucar, Aben Iacob, and Aben Iusef Abucar.
- Abucar* 5. Abucar after that his father had gained Tremezen was left for King there, he had one Son a child whose name is not knowne, and Abubamo begotten vpon a Christian woman.
- Aben Iacob* 6. Abucar reigning in Tremezen, his father Iacob Aben Iusef dyed, and his younger Son Aben Iacob reigned in his stead in Marweccos, Sojumenza and Algarue, and besieged Tremezen against his brother Abucar, and the said Aben Iacob left two Sonnes Abucalc and Aborregera, which afterward was drowned by Aborabes.
- The Child 7. Abucalc the eldest Sonne of Aben Iacob, had a Sonne called Abubumer who dyed and was neuer King himselfe. But left two Sons Botbeyd, and Aborabes, both which were Kings.
- Abubamo* 8. Abucar dying at the end of foure yeeres, left as I said before two Sonnes, the eldest for vnderstanding we call, the Old, who reigned a yeere and a halfe after the death of his father, and dyed without issue, and Abubamo which afterward was King in his stead.
- Abubamo* 8. The foresaid child being dead, his brother Abubamo reigned in his stead, who afterward was called Abubertab, and his Vncle Aben Iacob besieged him in Tremezen feuen yeeres; 60 after whose death the siege was rayled, and the said Abubamo afterward with the ayde of D. Iaynos of Aragon gained (Ceuei) in the yeere of our Lord 1310.

After that Aben Jacob was dead, his Sonne Abucalee took possession of the new Citie, but his Vncle for hatred that he bore him, caused them to reueue for King Botbeyd who was Sonne vnto Abubamer that dyed, and neuer had beene King himselfe, and the said Botbeyd pursued Abucalee and slue him, and reigned after him. Botbeyd after that his Vncle had sluted him for King dyed without issue. After that Botbeyd was dead, the Christians rayled his brother Aborabe for King. Then the Moores would haue had Ali Berregira King, younger Sonne to Aben Jacob which was the sixt King, and so after much warres betweene them, at length Aborabe ouercame him and commanded him to bee drownded; And after Aborabe had reigned two yeeres he dyed without issue.

Aborabe 11.

- 10 After Aborabe dyed, his great Vncle Aben Incef Abuqayt was made King in Fez, hee had two Sonnes, Albubali and Abubagen. This Aben Incef Abuqayt gained many Cities in Spaine, in the yeece of our Lord 1318. and 1322. Albubali wounded his father in the warres, and made himselfe to bee called King of Fez, and his father being sicke besieged him, and they came to agreement that his father should giue him Sojumenfa, and the hilt of the treasure of Fez, and his father should remayne with Marweccos, Algarue and Fez. The said Albubali had two Sonnes, Buzayn and Bahamon.

- Albubagen* was receiued for King in the life of his father, for his brother Albubali was disinherited for wounding his father. This Albubagen had three Sonnes Abinmalic, Abulaboun and Abubenan, he was King of Fez, Marweccos, Algarue, Sojumenfa, Tremezen and Tunes. Abinmalic was King of Algezira, he past into Spaine in the yeece of our Lord 1340. and was overcome by the Christians, which they call (La victoria del alido) and in the warres of Xeres hee dyed. Abulaboun his other brother rose with the Citie Mequinas, and his Father cut off his head.

Albubagen 13.

Abubenan rose with the Kingdome of Fez, and fought against his father Albubagen, & ouercame him, he made in Fez the Colledge which is called, The Colledge of Abubenan. He had three Sonnes Muley Buzayt, and Muley Zast, and Jacob.

Abubenan 14.

Abuzayt sent his brother Zast to succour Gibraltar, who was taken Prisoner by the Kings of Granada, and Abuzayt was killed by his owne subiects, leauing one Sonne called Abulbae.

Abuzayt 15.

- 30 Zast vnderstanding the death of his brother, got liberty and ayde of the King of Granada, and recovered Fez.

Zast 16.

After the death of Zast, Abulbae Sonne of Abuzayt was King, who was slaine by treason, by one of his owne subiects, who thought to vsurpe the Kingdome, but Zast Benimerine next heire vnto Abulbae, recouered it againe by force of armes within few moneths, and put to death the Vsurper.

Abulbae 17.

Zast left for heires two Sonnes, Muley Mahamet, and Muley Nacer. Muley Mahamet succeeded his father in the Kingdome, and had two Sonnes to wit, Muley Abmat, and Muley Naqana. Muley Abmat succeeded his father, and had one Daughter called Lalala, (which was forced to marry with the Xarife, and dyed without issue, for griefe of the death of her father) and three Sonnes, Muley Bucar which dyed in the warre, when King Bubafon recouered Fez, and Muley Mubamet, and Muley Alcaferi which was King vpon conditions in the absence of his father and brethren, when they were Prisoners five yeeres in the hand of the Xarife.

Zast 18.
Mahamet 19.
Abmat 20.

Muley Bubafon was King of Velos de la Gomara, and after that Fez was lost by Abmat, hee by the ayde of Salbrazai, Governour of Argiers recouered it againe, hee was slaine by treason by one of his Guard in a battell against the Xarife. He left three sonnes, Muley Naqara a Bastard, and Muley Mahamet which was his eldest Sonne legitimate, and Muley Tabia which yet liueth.

Bubafon 22.

- 50 Muley Mahamet succeeded his father, but was presently forced to flye, leauing the Xarife in possession of all his estates, and dying within few yeeres left one Sonne a child called Muley Halal, which is this present pretender.

Mahamet 21.

Muley Halal being a child was carried to the Mountaines of Taradante, being named for King, but being not able to recouer his estate, nor able to resist the power of the Xarife, he fled into Christendome, where he yet remayneth, together with his Vncle
